MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

CARDIAC CARE

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): I rise today to inform this House of a shocking report that was published today in the Canadian Medical Association Journal. Over a two-year period, this study shows that 50 patients died while waiting for an angiogram at the Hamilton General Hospital, 32 had heart attacks and 41 had congestive heart failure. In this particular institution that serves over two million people, 63% of individuals do not get an angiogram in the time slot recommended by their family physician. There are currently almost 500 people on the waiting list, the largest waiting list in Ontario.

What is even more shocking is that this government was warned. In 1999 the hospital made a submission for an extra lab. This government was warned that people were going to die on waiting lists, and they ignored this warning. This government was warned that people could not wait six months for an angiogram, as they have been. They ignored that warning and people died. I spoke to this issue in this House. They finally moved a couple of months ago, but the new lab will not be ready for another 24 months. How many more people have to die on waiting lists because of this government's neglect, incompetence and mismanagement of health care?

It is disgraceful that in Ontario in the year 2002, 50 Hamiltonians on a waiting list for two years had to die while this government did absolutely nothing and continued to ignore the demands for expanded facilities at this cardiac unit. It is a blight on this government. It is a disgrace beyond words.

How do you tell the families of those 50 people that those lives could have been saved had this government listened to the hospital, had this government listened to those of us in the House who said it is unacceptable for people to wait? It is disgraceful, and this government will have to pay a price for this. They owe an explanation to the families of those Ontarians and Hamiltonians who died on waiting lists because of sheer incompetence and neglect by this government.

CENTRAL NORTH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): I rise in the House today to congratulate a successful public-private partnership in my riding of Simcoe North.

Last night, the Ministry of Public Safety and Security, and Management and Training Corp Canada, were honoured by the Canadian Council for Public-Private Partnerships. They jointly received the prestigious gold award for service delivery for the Central North Correctional Centre project in the town of Penetanguishene.

This award comes only one year after the Central North Correctional Centre first opened its doors. It is a fitting tribute to the high level of ongoing co-operation between the ministry, MTCC and the community.

Central North Correctional Centre, better known in my community as the superjail, is Canada's first publicly owned, privately operated adult correctional facility. MTCC manages the facility. The Ministry of Public Safety and Security ensures that MTCC meets the high safety and security standards that apply to the operation of all correctional facilities in this province.

Our positive experience with the correctional centre has attracted attention from other parts of Canada. For example, I recently hosted a delegation from Alberta at the superjail. Looking to perhaps follow an excellent lead, the province of Alberta was interested in learning about what has made the project so successful.

The correctional centre has represented a win-win situation for everyone involved, including the inmates, who benefit from rehabilitation programs, and the community, which benefits from 360 more jobs and $20 million invested directly into the community.

Last night, with the presentation of the gold award for service delivery, the jail stood out as a stellar example of how our government and the private sector can work together to better the safety and security of our citizens.

GROWING STRONG COMMUNITIES

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I rise in the House today to highlight some of the commitments made by our leader, Dalton McGuinty, in the Growing Strong Communities plan introduced yesterday.

The people of Ontario want to know that they live in safe and secure neighbourhoods. The Ontario Liberals are committed to protecting Ontario families by placing an additional 1,000 net front-line police officers directly on the streets and highways of Ontario. We recognize that there is a need for increased security on our streets, and we are providing that commitment to the people of Ontario.

It's interesting to note that Ernie Eves's throne speech in May did not mention fighting crime once. The Ontario Liberals have taken and continue to take a stand to protect Ontario citizens, while this government has consistently slid away from promises to provide more support to keep our streets safe.

I want to take a moment to commend our front-line police officers who go out day after day to protect the residents of Ontario and provide many services that continue to make our community safe. Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals are committed to providing more support for our front-line officers by placing more officers on those streets. I am certain that this will be a welcome addition to municipalities that are struggling to cover the costs of police services due to the outrageous downloading that the Harris-Eves government has imposed on them for the last seven years.

While this government is preoccupied with fixing the mistakes they've made, the Ontario Liberals are providing a clear alternative to the promises to make Ontario a better place to work, live and raise a family.

LABOUR DISPUTE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): The labour dispute at the Sudbury Star is now into its eighth week. Some 75 workers—reporters, circulation and clerical staff, advertising sales people, pressroom and maintenance staff—were locked out by the employer on October 5, 2002. The lockout occurred after the union's negotiating team had already agreed to take the company's final offer to the membership for a vote.

The issues in dispute include wages—one third of the journalists are making $8 to $9 an hour; pensions—some of the unionized staff don't have one; and a guarantee of no layoffs when the lockout is over. This appears to have been the corporate message to workers when the Osprey Media Group took over the newspaper operation several years ago. From day one the employer has used scabs to produce the daily paper. They can do so thanks to the policies of this Conservative government. When employers use scabs, there is no incentive for them to get to the bargaining table to negotiate a collective agreement, and that's what's happening in Sudbury.

In December 2000, I introduced a private member's bill to prohibit employers from using scabs in strikes and lockouts. Today my colleague Peter Kormos, the NDP labour critic, will introduce another anti-scab bill. Its provisions are the same as the ones we had in place when we were the government. It's time to end scab labour in Ontario for workers at the Sudbury Star and for every other worker who is undermined every day by employers using scabs in strikes and lockouts.

ELECTRONIC MEDICAL RECORDS

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): During constituency week I attended an event at Listowel Memorial Hospital in my riding of Perth-Middlesex. The event was to mark the successful completion of the first half of a project to transfer all of the hospital's patient medical records to electronic format. While this is not unusual, there are two unique aspects to Listowel's project. The Listowel clinic of more than a dozen doctors is benefiting from putting all its patients' medical records on the same electronic format so that when a patient of a doctor at the clinic comes in to, say, emergency, the emergency room doctor will have access to their complete medical record, including allergies, past medical tests and blood work results and prescriptions. The benefit to patients will be great. Access to complete medical records will mean fewer errors and less paperwork, leaving doctors and nurses with more time to spend with patients.

The second unique thing about the Listowel project is that it is being completed on budget. That is not surprising for Listowel Memorial Hospital, which is noted for being efficient and providing high-quality services while operating within its budget.

I want to take this opportunity to publicly congratulate the board of trustees, the management and staff at the Listowel Memorial Hospital and all of the doctors at the Listowel clinic. In particular I want to recognize chief of staff Dr Barry Neable, as well as Brent Boshart and Mike LaPaine, who have undertaken and are working on this project.

ONTARIO NORTHLAND RAILWAY

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming-Cochrane): Following the government's announcement last month that CN Rail would be given the nod to enter into exclusive negotiations to purchase the government-owned Ontario Northland Railway, the member from Nipissing, soon-to-be-unseated AL McDonald, asked Northern Development and Mines Minister Jim Wilson about the government position on protecting the ONR jobs. Wilson answered in the House that CN "had the best proposal at this time to protect jobs." Well, what happened today? In the midst of these negotiations, CN lays off 1,146 workers. So much for job protection.

Just last Thursday, CN officials met with the Northeastern Ontario Mayors Action Group to tell them how good a deal this would be for jobs in northeastern Ontario. Wow, what a poker face these CN officials must have put on.

Today's announcement, coming in the midst of these negotiations, shows how insignificant a deal this is to CN. Normally, wouldn't such an announcement scare off such a deal, or is this already a done deal?

This is corporate culture at its worst. It's all about shareholder value and the bottom line and not about our people. If this purchase is so important to CN, how can we be assured that they will take our part of northeastern Ontario seriously, provide good service and protect jobs?

Is this a good deal for northeastern Ontario? I don't think so.

SCARECROW INVASION AND FAMILY FESTIVAL

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): I rise in the House today to congratulate the success of the sixth annual Scarecrow Invasion and Family Festival in Meaford. It included the efforts and hard work of a group of people in my riding of Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound who dedicated countless hours of their time to help make this event spectacular.

The event is sponsored by the Meaford Business Improvement Association and the Meaford Chamber of Commerce. These people include a list of 10 organizers: Marilyn Morris, Donna Gorrie, Kate Belec, Joan Cooper, Chris Curry, Denise Horvath, Brad Johnston, Janet Juniper, Laura Tannis, Dennis Smith, Mary Woods and Laurie Adams. In addition, there were over 125 volunteers.

The scarecrow invasion is designed to build community spirit and pride, increase shopping in the business areas and overall tourism in the county.

From mid-September until after Thanksgiving, residents and visitors were treated to the sight of thousands of wacky scarecrows throughout the municipality of Meaford. The event was so successful that Meaford is competing for the Guinness Book of World Records challenge. The community-based scarecrow invasion promoted itself by simple, localized hard work from the many volunteers and staff of this municipality. It is truly a community-based event.

The media coverage was phenomenal. It included local, national and international exposure. It allowed everyone from Korea to England to Alberta to see just how community-oriented Meaford is. The interest shown in this event by the media was outstanding, and next year will be even bigger.

I congratulate all those involved in the success of this event and wish them the best in the seventh annual Scarecrow Invasion and Family Festival.

BOB AND BONNIE DAGENAI

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): I rise today to pay tribute to two Ottawa educators who were brutally slain on the weekend as a result of a bungled break and enter while they were enjoying their first months of retirement at their nearby cottage.

Bob Dagenais started his career as a teacher and retired as a principal. He served as a principal in three high schools, including Glebe Collegiate Institute in my riding, where I knew him. He was very well loved and well respected by students and staff alike.

Bob's wife, Bonnie Dagenais, was a retired teacher from Broadview Avenue Public School, also in my riding, where she taught grade 3 for the last 10 years. She was described by her colleagues as a talented teacher with a heart of gold.

These senseless deaths have left the Ottawa education community grief-stricken. Bob and Bonnie Dagenais will be sorely missed.

I echo a comment made by Ron Lynch, the director of education for the board, in which he said, "There are hundreds of staff and students who were impacted by the grace and goodness that characterized Bob and Bonnie. Their contributions to the educational needs of this community were monumental."

Bob and Bonnie, on behalf of everyone in our community, thank you for your exceptional contributions toward the education of our children. It is estimated that together you have touched directly over 4,000 young people in Ottawa.

On behalf of all the members of the Legislature, I extend sincerest sympathies and condolences to family and friends.

FIVE COUNTIES CHILDREN'S CENTRE

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): I recently had the privilege of touring the Five Counties Children's Centre, located in my riding of Peterborough, and was informed of the impact that the province's increase in base funding and fiscal one-time dollars had on the centre—$499,000 to be exact. From reducing the backlog of outstanding assessments for children, to purchasing new assistive devices, improving building standards and moving the technology equipment into the 21st century, this money has been put to good use.

I'd also like to tell you about a young man who is 14 years old, a client of the centre and who wrote a letter about his experience. At the age of seven, this young man was severely injured in an automobile accident. As a result of the accident, he was unable to speak spontaneously like we can. The centre tried without success to find a computer system that would assist him while communicating.

I'd like to read an excerpt from his letter: "It took too long to get to the point where the computer would talk for me. I tried to call a taxi one time but they hung up on me before my computer said hello. Finally, in February 2002, they found the Light Writer, and since then I haven't been able to shut up. When I first came to the centre, I couldn't walk or even stand by myself. Five Counties helped me get a wheelchair and gave me wheelchair driving lessons. The physio department found me a one-of-a-kind special walker to help me learn to walk again. I have the only one like it in Canada. They found me canes, and now I can walk all by myself."

This is just one of the many great stories about the children in Peterborough county who receive wonderful treatment and therapy from Five Counties Children's Centre.

CONSIDERATION OF BILL 211

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that, pursuant to standing order 69(b), the House leader of the third party, the member for Niagara Centre, has notified the Clerk of his intention to file notice of a reasoned amendment to the motion for second reading of Bill 211, An Act to resolve a labour dispute between the Ontario English Catholic Teachers' Association and the Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board. The order for second reading of Bill 211 may therefore not be called today.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

JUSTICE STATUTE LAW
AMENDMENT ACT, 2002LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT DES LOIS
DANS LE DOMAINE DE LA JUSTICE

Mr Young moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 213, An Act to improve access to justice by amending the Solicitors Act to permit contingency fees in certain circumstances, to modernize and reform the law as it relates to limitation periods by enacting a new Limitations Act and making related amendments to other statutes, and to make changes with respect to the governance of the public accounting profession by amending the Public Accountancy Act / Projet de loi 213, Loi visant à améliorer l'accès à la justice en modifiant la Loi sur les procureurs pour autoriser les honoraires conditionnels dans certaines circonstances, à moderniser et à réviser le droit portant sur les délais de prescription en édictant la nouvelle Loi sur la prescription des actions et en apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois, et à modifier les règles qui régissent la profession de comptable public en modifiant la Loi sur la comptabilité publique.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The Attorney General for a short statement?

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): The proposed legislation would modernize outdated laws, improve access to the justice system for middle- and lower-income Ontarians and protect the public's confidence in their investments.

The bill introduced today would regulate contingency fee agreements, consolidate dozens of limitation periods into one clear statute and provide a legislative framework for the important work being done by Professor Ron Daniels.

I look forward to debating this bill at second reading.

LABOUR RELATIONS
AMENDMENT ACT, 2002LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LES RELATIONS DE TRAVAIL

Mr Kormos moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 214, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act, 1995 / Projet de loi 214, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1995 sur les relations de travail.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): The purpose of the bill is to restore the provisions that were incorporated into the Labour Relations Act by the Labour Relations and Employment Statute Law Amendment Act of 1992 during the NDP government and subsequently repealed by the Labour Relations Act, 1995, by, of course, the Conservative government.

The purpose of the provisions being restored is to prevent an employer from replacing striking or locked-out employees with scabs, a term that is defined in the bill. The bill allows scabs to be used in emergencies.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to stand down the first question. We're waiting for the arrival of the Premier.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We'll stand down the first question then. The second question, the member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY OFFICE

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): My question is to the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. On the Harris-Eves watch, single-parent families are being abandoned not once, but twice. Deadbeats are forsaking their families to a life of poverty, and your government is forsaking those families to your dysfunctional Family Responsibility Office.

When the Provincial Auditor looked at the FRO, he found that 75% of the cases were in arrears, with more than $1.2 billion owing to children and their custodial parents—a most damning indictment. The auditor found that more aggressive enforcement measures, such as drivers' licence or passport suspension, bank account garnishment or a default hearing, were seldom pursued. I get dozens of FRO calls every week. Nothing has changed. If anything, things are getting worse. Minister, why are you sentencing thousands of children in this province to a life of poverty?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague across the way for the question. This government very much cares about taking care of families, particularly in situations where we have single parents who are seeking assistance from parents who no longer live in the family. That's why we have made a number of changes to improve the Family Responsibility Office, to collect more money, a great deal more money, for support payments that are court ordered.

That's why in 1997 this government began by introducing a number of tougher reform measures, including suspending drivers' licences, including garnisheeing bank accounts, including using collection agencies. We now are beginning to see the results of those changes. In 1994-95, $368 million was collected in court-ordered support payments. I'm now pleased to report that that has increased by 50%, to $555 million in the year 2001-02.

Mrs Dombrowsky: Minister, the auditor's most recent report was very clear. You have failed to respond to his damning findings at FRO, and the hundreds of calls to my office and to the offices of every member of this Legislature confirm that.

Let me tell you about Pam. She is forced to raise her two children with a top-up from Ontario Works because the FRO is incapable of getting her husband to pay his child support. Yesterday, my leader released a plan to help Pam and thousands like her. It's tough on deadbeats. I know you're against our plan, but Pam thinks it's great. Your government has abandoned her. How can you abandon Pam and her children with your complete mismanagement at the FRO?

Hon Mrs Elliott: Our government has undertaken a number of initiatives. I didn't mention this in the first part of my response, but it's our government that has developed reciprocal relations with the United States so that we can find those payers who are reluctant to make sure their families are properly taken care of. It's our government that has aggressively pursued them to make sure these payments are made.

Can we do more? Obviously we can do more. Have we seen changes? Well, yes. For instance, just a few years ago the speed at which payments used to be turned around was much slower. It used to take up to 10 days for a payment to be turned around. What is the time now? We can now turn around a support payment in less than 48 hours.

Mrs Dombrowsky: Let me tell you about this turnaround time, Minister. If you're so tough, tell me why Sue in my riding has been waiting for support for two years. She's owed $12,000 in child support.

Minister, the auditor already exposed that you are tough on rhetoric but soft on deadbeats. You don't have the guts to use the enforcement measures you already have. Dalton McGuinty will post the names of deadbeat parents on a Web site, and he will take away their drivers' licences, because no child in this province should be abandoned.

I know you're against our plan and I know that you're against real action to help children in this province. The Family Responsibility Office is an abysmal failure. There are thousands of people like Pam waiting for support, and they are angry at your failure to take tough action. Minister, how can you defend this shameful record of abandoning children in the province to a life of poverty?

Hon Mrs Elliott: My colleague, I think, is forgetting that we have made tremendous improvements. We have increased millions and millions of dollars we've collected to go directly to families. Is there more to do? There's always more to do in every single system we are responsible for. But a number of changes, and I'll add some of the other changes we've made to improve the family support office: 85% of all court-ordered support payments now are deposited directly into the recipients' bank accounts; 1,900 calls are handled a day; 17,000 callers are spoken to from Monday through Friday and 11,000 responded to on the weekend. We're trying very hard to be responsive.

My colleague across the way talks about drivers' licences, and I remind her that it's our government that first established this particular process. It's another one of the measures we've undertaken to find those payers, make them pay and take care of the children of Ontario, who deserve our care.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to stand down my lead.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Yes. We'll continue and we'll go to the NDP in the rotation, if we could. They're standing down the question. No? OK.

PENSION PLANS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): My question is to the Premier and it relates to Bill 198, this government's budget bill, which includes provisions related to pensions. Mr Premier, you will be aware that on Friday the Superior Court here in Ontario ruled that terminated employees "have the right to have distributed that portion of the surplus that relates to that part of the pension plan being wound up." Yet your own legislation says under section 78.1:

"(3) If the windup report approved by the superintendent for a partial windup indicates that the pension plan has a surplus as of the effective date of the partial windup,

"(a) it is not necessary to pay surplus out of the pension plan on the partial windup unless the pension plan requires it."

This is clear evidence that your plan strips away the hard-fought rights of employees to access their surpluses. Will you withdraw this portion of the bill today, Mr Premier?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): There is no intention on the part of the government to do what the member is suggesting—

Hon Mr Eves: Just a minute—and if that is what some people are interpreting that section to say, then you have the government's undertaking that we will not proclaim that section, that we will consult with representatives of labour and of management to sit down and go over the solution to the problem. Quite simply put, there is a very basic principle here: that employees and employers should be entitled to share in any surplus that is being distributed, whether it's on a partial windup or a total windup.

There may be circumstances where there has been agreement as to who's entitled to that ahead of time, and if there's an agreement, then there's an agreement with respect to that. But if there is not, I share the member's concern.

Mr Smitherman: Notwithstanding your expression of concern, Mr Premier, your words do very little to reflect your understanding of the legislation. I've sent you over a copy of it and I urge you to read it.

I'd like to read this into the record too. This is from Mercer consulting, one of the leading members of the ACPM that the minister consulted with in the development of this bill. This is their analysis of the Monsanto ruling and its impact on other pensions. I'll read you just one line of it: "If enacted, this legislation would reverse the finding in Monsanto for plans other than Monsanto's."

Mr Premier, with all the evidence that has been compiled about your flawed consultation and about the fact that your legislation does exactly what the opposition has claimed it does, will you stand in your place today and as an honourable person agree that this has been done badly and that you will withdraw it?

Hon Mr Eves: I've already given the honourable member a commitment that we will not proclaim that section of the bill and that we will sit down with representatives of both labour and management and make sure there is an understanding that surpluses are to be shared equally between employees and employers unless there is an agreement and an understanding to the contrary.

Mr Smitherman: All your assurances aside, unfortunately the reality is that the legislation you presented before this House and intend to have passed by all of your seals over there is legislation that takes away the rights of employees. If it isn't clear enough to you from reading your own legislation and from reading the Mercer ruling on Monsanto, Mr Premier, then you need a little sober second thought on this. You can't be trusted on this. Your consultation was flawed. The words you offer are in dramatic difference from what your legislation proposes. Will you stand in your place today and withdraw this legislation so you can get it right?

Hon Mr Eves: I have always supported the employees' share of surpluses in pension plans, and I'm standing in my place today and making a commitment that this section will not be proclaimed until everybody has the understanding as to what it means. And if the honourable member turns out to be correct and the section isn't properly worded, we will change the section and it will never be proclaimed. Is that satisfactory?

TENANT PROTECTION

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Premier. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation numbers released today show that apartment rents in Ontario cities continue to rise. Since your government changed the rent laws to favour landlords, the average tenant in Toronto is paying $2,712 more a year for a two-bedroom apartment. That's $2,712 going right out of the tenant's pocket to the landlord. It's time to give tenants a break. New Democrats propose a two-year rent freeze. Since your government is responsible for this, will you implement a two-year rent freeze, or are you going to continue picking tenants' pockets?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The Minister of Municipal Affairs will respond.

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): The CMHC report today was good news. It shows the vacancy rate is actually improving for renters in this province from last year. It's up to 2.7%, a little different from what you've been saying around here for the last year. Housing starts are at record numbers, and more people own homes. As for affordable rents, if you want to compare our record to your record on what you allowed rents to go up each year under your formula when you were in government for five years, I'd do that comparison any day of the week. Ours are still lower by far than yours ever were.

Mr Hampton: The reason that the vacancy rate appears to be going up is because all kinds of people can't afford the extra $2,700 a year. In fact, statistics Canada tells us that since you brought in your landlord rent legislation, 40,000 units of apartment housing have disappeared. There's not more supply, there's less, but people can't afford it. In 1997, rent for a two-bedroom apartment in Toronto was $821. Now, it's $1,047 a month. That's how much it's gone up.

Will you recognize that you are literally taking money out of the pockets of tenants and putting it in the hands of landlords? Will you implement a two-year rent freeze and give tenants a break for a change?

Hon Mr Hodgson: The answer is no. The province saw your policies didn't work. We had rent control, and now the Liberals want to go back to the future when there's absolutely no investment in rental or any kind of housing stock in this province. What we're trying to do—the market is working, but there are some people who need help. We've got shelter allowances that we're improving to help people. We've signed the federal government accord to build 10,500 more units of affordable housing. The TPA, the formula that allows landlords to raise rents, is actually less under this government than it was under your government.

Mr Hampton: Minister, it gets worse for tenants, because as a result of the hydro price increases this summer, landlords have already applied for an extraordinary rent increase. Landlords are going to stick the tenants with another rate increase, but when your pre-election rebates and rate caps for Hydro come out, nowhere in your legislation does it provide for that money to go to the tenants. So the tenants get stuck with higher rent. Meanwhile, you funnel the rebate into the pockets of your landlord friends. Is this a deliberate strategy to put the screws to tenants one more time, or did you just hope that no one would notice this?

Hon Mr Hodgson: That's not my understanding. The hydro policy enunciated by the Minister of Energy will be fair to the tenants as well, as it is to all home owners and consumers. I can say, though, that it's easy to make promises when you're the third party. You might be reminded that when you campaigned on An Agenda for People, you campaigned on a 10% rent reduction. That never happened. In fact you increased it year after year when you were in government.

PRIVATE HEALTH CARE SERVICES

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): A question for the Premier: All of your grand schemes to privatize Hydro have created a monstrous disaster, yet your government wants to plough ahead with privatizing more and more of our health care system. Reports indicate that Mr Romanow is going to call for a national home care program and is going to call for it to be protected under the Canada Health Act. Two years ago, a coroner's inquest in the death of young Joshua Fleuelling concluded that your government's privatization of our home care services backed up hospital emergency rooms, and that led to the death of that young man. That coroner's inquest demanded that you cancel for-profit home care. Your government privatized the delivery of home care. Will you now recognize that it is time for a publicly funded, publicly administered system of home care, and will you do the right thing?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, that information the leader of the third party provided is not factually correct. Second, he presumes that he knows what Mr Romanow's report is going to say on Thursday morning. I can tell the honourable member I have had two lengthy discussions with Mr Romanow over the last few months and I can assure you that Mr Romanow doesn't think any part of Ontario's health care system is "off-side."

Mr Hampton: Here's the reality of for-profit delivery of home care. Wages of home care providers, the workers, have plummeted. The control of community care access centres has been taken out of the community and seized by your government. Thousands of Ontario seniors and disabled have been cut off home care. They have been told home care services are no longer available.

Premier, admit it, your Hydro privatization scheme has been a complete disaster. When the Romanow commission is giving every indication that they're going to oppose any further privatization of the health care system, why do you insist on ploughing ahead with more private delivery, more for-profit delivery of health care?

Hon Mr Eves: First of all, the health care system, not just in the province of Ontario but in virtually every province across this country, has about, as he well knows, 30% to 40% of the money in privately operated facilities in one way, shape, form or another, whether it's diagnostic procedures such as blood testing, whether it's kidney dialysis or whether it's some other form. The reality is, and what differentiates the Canadian system from other systems, is that it all goes through a publicly administered, equally accessible universal health care system. That principle has never been deviated from in Ontario, nor will it be as we go forward, and we look forward to Mr Romanow's report on Thursday morning.

CANCER SERVICES

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): My question is for the Minister of Health. Over a year ago your government set out to merge regional cancer centres with local hospitals, and you appointed Dr Alan Hudson to head a committee that would implement your directions. The negative response to this plan from cancer patients and from cancer care advocates forced you to retreat, at least publicly.

The committee report recommended "that the current structure of governance and management (of the regional centres) should remain at this time." It appears all that that did was give you the time you needed to get the issue out of the public eye so you could go ahead and do what you always intended to do. You are now moving ahead to merge regional cancer centres with hospitals. You appointed Dr Hudson to head Cancer Care Ontario, and he is proceeding "at your direction," as his newsletter states, to put both the budgets and the employees of cancer centres under the control of the hospital.

Minister, this is not just a plan to integrate cancer services for patients; this is a merger. Why are you proceeding with a merger that nobody wanted except you and Dr Hudson?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): The honourable member's facts are wrong. The fact of the matter is that this is a plan that has been approved by the board of Cancer Care Ontario. It has gone about its business to have individual meetings with individual hospitals that also deliver cancer services across this province.

This is a plan not to merge but to integrate services so the cancer patient has the ability to understand who is responsible for what in the system so their care is better, more humane, more accessible and of a higher quality, quite frankly.

This is a plan that has been agreed to by all of the major players who are delivering cancer services. Why are you opposed to something that is agreed to for better cancer services for the people of Ontario?

Mrs McLeod: Minister, I do agree with you that most of the consultation that was done on this was done in private. I also happen to know that the private ones were just as negative as the public one that you carried out.

Let me read you what Cancer Care Ontario had to say before Dr Hudson was appointed to do what you wanted done. In a confidential report submitted to the implementation committee, Cancer Care Ontario said, "The type of integration and other solutions that are required will not be found in giving hospitals operational control of the regional cancer centres. Indeed, such a move would likely exacerbate existing human resource shortages and, in and of itself, do virtually nothing to shorten waits for cancer surgery or improve access to diagnostic services."

Nothing has changed since then except the leadership of Cancer Care Ontario. Waiting times for diagnosis and treatment for cancer patients was a very big issue when you decided that you were going to merge regional centres with hospitals. So you wonder what happens to the waiting lists now. Do they disappear because you won't be keeping them any more? What happens to so-called dedicated budgets when the Provincial Auditor can't go in and examine the books?

I received an e-mail from one distraught cancer patient who has heard what is happening. He says, "Cancer patients have a right to know what is being done to their most important medical asset." I ask, do you agree with that? Will you make public exactly what you are doing with regional cancer centres in this province?

Hon Mr Clement: I'll go one better than what the honourable member suggests. We have appointed an eminent person who is going to be in charge of making sure that we get quality results for our cancer sufferers. Perhaps you've heard of him. His name is Michael Decter, and he is in charge of that file. So the honourable member can be assured that we are concerned as much about the quality of cancer care as about the process by which it is done.

I would say to the honourable member opposite, if she's got a problem with Dr Alan Hudson, the most pre-eminent neurosurgeon in the country, who has had experience at Princess Margaret Hospital, who is now heading up Cancer Care Ontario, she should stand in her place right now and say what her problem is with Dr Hudson, because he is doing the thing that is necessary to ensure that we have quality cancer care throughout the province of Ontario for all cancer sufferers, in an integrated manner. Better quality cancer care is what this government is all about.

AGRICULTURAL LABOUR POLICY

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): My question is for the active and dynamic Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable Helen Johns. I, along with a lot of my colleagues, have been attending a number of events this week at the annual convention of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. The convention, as always, provides farmers with a series of workshops and seminars on issues of importance to agriculture and rural Ontario.

I am aware that on the agenda for this afternoon, the long gone missing leader of the Liberal Party is scheduled to speak at this convention. Could you speculate on what the leader might say about agricultural labour?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I'd like to thank the member from Perth-Middlesex for the question. I know he has a large agricultural riding and is always concerned about the issues. It would be interesting today to hear what the leader of the Liberal Party is saying about his position on Bill 187, the Agricultural Employees Protection Act, which passed in the Legislature last week. As I recall, the Liberals abstained from voting on the first reading, noting that they didn't have sufficient time to make a decision, even though we had just completed significant public consultations. Last week, the leader of the Liberal Party stated that he would allow full unionization and also that this bill was only the first step. The right to associate would go one step further: "We're going to allow workers working for large employers in the agricultural sector the right to form a union."

The farm groups have been clear on this issue: a farm is a farm is a farm and a Liberal is a flip-flop.

Mr Johnson: Thank you very much, Minister. I enjoyed not only the knowledge you conveyed to me in that, but the way you did it.

I'm also very aware that recently the member for Vaughan-King-Aurora and the president of the Liberal Party, the wannabe leader of the Liberal Party, also made some interesting remarks regarding Bill 187. Could you comment also on these statements and provide some indication of what these Liberal positions mean for Ontario farmers?

Hon Mrs Johns: Once again the position from the member for Vaughan-King-Aurora is the latest in a series of confusing Liberal statements on agricultural labour. Yesterday, this member was quoted as saying, "I think we have to repeal it" Bill 187 "and do something different down the road." So now the leader says it's the first step and the party president says, "No, let's repeal it." Perhaps the party president should be addressing the Ontario Federation of Agriculture today to explain his position.

We on this side of the House have consistently stated that farmers need protection from labour disruption at critical times such as planting and harvesting. We have also addressed the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada respecting the individual and constitutional rights of the employees.

Once again, in Toronto they're saying one thing; in the agricultural community they're saying something else. It happens in agriculture. It happens in education. It's happening all the time.

FOREIGN-TRAINED DOCTORS

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): My question is for the Premier. Last Thursday many people were stuffed into a room to listen to your announcement on foreign-trained physicians. During that announcement, you announced that you would have 656 new doctors practising in Ontario in the next five years. Now that the details are known, would you kindly stand up and correct the record?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I think the Minister of Health can deal with this question.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): As the honourable member should have been aware at the time, we announced an eight-point, $36.4-million plan that will reduce the barriers to registration and assessment and training for international medical graduates and other non-licensed physicians without reducing our standard of care. It means improving our physician recruitment and retention, it means creating up to 85 new post-graduate training positions and it means creating a single, integrated, coordinated system for assessing and training IMGs; it provides further funding for the IMG assessment program and provides funding for the physician-extender, three-year pilot project. That means next year alone there will be 150 new IMGs for the province of Ontario practising their skills, being part of our community, integrated into our society—better health care, more health care for the people of Ontario.

Mrs Pupatello: Well, I wish the Premier had answered this, because he made the announcement. What he said was 656 new doctors would be working. We have over 1,500 foreign-trained physicians who were desperately seeking news last Thursday. What happened instead, and what we know now, is that 300 of those 600-and-some doctors are doctors who are already here practising as general practitioners, who are now going to be called specialists. That's not 656 new doctors, is it? That is not 656 new doctors.

You are just stringing these people along, making them believe that you're actually helping them. Your own ministry spokesperson has confirmed that the eligibility does not change with any of your announcements. Last spring, we had to hear you announce your new fast-tracking. Please explain why again last Thursday you announced a new fast track.

All you are is talk, Minister and Premier. You are doing nothing to assist these people who have been waiting for a good announcement. You misled the public on that announcement last Thursday.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member is going to have to withdraw that.

Mrs Pupatello: I withdraw "misled."

Hon Mr Clement: Nothing could be further from the truth. It does not make sense to have foreign medical graduates who do not have the ability to practise at all when they have the skills and training, nor does it make sense to have physicians who are foreign medical graduates who do not practise to the top level of their skill. We are allowing both to have access—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order. This is the last warning for the member for Windsor West. If she keeps yelling across, she'll be thrown out. The minister waited patiently for you to ask the question, and it's his turn to answer now. If you don't do it, then I'm afraid I'm going to have to throw you out.

Sorry for the interruption, Minister.

Hon Mr Clement: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

We are allowing both groups to have access to the health care system so they can deliver quality, accessible health care for the province of Ontario, and if the honourable member has a problem with that, let her tell us what she has against international medical graduates who want to practise as specialists in Ontario. Stand in your place and tell us what you've got against international medical graduates who want to practise their speciality in the province. Tell us now.

LONG-TERM-CARE FACILITIES

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question today is for the Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. Like all the members on this side of the House, I'm very proud to be part of a government that has demonstrated such a strong commitment to meeting the long-term-care needs of Ontario seniors, both through unprecedented investment in new and redeveloped long-term-care facilities in my own riding, Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale, as well as across the province, and through our $100-million investment in nursing and personal care.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Sorry to interrupt. The member for Don Valley East and the government House leader, please come to order. The member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale has the floor. I apologize, member.

Mr Gill: Last week the Ontario Nurses' Association issued a news release suggesting that long-term-care facilities in our province aren't using the $100 million in funding to hire new nurses and personal care workers as intended. For the benefit of my constituents, I would like the associate minister to please explain that.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I'm pleased to respond to the hard-working and always effective honourable member from Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale. The Ernie Eves government's historic $100-million investment in nursing and personal care is earmarked into the nursing and personal care envelope for long-term-care funding. This earmarked $100 million is being used for even better nursing and personal care across Ontario, including the salaries and benefits of registered nurses, registered practical nurses and personal care workers.

I would also like to point out that there were inconsistencies in the Ontario Nurses' Association's press release from last week, including the statement that West End Villa nursing home in Ottawa is using half of the money to cover off deficits. The fact is that West End does not even have a deficit, hasn't had a deficit and in fact has hired two additional full-time personal care workers at their facility.

Mr Gill: I'm glad I asked that question. I want to thank the associate minister for his response. I'm very pleased to hear that our government's funding is being used, as intended, to provide even better nursing and personal care to residents of Ontario. I know that my constituents will be very happy to hear about that.

I would like to ask the associate minister for specific examples of long-term-care facilities in Ontario that have hired new nursing and personal care staff, as intended, with the $100 million that we've paid them.

Hon Mr Newman: I once again thank the honourable member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale for his question. This summer, the Ontario Long Term Care Association suggested that our government's $100 million in new additional funding could be used to hire an additional 2,400 full-time-equivalent nursing and personal care workers across the province, and this still is the case.

This can be seen in Ottawa, for example, where the ministry is aware of roughly 15 facilities that have added nursing staff to their complement to assist in the provision of care to residents. A multiple-home operator has also added 42 full-time-equivalent positions and another six full-time equivalents in a single home.

In fact, at the Metro Toronto Legion Village in Scarborough, a charitable home for the aged, a nursing supervisor position has been added with the enhanced personal care dollars. In addition, Metro Toronto Legion Village has added 98 hours a week in health care aide hours and has enhanced evening shifts from a health care aide to a registered nursing position.

I hope that even the Liberals and the NDP—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the associate minister's time is up.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): My question is for the Premier. In the west gallery today are adoptees, an adoptive mother and a birth mother. They represent the thousands from the adoption community who have been working for many years on adoption disclosure. They want the heartbreak of secrecy stopped. They want Bill 77 passed.

As you know, Bill 77 would open up adoption records to adult adoptees and birth parents. There's a contact veto for those who are concerned about privacy.

Premier, will you agree today to call Bill 77 for third reading and a final vote?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, I believe that issues such as the one she's talking about don't have any place in partisan politics. I believe there are several private members' bills in this Legislature that should go forward on a free vote and a non-partisan basis. The member for Waterloo-Wellington, for example, has a bill that I believe should go forward and be acted upon.

I have talked to our House leader this morning about this very issue. There are many substantial improvements, I believe, that the Legislative Assembly committee is on the verge of recommending to the House to make this a more free and open democratic process, especially as far as backbench members are concerned.

I would urge the honourable member to talk to her House leader so there can be an arrangement among all three House leaders so members of all three parties can bring forward private members' bills that can be voted upon.

Ms Churley: Premier, I appreciate the fact that we've come a long way from where we were before, but I do want to point out to you that it's a half-yes; we're not all the way there.

There are illnesses and deaths as a result of this bill not being passed. I do not want to see it caught up in the usual negotiations and BS that goes on around here when it comes to negotiations around the passage of bills.

Please listen to me, Premier. I appreciate what you said, but these people here today want a guarantee that this bill will be called for third reading and a final vote. Since 1999, it has been sitting there waiting for passage. Would you agree today that, no matter what, you will see to it as Premier that this bill comes forward for a final vote?

Hon Mr Eves: I certainly appreciate the fact that the honourable member believes very sincerely in the cause she's talking about. I believe there are several other members of this Legislative Assembly who share that same concern and that same belief. I would like to see the bill brought forward, but she knows how this place works. I think she has a bigger problem, quite frankly, convincing her House leader than she does people on this side of the House that the bill should come forward.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Gerard Kennedy (Parkdale-High Park): I have a question for the Premier. I want to ask you about your statements made last week to the parents and the public of Toronto about the funding that your appointed supervisor is providing to them, and to students in particular. You said very explicitly that funding to the classroom in Toronto will be increased by the supervisor's proposal.

We now know that in fact there's at least a $23-million reduction in funding to the classroom compared to last year. Those parents and those students were depending on you. You and your minister are the only elected officials who have any influence over the future of their children this year.

It turns out that what you said last week isn't correct. Will you stand today in the House and apologize, and more importantly, will you reconsider the funding for those students in light of your statements and in light of the facts?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The Minister of Education will be able to correct the honourable member.

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): The member opposite knows full well that the only people who abdicated their responsibility to the students were the trustees, the small majority who refused to balance the budget and present a balanced budget to the Ministry of Education.

The reality is that Mr Kennedy's methodology is flawed. The supervisor's table compares net expenditures in 2001-02 to net expenditures in 2002-03. He did an apples-to-apples comparison, but not Mr Kennedy, of course. He did a comparison where he took a look and he compared total expenditures in 2001-02 to net expenditures in 2002-03. It was an apples-to-oranges comparison. Why he'd do that, I'm not sure.

Mr Kennedy: We have the minister opposite who said to us just now that there was a mixture between gross and net figures. They won't release the gross figures. They are afraid to put out how much money is being spent on behalf of students. Why are they afraid? Because the partial figures we have obtained and that were confirmed by the school board—those members over there hope against hope they might be true—prove the fact that the Premier last week told this Legislature that, first of all, the money spent in the classroom has actually increased and in fact it has not. It hasn't increased.

Interjection.

Mr Kennedy: For all the laughing members opposite, students in this city have less teacher assistance, have fewer teachers, have less classroom assistance, and despite your assurance, Premier, and you're afraid to come up and talk about this question, they have fewer textbooks.

I ask you again, Premier, will you apologize to the students and the parents for whom you have provided inaccurate information, but more importantly, will you instruct your minister now—it has been proven it's not working. Will you reconsider the funding given out for the students in Toronto? Will you do that today?

Hon Mrs Witmer: If I heard the member opposite correctly, he said he didn't have the figures. Does that mean he made the figures up?

CHRONIC WASTING DISEASE

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I have a question today—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. The member for Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant has the floor.

Mr Barrett: I have a question today for the Minister of Natural Resources. Many people in the province of Ontario are very concerned about a troubling disease that has been detected in both deer and elk populations in some of Ontario's neighbouring jurisdictions. It's known as chronic wasting disease. Could you please explain to us today, first of all, what this disease is and, secondly, has it been detected in either deer or elk herds in the province?

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): Chronic wasting disease, or CWD as it's known, is a progressive fatal disease of the nervous system detected in deer and elk. It's caused by an abnormal protein called a prion, and there is no scientific evidence to date that CWD, in any way, shape or form infects humans. Scientists are not sure how the disease is transmitted. I've heard various aspects come forward such as bald eagles transmitting it, and it's not quite sure how it is found. Also, there is no detection of the disease in Ontario, and the MNR will continue to protect Ontarians and Ontario's deer and elk herds.

Mr Barrett: Thank you for that explanation. I am relieved to hear there has been no detection of chronic wasting disease in the province. However, given the harmful potential for this disease, it's important that our province continue to not only remain vigilant but remain watchful for any indications of its spread. What steps have you been taking to ensure there has not been any incidence of this disease in the province, and what are you planning for the future?

Hon Mr Ouellette: That's right. You can't wait until the last minute until a disease is actually detected in your area. So what the MNR has done is launch a pilot project this year during deer season. This was designed to develop a process on how to collect data, to review that data, to analyze it and to implement a program to deal with the situation should it arise in Ontario. To date, we've had over 140 samples collected, with no positive results in any of the animals that were brought forward.

I want to thank the outdoor community for a program that has been well received and has been very supportive. I want to assure everyone that the MNR and outdoor partners will continue to bring this program to a closure so that we can establish a comprehensive, permanent safety measure to ensure the protection of Ontario's deer and elk herds.

LOBBYISTS

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Premier, and the question is about the return of the prodigal son, Guy Giorno, who has obviously returned to call the shots for this government.

Yesterday, you were in Ottawa discussing the Kyoto Protocol with the Prime Minister, and you said that you were not persuaded by the arguments he provided. But obviously you—

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: —and the backbencher who's so yappy and the rest of the government are persuaded by Guy Giorno, who is lobbying on behalf of the oil barons, on behalf of the opponents of the Kyoto accord.

When I try to get any information, all I get are blackened pages like this. That's all I get from your government.

I want to ask the Premier why he is listening to a major lobbyist who worked for the former Premier of the province of Ontario who is now back advising you? Why have you been persuaded by Guy Giorno to oppose the provisions of the Kyoto accord?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I have never had a discussion with Guy Giorno about the Kyoto accord.

Mr Bradley: That's one of those statements where, whether it's true or not, nobody believes it. That's one of those statements.

Let me talk about perhaps the ethics of Guy Giorno lobbying you, holding this reception where he trotted out his friend, the Minister of Energy, John Baird, to speak, and brought together chief Tory operatives downstairs on October 15.

Subsection 30(b) of the conflict of interest and post-service directive states: "For 12 months after leaving the service of the crown, a former senior public servant is restricted from lobbying for or on behalf of any person, entity or organization to any ministry or organization of the crown with which the individual worked in the 12 months prior to leaving the service."

Could you tell us whether you think it's appropriate that Guy Giorno was doing so much of the lobbying against the Kyoto accord and trying to persuade your government not to agree with the Kyoto accord, when clearly he is violating the provisions of this particular act?

Hon Mr Eves: I would refer this supplementary to the Chair of the Management Board.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): One of the concerns we've had in terms of this type of purported conflict of interest was that we've created an independent office of the Conflict of Interest Commissioner. We've appointed the Honourable Lloyd Houlden to be the commissioner.

We're very concerned to make sure that upon leaving the government, not only civil servants but also senior staff in ministers' offices and the Premier's office are expected to meet with the commissioner, who provides them with clear directions about the activities they may engage in, in accordance with the post-service directive.

Last fall, we in fact revised the conflict-of-interest rules to ensure they're up to date and meet the government's commitment to accountability and transparency to the public.

In short, Mr Giorno was required to meet with Mr Houlden and was required to indicate to him the direction he was going to take, and obviously that has occurred.

AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Last week I was thankfully invited by Gord Carey to attend a National Housing Day open house at Faith United Church in my riding of Durham. The event included organizers who are looking toward the issues facing affordable housing, not just in Durham region but indeed across the province, members like Len Perkins and Lynn Teatro, and John Jensen, president of Project Next Step.

They provided me with a very good reference point on the issues facing us in terms of housing supply. Consequently, I was impressed with the housing supply working group report released this week.

Minister, I wonder if you could tell us what needs to be done to get people building more rental and affordable housing in the province of Ontario.

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I appreciate the question from the member for Durham, a hard-working MPP. I can tell you that the housing supply working group issued two reports. I received last week the second one. It talks about how to make the numbers work for affordable housing.

We're having huge success in the province of Ontario in terms of home ownership, condos and apartments at the top end of the rental scale. Eventually the supply will work, but in the short term, what needs to be done to get the numbers to work for affordable rents for working families in this province? They've identified a number of barriers that need to be removed. The top of the barriers we've already removed since 1996, undoing the damage of that lost decade of Liberal-NDP mismanagement.

On top of that they've recommended some further things that need to be done: full rebate of the GST, a deferral of the capital gains tax, increasing the depreciation allowance on rental housing and restoration of the soft costs deductibility. These are all things they're recommending to make the numbers work so it's economically viable for the private sector to build affordable housing.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you very much for your response on this important policy issue, Minister. I commend you for your leadership and for making it clear about the lack of commitment by the federal government on the issues you've mentioned, the CMHC transfers, the municipal tax rate on multiple residential, as well as our initiative on the PST tax relief.

The Tenant Protection Act amendments and proposals brought forward by the Liberal McGuinty government plans to establish rent control on vacant units. We understand that the market usually determines this. That plan, in my view, has failed to address the fundamental question. Minister, what's your response to that suggestion?

Hon Mr Hodgson: I think everyone knows that was a failed policy. In any jurisdiction in the world it has been tried, it doesn't work. The federal government has announced a federal program to try to kick-start 10,500 units. We're working with them; I was on the phone again this morning with Minister Collenette. We expect to be rolling that out in the near future.

Going back to the future of rent control, you can look at any jurisdiction; it fails. The supply is what you need to concentrate on. You need to have incentives to make the numbers work to get more supply. There is a huge success story taking place in Ontario with home ownership: 67.9% of the public now have ownership of their residences. That's up from 64%. That's at historic highs.

The CMHC report that was just released is great news. It shows a huge, dramatic improvement in the vacancy rates, 2.7%, from 1.7% just a year ago. That's the highest vacancy rate since 1975, the year rent controls were brought in to stifle any further investment in this field. Even Vince Brescia, president and CEO of the Fair Rental Policy—

SMELTER OPERATION IN TIMMINS

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): My question is to the Premier. Globex, a mining company in northern Ontario, has discovered a large magnesium-talc body just south of the city of Timmins. This could represent the largest mining project in Timmins since the strike of Texasgulf in the early 1960s. Part of this project could include a refinery and smelter that would create some 500 jobs in the community of Timmins.

Premier, I don't need to tell you how badly we need those jobs for the province of Ontario. What are you prepared to do to make sure Globex builds that smelter in the city of Timmins?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I refer the question to the Minister of Northern Development and Mines.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): I thank the honourable member for the question. As you know, I've met with the company on a few occasions, as have officials of the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines. We've rolled out the welcome mat as best we can.

Globex has been given a pretty good—at least they tell us, both privately and in the media—subsidized power deal from the province of Quebec. It's perhaps a deal that's very generous, and I would say the taxpayers are going to be subsidizing that company. Right now the debate is, can Ontario match it? We're certainly looking at it, but it has not been the policy of this government, nor should it be, to give money directly to business.

We've created a million net new jobs in this province since 1995, and we've done it without corporate welfare. We don't want to go down that road.

We're dealing with Globex. I think it makes eminent sense to have the smelter near the mine but, as you know, the province of Quebec is also in these discussions.

Mr Bisson: That says a lot about your hydro policy, but back to the Premier and my original question. I hope, Premier, when you visit Timmins tomorrow you'll have something better to tell the citizens of Timmins, because a year ago Globex wanted to meet with your government to talk about how your government could assist them in developing a bankable feasibility study in order to not only build the mine but build a refinery and smelter.

The only way they were able to meet with your government was by way of a fundraiser, and when they showed up they were basically told what the minister just said: "We don't provide any loans or grant programs directly to the private sector. We're not in that business whatsoever."

Now where are we at? Twelve months later Globex is in a situation of being lured over to Quebec by the province of Quebec and not only are they looking at building the refinery smelter over there but they're prepared to participate in a bankable feasibility study.

My question to you is really simple. It's clear at this point that you dropped the ball on this. When you go to Timmins tomorrow, Premier, what are you prepared to tell the citizens of Timmins about what your government is going to do to make sure that that smelter, if built, will be built in the city of Timmins, Ontario, and not in the province of Quebec?

Hon Mr Wilson: I want to give the member an opportunity to correct the record. He knows very well, because he was with the company when we met in my office, and I've never met the company at a fundraiser. I extended the courtesy of his coming to that meeting, he extended the courtesy of accompanying the company and I thought it was a very good meeting. We've had follow-up meetings.

It occurs to me it's difficult to compete with Quebec because in our Confederation, Ontario is the economic engine of Canada and we give far more tax dollars to Quebec—actually to the federal government, and they give them to Quebec—than we get back from the federal government. This is one of those cases where being the economic engine of Canada is perhaps working against us.

Having said that, this Premier, the previous Premier and this government have created a million net new jobs in Ontario. These jobs can be created in Timmins. We want to keep working with Globex. We have the most competitive mining jurisdiction in North America. We're number one in the world this year for low mining taxes—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the minister.

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to clarify the record. It wasn't the current minister setting up that meeting; it was a previous minister.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question today is to the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. People receiving ODSP tend to have higher-than-average medical needs. They often need to travel in order to get specialized services. They receive 18 cents per kilometre for their trip. That's about half of what you and I get.

You have now brought out a new process that requires their doctor to submit on what their expenses will be for the next year. They must determine what their doctors' visits, dental visits and medical supplies will be for the coming year. Doctors have said to me that they have to either be liars or clairvoyants to fill out this form.

Minister, without this form being completed, our citizens are unable to get their medical services. You have created a major new barrier to citizens with disabilities. I ask you now, today, to withdraw this process and pay them for the trips they incur as they do them.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague opposite for the question. We have worked very hard to make changes to the Ontario Disability Support Program Act to improve the lives of those who are disabled. It's our government that introduced the Ontarians with Disabilities Act. It's our government that removed those who are disabled from the welfare act to give them a new plan, the Ontario disability support program, with great improvements.

We have been concerned with some of the processes in the Ontario disability act and we've tried to improve them. I'm not exactly sure what the questioner is referring to. We have made some changes to simplify the application process in creating one consistent form, and we did that with extensive advice from the Ontario Medical Association to improve the form that the physicians were asked to complete. If this is the form in question, then I'd be happy to speak to my colleague further about this.

Mr Parsons: Let me explain to you what you have done. You have created a form called the mandatory special necessities benefit request. People receiving ODSP cannot receive funding for their trips as they incur them. They now must submit for the following year, well into 2003, and then they receive a certain amount on each cheque.

No one knows what's going to happen in the next year. This is a bureaucratic nightmare. If a citizen receiving ODSP makes some money, within 15 days you can claw back that money from their cheque. Surely within 15 days you could process a travel claim and pay it. Rather than an airy-fairy best guess of what's going to happen in the next year, let's do it right. Let's do it financially soundly, and let's remove the barrier. Doctors are refusing to fill out this form, and we have citizens on ODSP who are not getting the medical treatment they require because of your new, ridiculous barrier.

Hon Mrs Elliott: We've worked very hard on this side to improve the lives of those who are disabled. We've worked very hard to make the process easier, straightforward and improved in every way. If this form or any other form is a problem, it's a form I will be examining and improving.

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent to immediately call the orders for second and third readings of Bill 211 today, notwithstanding standing order 69, and that the Speaker put the question without debate.

BACK TO SCHOOL ACT (SIMCOE MUSKOKA CATHOLIC DISTRICT SCHOOL BOARD), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE RETOUR À L'ÉCOLE (SIMCOE MUSKOKA CATHOLIC DISTRICT SCHOOL BOARD)

Mr Clark moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 211, An Act to resolve a labour dispute between the Ontario English Catholic Teachers' Association and the Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board / Projet de loi 211, Loi visant à régler le conflit de travail opposant l'Association des enseignantes et des enseignants catholiques anglo-ontariens et le conseil scolaire de district appelé Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board.

BACK TO SCHOOL ACT (SIMCOE MUSKOKA CATHOLIC DISTRICT SCHOOL BOARD), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE RETOUR À L'ÉCOLE (SIMCOE MUSKOKA CATHOLIC DISTRICT SCHOOL BOARD)

Mr Clark moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 211, An Act to resolve a labour dispute between the Ontario English Catholic Teachers' Association and the Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board / Projet de loi 211, Loi visant à régler le conflit de travail opposant l'Association des enseignantes et des enseignants catholiques anglo-ontariens et le conseil scolaire de district appelé Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

VISITORS

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to welcome Peter Callaghan and a group of students from Loyalist College in Belleville. I hope they have not been too disillusioned by their experience here.

PETITIONS

ALUMINUM SMELTER

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This is a petition to clean up the abandoned aluminum smelter in Georgina, and the petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the abandoned aluminum smelter located on Warden Avenue in the town of Georgina has been deemed to have heavy metals exceeding Ministry of the Environment guidelines; and

"Whereas the site is adjacent to a wetland that leads to the Maskinonge River feeding into Lake Simcoe;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"The Ministry of the Environment should immediately conduct a full environmental assessment and cleanup of the site."

I affix my signature. I'm in complete agreement.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): If we could stop the clock just for a quick moment. It's a little noisy as some of the members leave. We'll just take a quick moment here.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): "Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion from public education over the past seven years;

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students;

"Whereas district school boards around the province have had to cut needed programs and services, including library, music, physical education and special education" and more;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors;

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned elected leaders of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto district school boards."

I support that.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): In light of the government's latest announcement last Thursday in Sudbury about their agreeing to four-laning Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound, I will continue to introduce these petitions into the Legislature until in fact that four-laning is done.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of a government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the" Harris-Eves "government has failed to do so;

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the" Harris-Eves "government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

I affix my signature to this petition and give it to Annelise to bring to the table.

CHILD CARE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have petitions that have been sent to me by Lisa Gregory, by the YWCA of St Catharines and by the Jubilee Heritage Family Resources program in Sudbury. The petition reads as follows:

"Whereas 70% of Ontario women with children under age 12 are in the paid workforce;

"Whereas high-quality, safe, affordable child care is critical to them and their families;

"Whereas the Early Years Study done for the Conservative government by Dr Fraser Mustard and the Honourable Margaret McCain concluded quality child care enhances early childhood development;

"Whereas this government has cut funding for regulated child care instead of supporting Ontario families by investing in early learning and care;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Ontario government adopt the NDP's $10-a-day child care plan and begin implementation by reducing full child care fees to $10 a day for children aged two to five currently enrolled in regulated child care by providing capital funds to expand existing child care centres and build new ones, by funding pay equity for staff and by creating new $10-a-day child care spaces in the province."

I agree with the petitioners. I've affixed my signature to this.

PROGRAMME D'ALPHABÉTISATION ET D'INTÉGRATION COMMUNAUTAIRE

M<sup>me</sup> Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): « Attendu que les 44 personnes qui assistaient au programme d'alphabétisation et d'intégration communautaire de la Cité collégiale perdent en moyenne 2,5 jours par semaine de services directs et d'appui dans leur communauté dû à la fermeture de ce programme;

« Attendu que les agences de services du secteur de la déficience intellectuelle ne peuvent offrir de services de remplacement à ces personnes, compte tenu que leurs programmes sont déjà remplis à capacité;

« Attendu que les 44 personnes qui assistaient à ce programme seront maintenant insérées sur la liste d'attente à coordination des services, qui comprend déjà plus d'une trentaine de personnes francophones et que certaines d'entre elles attendent déjà depuis plus de deux ans;

« Attendu que nous considérons inacceptable de laisser les personnes ayant une déficience intellectuelle et leurs familles sans ou avec trop peu de soutien, de programmes et de services;

« Nous, parents, familles, amis et intervenants, demandons au gouvernement Eves de collaborer afin d'assurer un financement adéquat pour la mise en œuvre d'un modèle de services aux personnes francophones ayant une déficience intellectuelle qui répondra aux besoins, favorisera la mouvance dans le système de déficience intellectuelle, réduira la liste d'attente et reconnaîtra le droit à l'éducation pour les personnes ayant une déficience intellectuelle. »

It's my pleasure to put my signature on it.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): I have a petition by several hundred people from the Ottawa area. It says:

"Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion from public education over the past seven years;

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students;

"Whereas district school boards" across "the province have had to cut needed programs and services, including library, music, physical education and special education;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors;

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned members of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto district school boards."

I'm happy to place my signature along with these others.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO SAVINGS OFFICE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a petition sent to me by people from Holland Centre, Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Province of Ontario Savings Office was created in 1922 by United Farmers and labour as a unique banking facility that allowed Ontarians to invest in their province; and

"Whereas the Province of Ontario Savings Office enjoys a strong popularity among Ontario residents, with over 100,000 accounts and over $2.8 billion on deposit; and

"Whereas the Province of Ontario Savings Office offers customers attractive interest rates, generous checking privileges and personalized, efficient service, and every dollar deposited is guaranteed by the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas POSO has 23 branches serving 17 communities across Ontario including Hamilton, Windsor, Ottawa and small communities in northern Ontario not served by other banks or trust companies, places like Pickle Lake, Armstrong, Killarney, Gogama and Virginiatown; and

"Whereas the Tory government announced in its latest budget that it will put the Province of Ontario Savings Bank on the auction block even though it is a consistent revenue generator and even though this revenue could help Ontario's crumbling infrastructure after years of Tory neglect;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To save the people's bank, the Province of Ontario Savings Office, so that it can continue its historic role of providing excellent banking services to families in communities across Ontario, so that people in small towns will not be forced to go further afield for banking services and forced to go to private, for-profit banks."

I agree with the petitioners, and I sign my signature as well.

SCHOOL BUS SAFETY

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas some motorists are recklessly endangering the lives of children by not obeying the highway traffic law requiring them to stop for school buses with their warning lights activated;

"Whereas the current law has no teeth to protect the children who ride the school buses of Ontario, and who are at risk and their safety is in jeopardy;

"Whereas the current school bus law is difficult to enforce, since not only is the licence plate number required but positive identification of the driver and vehicle as well, which makes it extremely difficult to obtain a conviction;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the measures contained in private member's Bill 112, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to protect children while on school buses, presented by Pat Hoy, MPP, Chatham-Kent-Essex, be immediately enacted. Bill 112 received the unanimous all-party support of the Ontario Legislature at second reading on June 13, 2002.

"We ask for the support of all members of the Legislature."

I too have signed this important petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a petition sent to me by Catherine Callaghan of Cambridge, Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Conservative government increased fees paid by Ontario's seniors and other vulnerable people living in long-term care facilities by 15% ... instead of providing adequate government funding for long-term care; and

"Whereas the Conservative government has therefore shifted the costs of long-term care on to the backs of the frail, elderly and their families; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas in 1996 Ontario abandoned its minimum requirement of 2.25 hours of nursing care per nursing home resident; and

"Whereas the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term care-services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own study, government cutbacks have resulted in Ontario seniors receiving just 14 minutes a day of care from a registered nurse ... and

"Whereas the report also found that Ontario residents receive the least nursing, bathing and general care of nine other comparable locations;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:"

We demand "the Conservative government eliminate the 15% fee increase for residents of long-term care facilities, increase the number of nursing care hours for each resident to a minimum of 3.5 hours per day and provide stable, increased funding to ensure quality care is there for Ontario residents of long-term-care facilities."

I agree with the petitioners. I have affixed my signature to this.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"... be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas; and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive rate increases."

I am in full agreement and will affix my signature hereto.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have petitions that have been signed by many people in my riding, and they read as follows:

"Whereas the Harris government's plan to privatize and deregulate Ontario's electricity system will lead to higher rates because private owners will sell more power to US customers whose rates are typically 50% higher than Ontario's; and

"Whereas selling coal plants like Nanticoke to the private sector will lead to more pollution because the private owners will run the plants at full capacity to earn a profit; and

"Whereas electricity deregulation in California has led to sky-high rates and blackouts; and

"Whereas Ontario needs a system of public power that will ensure rate stability, environmental protection and secure access to power;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the undersigned call on the government to scrap electricity deregulation and privatization and bring in a system of accountable public power. The first priority for such a public power system must be incentives for energy conservation and green power. Electricity rates and major energy projects must be subject to full public hearings and binding rulings by a public regulator instead of leaving energy rates to private profit."

I agree with the petitioners, and I've affixed my signature to this.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I continue to receive dozens upon dozens of petitions containing hundreds of names from places like Newmarket, Burlington, Hamilton, Kitchener, Guelph, Orangeville and Parry Sound, among others, dealing with the long-term-care situation. It is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% over three years, or $3.02 per diem in the first year and $2 in the second year and $2 in the third year, effective September 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month after three years; and

"Whereas this increase is above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario for 2002; and

"Whereas, according to the government's own funded study, Ontario will still rank last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas the government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase over three years in accommodation costs to no more than the cost-of-living increase annually and that the provincial government provide adequate funding for nursing and personal care to a level that is at least at the average standard for nursing and personal care in those 10 jurisdictions included in the government's own study."

I agree with the petition, and I've signed it accordingly.

CHILD CARE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have some more petitions. They are sent to me from the Welland campus of Niagara College and from a Child's World, which is also located in that area, in Port Colborne specifically. It reads as follows:

"Whereas 70% of Ontario women with children under age 12 are in the paid workforce;

"Whereas high-quality, safe, affordable child care is critical to them and their families;

"Whereas the Early Years Study done for the Conservative government by Dr Fraser Mustard and the Honourable Margaret McCain concluded quality child care enhances early childhood development;

"Whereas this government has cut funding for regulated child care instead of supporting Ontario families by investing in early learning and care;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Ontario government adopt the NDP's $10-a-day child care plan and begin implementation by reducing full child care fees to $10 a day for children aged two to five currently enrolled in regulated child care, by providing capital funds to expand existing child care centres and build new ones, by funding" proxy "pay equity for staff and by creating new $10-a-day child care spaces in the province."

I agree with the petitioners. I've affixed my signature to this.

OPPOSITION DAY

PUBLIC TRANSIT

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): The Legislative Assembly of Ontario directs the Ernie Eves government to commit to directing two cents of the existing provincial gas tax to municipalities, which will double the provincial investment in public transit.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Colle has moved opposition day number 4.

Mr Colle: I'm happy to be here talking about the need to have an ongoing dedicated portion of the gasoline tax collected by the province that goes toward the funding of public transit throughout the province. This would come out of the existing gas tax, of which the province collects about $2.6 billion a year. We would like to take a portion of that and apply it to the operation and funding of capital projects for transit.

I think this is necessary, because we can see that right now Ontario is basically the only jurisdiction in North America which doesn't have an ongoing, full-time commitment of funding for the operation of transit. Even in Europe, there's a regular, ongoing commitment of funding. This used to be the case in Ontario up until 1997, when the Harris government decided to walk away from that commitment and essentially downloaded the cost of funding public transit to the municipalities. Right now, transit in Toronto is funded by the property taxes—it's the same in Ottawa—and the fare box. So you have an incredible situation where property taxpayers who have already reached the limit are now also asked to fund transit out of their property taxes. That is not sustainable, because transit is an extremely expensive operation to maintain financially. It's not only the capital requirements of subway cars, buses, streetcars, bus stations, bus garages; it's also very labour-intensive. You have to hire mechanics to maintain and operate the system, and drivers. So we need ongoing funding.

We can see what has happened in recent years: for instance, the TTC in Toronto is now carrying 45 million fewer passengers per year than it did in the late 1980s, despite an increase in population of over 20% in the Toronto area. We always think that with all these population increases, and I think this is similar for the whole GTA—we see increases in population, yet we see a decrease in the number of people using transit. The reason for that is that the basic way of attracting new ridership is increased service.

I remember I was talking to the city manager of Oakville one time a couple of years ago, and he said they had to reduce the frequency of the bus routes because of the cutbacks, so the bus would only come at half-hour intervals. If you're waiting a half hour, you're not going to wait. It's not going to be a viable alternative to taking the car. You have to increase and maintain service.

By giving them funding, these transit systems will be able to put more buses on the road, provide more services and then at the same time attract more riders. The benefit of this is that in the long run it gets rid of one of the major causes of economic loss, certainly in the Golden Horseshoe area: loss through congestion and gridlock. We all witness it; we all see it. We lose person-hours waiting in traffic. We waste fuel. Therefore, deliveries take more time. By getting more people on transit, we not only benefit the transit users, we benefit those who have to use the roads to deliver goods and services or make sales calls during the day. It benefits everyone, even though you're not a transit user per se.

It's critical not only for the economy of the province and the GTA, but for the environment too. Because with all this added gridlock, people sitting in traffic on the QEW or the 401 and there's continual emission of all kinds of noxious substances that diminish air quality. So this is another benefit of putting this amount of money, which will amount to about $300 million a year, toward the funding of transit in Ontario. Whether it's in Ottawa or Windsor or Kingston, it will go toward improving the level of service.

There was a very detailed study released a couple of years ago by David McCleary, who was the manager of policy planning in Halton region. He did this for the GTSB, where he looked at the challenges here. He said that right now, GO Transit is running to capacity. In fact, the Lakeshore line is running at 160% of capacity. We have to do something.

"Municipalities," Mr McCleary said, "are spending about $570 million a year on transportation infrastructure. But if cities hope to reduce congestion and handle the expected growth, they should be spending $1.37 billion a year, almost three times that, to make our roads less congested." That's what the director of policy and planning of Halton said.

Property taxes or development levies can't be expected to make up this $800-million shortfall, so you aren't going to do it by raising property taxes. You can't fund transit that way; nowhere else in the world do they fund transit on property taxes, only in Ontario. The province can, however, by tapping into the $1.1 billion it collects each year in gasoline taxes and vehicle and driver licensing fees within the GTA and the Hamilton-Wentworth regions.

As I said, the province collects $2.6 billion every year in gas taxes; it collects over $1 billion in GTA region alone in gas taxes and related fees, so there's money there that could be used to not only improve public transportation but also get our roads freer for goods and services to move. Because it doesn't matter how many roads we build, if we really want to improve the mobility of Ontarians, we have to get people, if they have the option, to go to the public transit. That's the key. Whether you go to Munich, London, Paris or New York, that's the way they make those cities work.

We, in the last number of years in Ontario, have walked away from our commitment, so we, as Liberals, believe there should be a commitment back to public transit. That's why we announced yesterday in our Growing Strong Communities plan that we would put this two cents, which amounts to $300 million a year, into funding transit on a regular basis. We would also, to better coordinate transit planning and to make sure we spend dollars properly, establish a Greater Toronto transit authority that would act as a planner and comprehensive allocator of resources to the GTA, making sure things move smoothly, making sure resources aren't spent that are contrary to the movement of goods and people across the lines—especially transit, across the regional lines.

We all know transit should not stop at an artificial barrier at the Mississauga border or at Steeles Avenue. We in the GTA go across these borders continually, so we need a coordinating body, and that's why Dalton McGuinty, yesterday, supported the concept of a GTA authority to better plan and allocate our resources more properly. We also think that there should be an easy pass across the GTA so people who use GO Transit or maybe Mississauga Transit or Toronto Transit can use one transit pass instead of buying different tickets etc, so you'd have an easy pass across the GTA.

I remember Lou Parsons, 15 years ago, tried to get this going. It's really a no-brainer that has to happen if we're going to treat transit and transportation as a serious issue that affects our economy and environment. That's why you have to make this commitment that is not just on an ad hoc basis. This government will make announcements about transit, but there is no plan, there is no serious year-after-year, long-range commitment. That's what you need. You need this.

I know the Minister of Transportation and the Premier speculated the other day about privatizing transit to make it better. Well, it doesn't work. They mentioned Australia. Privatization of transit in Australia, in the state of Victoria, has been a total failure. In England, they tried to privatize some of the railway there; another failure. You can't really use the private sector to act as a panacea here because you don't really make money on transit; it really is providing a service. That's been the case all over the world. There's marginal privatization of transit throughout the world; it's really unheard of.

We also need to look at ways of ensuring that transit is not just a municipal responsibility. You have a strong province and you have strong cities and towns, and that's why this investment is not so much, as some people would say, an extra amount of money; it's a reallocation, it's a reinvestment in things that make cities work. If we're talking about planning the GTA better—the government likes to use the term "smart growth." Well, you can't have smart growth without transit.

This government has tried to say they're for planning things in a sustainable way, yet they haven't put any money into transit. You can't have good growth unless you have good transit planning; you can't have proper sustainable planning in Ontario unless you have invested in transit. So this government, as I said, has to come to realize that there will be more wastage of fuel, more congestion, more gridlock and more pollution and smog unless you support this concept of putting provincial money back into public transportation.

In Montreal that's how they fund their transit, partially, through a gas tax—in British Columbia; in Alberta. In Alberta they do the same thing: subsidize Calgary Transit and Edmonton Transit. It's really unusual that a province as wealthy and as advanced as Ontario does not fund public transit on a regular basis. We walked away from that. We've taken millions of dollars out, and subsequently we've relied on the fare box. For instance, in Toronto about 80 cents of the funding of transit comes out of the fare box. It's unheard of. Most places in the world 50 cents is by fare—in most other places, states and provinces. Traditionally, constitutionally, this is the responsibility of the province. Up until 1997 we used to do this. We've got to get back in the business of transit. It's good for the economy, good for the environment and something that makes eminent sense if we're going to save our air and save a lot of money. By doing this, we could also get the feds to match this two cents. Can you imagine? If we put in $300 million and the feds put in $300 million, we could do some great things in transit. So please join us in doing something that's good for the air, good for the economy and good for everybody in Ontario.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Further debate?

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the opposition day motion today. Once again our government is being asked to dedicate a specific tax to a specific program, and once again, for the benefit of our province, we must staunchly refuse to do so. Certainly, it doesn't seem to matter—when it comes to taxes, a Liberal always likes it. They really love to get involved with tax, spend and borrow. And here's another example where they want to nail down the two cents. I question the kind of research they've carried out on this. Is two cents per litre really going to be the amount of money that's needed by municipalities? Is it too much? Is it too little? I've heard of very little, if any, research on this. But I certainly welcome this opportunity to tell you why earmarking taxes is not a prudent course of action and not in the best interests of the people of the province. I also want to tell you what our government is doing to address the infrastructure needs of Ontario's communities.

But first things first: we're being asked to direct two cents from Ontario's gasoline tax to municipalities for investment in public transit. On the surface, I can follow some of the thinking. But this is a very simplistic response to a very complex issue indeed. Tax revenues currently are deposited into the province's consolidated revenue fund; some people refer to it as CRF, although there are other acronyms, CRFs, that refer to community reinvestment funds. It's then up to the members of this Legislature, who after all were indeed elected to represent the people of this province, to decide how that money is best allocated.

I think of a circumstance in the riding next door to mine, the riding of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. When a new hospital was being built in Bancroft, that particular member voted against each and every budget bill that was to provide funding for that hospital. I really have difficulty understanding why people would be voting against funding for a hospital in their own riding. But that's an example, and as I say, they must decide how that money is best allocated. Obviously that person did not want to have the hospital built in their riding.

Public transit, like other programs and services supported by the provincial government, is funded from the consolidated revenue fund. This method of program funding is flexible. It is efficient. It allows our government the best means available to address the changing needs of our province.

By not linking certain taxes with certain programs, we're better able to respond to the challenges inherent in governing a province as diverse and dynamic as Ontario. By having this flexibility we can compensate, for example, when the federal government, which is supposed to be coming through with 50% funding for health care, drops it all the way to 14%. More recently they dropped it right down to around 9% or 10% and it's back up to 14% now. That gave us the flexibility so we could fill the void the federal government was not filling. I understand from the Romanow report that this may actually go up to something like 25%. It's halfway to the original agreement, but that's a heck of a lot better than it is now. It points out that it gives that flexibility to the province to fill those gaps where the federal government is not prepared to properly look after health care in Ontario.

Earmarking money from the gasoline tax for municipalities to use on transit services would take money directly out of the consolidated revenue fund. This would leave the consolidated revenue fund with less money and less able to meet the funding requirements of other priority programs and services, such as health care and education. From some of the speeches we've heard from the opposition benches about health care and education, you would think they would want that flexibility there and would want the funding available for those programs. But obviously they've been successfully lobbied by municipal governments and they've bent to those pressures. This would leave the consolidated revenue fund in a weaker position to cover all the needs.

Earmarking taxes is also inadvisable for two opposite but equally negative reasons: it can provide more money to a program than is actually needed, or it can provide not enough money to fund the program properly. As I mentioned in my introduction, I haven't seen any research to indicate that two cents is the right amount that's needed there. Should it be five cents, one cent or a half cent? The Liberals have conveniently picked out of the air something that sounds good, like two cents, and plugged that in.

Overfunding a program is inefficient and grossly irresponsible fiscally. I am sure everyone in this House will agree that watching a surplus grow in one program area at the expense of another is completely unacceptable. Similarly, the potential that a program being funded through earmarked taxes may not receive adequate funding is a chance we will not take. The only way to ensure adequate funding for all program areas is to allocate money from the consolidated revenue fund. The allocation of funds is then reviewed each year as part of the budget process, at which time there is also a review of government priorities.

I'm impressed with that budget process, with the finance committee touring the country, with the Minister of Finance receiving a very large number of stakeholders. The amount of effort that goes into the preparation of the budget, the opportunity for stakeholders, the opportunity for opposition members, the opportunity to consult with the minister and his staff is, I think, exemplary for our government, and many other governments could follow this style.

This way of funding programs, including the annual review process, ensures government accountability. We will continue to fund the province's programs in this manner. It is flexible and it is fair. It is efficient and it is accountable. It ensures that the programs important to all Ontarians receive the funding required to provide the services on which we all depend.

In addition, the logistics of earmarking money from the gasoline tax to municipalities may require an overhaul of the current collection system and result in an undue administrative burden on Ontario's gasoline retailers. Currently, Ontario's gasoline tax is pre-collected by about 23 refineries or wholesalers on behalf of the retailers. This is the most administratively efficient method of collection. It offers the biggest bang for the buck. To be able to allocate taxes on a local or a regional level, taxes would have to be remitted directly by each of more than 3,000 retailers here in the province of Ontario. Just think about it: collecting taxes from about 23 refineries or wholesalers, or collecting taxes from over 3,000 retailers. It is clear which is the better, more efficient use of government resources.

Our current funding methods are the best way to meet the needs of Ontarians. This applies to programs and services in communities right across the province. In fact, our government is already making significant investments in communities all over Ontario. For one, we are committed to investing in the infrastructure on which our quality of life depends. I'm referring, of course, to infrastructure projects such as highways, transit, universities and colleges, hospitals, water systems and community facilities. Our infrastructure investments mean that the people of Ontario will have the services they need, where and when they need them.

To meet these investment objectives, our government created the Ontario SuperBuild Corp, which plays an important role by coordinating capital investments in Ontario and promoting new projects that build for the future. SuperBuild also identifies needed investments and develops new partnerships to ensure taxpayers' dollars go further.

Investments are extensive. SuperBuild is committed to investing at least $20 billion of public and private investments in infrastructure over five years. This is the largest infrastructure building program of its kind in the history of the province of Ontario. SuperBuild investments cross all sectors of the economy: renewing and building new hospitals, improving highways, expanding sports and recreational facilities, upgrades to water and waste water infrastructure, colleges and universities and more. These investments will ensure that our communities have the foundations to promote new growth and new jobs. Through SuperBuild and its partners, the province will stimulate local economies, improve the quality of life in our communities and create construction-related jobs in every area of the province. To date, SuperBuild and its partners have committed to invest over $13 billion in more than 3,300 projects.

In the budget of 2002, the Minister of Finance announced an allocation of $2.7 billion for infrastructure investments. These important investments include $1 billion for highways. Just as I mention $1 billion for highways, I think of the 401 going east from Toronto, going through the great riding of Northumberland. When I came to office in 1995, one of the big concerns in my area was crossover on 401, especially on snowy, slippery days. My phone used to light up with people concerned that there was not a centre barrier on the 401 through there. I'm pleased to report that almost all of that barrier has been completed. Not only that, we've six-laned 401 from 115 well into Northumberland. Several bridges are being changed and updated. There's just a tremendous amount of investment in Highway 401, which is good for all of eastern Ontario.

We have also invested some $342 million to build or expand hospitals and other health care infrastructures in communities across Ontario. I think in my riding of two hospitals: the Trenton Memorial hospital has been built, and over half of the construction is done on the Northumberland Health Care Centre for west Northumberland. Two hospitals in my riding are being built since we've taken office. From 1985 to 1995, there were only two hospitals built in all of Ontario. That is the kind of turnaround we're seeing.

We've committed to 20,000 long-term-care beds. The associate minister, the Honourable Dan Newman, is very familiar with this project. Two of those are in my riding: one in Cobourg, which is now open and operating, and another one under construction in the Port Hope area. What happened from 1985 to 1995? Not one single long-term-care bed was built in Ontario. Over and above that, many acute care beds were closed at that time. I think both parties can understand how that happened. I find it really difficult to understand, but that was what evolved.

Continuing, there's $143 million for the renewal and construction of courts and jails, and $135 million for projects to improve and modernize cultural and tourism facilities. Construction will begin this year on a number of major highway projects in the GTA to address gridlock and improve safety.

When I think about gridlock around Toronto, I can tell you in 1995 there was no gridlock coming into Toronto. I could drive into Toronto any time and there was no gridlock and there were no traffic problems. There were very few people going to work. That, in fact, is why there was no gridlock. We're now at 1.8 million net new jobs in Ontario created over the last seven years. I think that's pretty remarkable. No wonder there's some gridlock. With all these people going to work, it's not surprising. Do we need to develop more highways to accommodate them? Absolutely. You look at five people going to work, and one of those five got one of the net new jobs since we took office. That's why we have some gridlock. When I, for one, get caught in it, I reflect on what has happened with our government in the last seven years and I don't object all that much to getting caught in that gridlock. I see these people driving home with a job. One day they went home and said, "Hey, guess what? I got the job." Some 1.8 million people went home and said that during the last seven years. Their kids are proud of them, that they have a job. They're proud of the fact that mom and dad are going to work. That's the kind of pride that's inculcated in some of our homes, because 1.8 million people are now working who wouldn't have been working if we had continued in the same vein we were in in the early 1990s and the late 1980s.

I got a little sidetracked here, but we've also moved forward with upgrades to our major highways. This includes improvements to Highways 7, 400, 401, 427, the QEW. I just reflect back and think about the condition of highways when we took office: potholes. The Honourable Al Palladini was out there, committed to filling every pothole if he had to do it himself. There were stories about potholes across this province. They were phenomenal. Even the CBC had a humorous program about the size of the potholes they were reporting from all across Ontario. Do we see those potholes on 400-series highways, the ones the province is looking after? Not at all. As a matter of fact, I have a daughter and son-in-law who lived in Sioux Lookout. Driving from Dryden to Sioux Lookout, they hit one pothole so badly that it not only ruined two tires, it ruined the two rims as well on that side of the vehicle. That was just one pothole that was left there by previous governments. That's the kind of thing we took over: phenomenal potholes. I just can't believe how terrible those potholes were. But now that is a beautifully paved road. I'm sure you can agree with that and realize the excellent road that is there now from Dryden to Sioux Lookout.

As part of Ontario's Smart Growth strategy, the province is also preparing Ontario's transportation network to support economic and population growth expected over the next 15 years. There will be a new highway connecting with Highway 427, north of Highway 7. We'll also be extending Highway 404, establishing a Bradford bypass, and Highway 407 east to Highway 35.

Our government has been listening to Ontarians making key infrastructure investments. The beneficiaries of these investments are the people of this province, in every community. We remain committed to their needs. To meet the challenges of the future, our government is focussing on many areas.

Also, to help boost efficiency in transportation and the economy in the north, we'll continue with major highway projects in the north this year, including highway rehabilitation and safety projects, major expansions and four-laning projects on Highways 11, 17 and 69.

We will also support municipal road infrastructure, including investments through the connecting link program, the Ontario small town and rural development initiative, affectionately known as OSTAR, and the millennium partnerships initiatives.

To meet the challenges of the future, our government is focussing on three priority areas: growth, fiscal responsibility and accountability. Mr Speaker, I think you've heard these terms on many occasions. It has become a hallmark of our government: growth and job creation; fiscal responsibility, something that certainly didn't happen from 1985 to 1995; and accountability, totally lacking during that lost decade. We will continue to provide the people of this province with the programs and services they need, including transit and infrastructure, in a manner true to our priorities. This means focussing on efficiencies, prudence and accountability.

I look forward to the day Highway 407 is extended east and reaches Highways 35 and 115 and seeing the growth that will evolve in eastern Ontario because of that. The federal government made a really big mistake some 30 years ago when they backed down on putting a new airport in at Pickering. It did a tremendous amount of harm to east-central Ontario and maybe all of eastern Ontario. I'm sure if they could have stood up to the public and what was being said at the time and put an airport in there like they should have, eastern Ontario would be flourishing far more. Now that we have to come through with highways, six-laning Highway 401 out into eastern Ontario and also bringing out Highway 407 to Highways 35 and 115, I think that will help to develop eastern Ontario. I don't think there's any question.

We believe the course we're on is indeed the best way to ensure that Ontario remains the best place in North America in which to live, invest and raise a family.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): Holy moly. If ever there was a better opportunity for me to contrast myself and the vision of my party, a forward-looking and progressive view about Ontario, with a speech, it was that one, the "Pave it and they will come" speech. That member over there spent his time not only taking credit and celebrating gridlock and all of the environmental, economic and social costs associated with it, but he suggested that the way to get ourselves out of gridlock in urban areas is to build more highways. That is some of the most stale, out-of-date, backward thinking that I've ever heard in my life. It should come as absolutely no surprise that it comes from the member for Northumberland. That has become his hallmark in this place.

It seems like just a few weeks ago that I was here, a newly minted MPP, hearing the throne speech from the other side, saying—I see the Speaker turning down his speaker—hearing the speech from the other side. “We’re not the government,” they proclaimed. And still we heard that they were going to fix it. And then we heard a 25-minute speech from a member strongly standing up in favour of the status quo, which has made sure that in our province the government of Ontario has operated as if it was the custodian of all knowledge, all common sense and all capacity to deal with problems.

He forgot to tell you another part of the story, and that’s the part that whenever they run into something they don’t quite like, that doesn’t quite work for them, they download it on to municipalities.

In 1995, when this government was elected, two things happened that I think are quite interesting in this debate. Firstly, the city of Toronto was selected by Fortune magazine as the best city in the world in which to do business, and in that same year, if my memory serves me correctly, the Toronto Transit Commission was given awards for the efficiency and quality of the operation of their transit system. Now, seven or eight years later, these guys, by their sheer lack of commitment to the city of Toronto and to transit in the city of Toronto, have diminished the quality of life for Torontonians, have made the transit service that we used to hold up as a shining example of one of the qualities of our cities now something that is falling into disrepair and is becoming much less attractive to so many people.

In the face of that and in the face of the kinds of costs associated with gridlock, like the $2 billion a year that the Ontario Trucking Association estimates it costs to move goods just through the GTA—$2 billion a year being paid by you and by me because of gridlock—and in the face of the evidence from countless people who have said that their lives have become just-in-time lives where they have been deprived of spending time with their family and their friends, engaged in taking kids to soccer practice, and in the face of the toll of automobile pollution on the quality of the air that we breathe, we stand as Liberals and proclaim commitments because we believe there are better solutions out there.

One of those is our commitment that we will invest in public transit across the province. Why? Because public transit reduces pollution, commuting times and gridlock. By allocating two cents of the existing provincial gas tax to municipalities, we will double the existing provincial investment in public transit. That is a commitment to be applauded and to be celebrated and to be supported, because it’s long overdue and it’s absolutely necessary.

The future progress of our province, and especially of our urban regions, is absolutely dependent upon it.

Let’s talk for a second about urban regions, because they are increasingly important in the economic context of our province and, indeed, of the industrialized world. We know that from the standpoint of creation of economic opportunity, urban regions are where it’s at. How many times have we heard about Toronto, the engine of the Canadian economy? Yet these guys are willing to see it choke on its own success. They’re willing to celebrate gridlock. If I can think of a more compelling reason in the context of a debate around funding for public transit to support the Liberal position and to reject these guys, it’s because they celebrate gridlock.

So for any of you who are ever faced with circumstance where you are bumper to bumper, where you are moving along at a rate of progress to be compared with glaciers and their growth or shrinkage, if that’s how you’re feeling, then remember that the member for Northumberland, in a 25-minute speech, stood up, took credit for gridlock and suggested that was something to be celebrated. That is evidence of the extent to which these guys have got to go. They’ve got to go because they’re happy to see our urban areas clogged and choking on their own success.

According to the Ontario Medical Association, 1,900 Ontarians die each and every year as a result of the air they breathe here in our province. What do we get in response from the government? A celebration of gridlock. That’s what it has come down to here in Ernie Eves’s Ontario. Because the government opposite is part of a carbon addiction. They’re addicted to carbon.

I don’t want to give away security considerations, but one only needs to look at the chosen vehicle of the Premier of Ontario. It is a land yacht. It must have 12 cylinders to get those big tires moving. I can’t imagine what it does in terms of pollution, but I certainly know what message it sends to people all around Ontario when Ernie Eves jumps out of his government-paid-for vehicle. It’s big enough for an army.

Mr Smitherman: I’m being heckled by a minister opposite, but these vehicles are not in the same class. One has a minivan and one has an SUV that could only be characterized as a land yacht. Its towing capacity would haul all the dead carcasses that will be left in that party after the next election.

I want to close by saying that I am awfully proud to be part of an opposition party that has as a leader a man named Dalton McGuinty who is prepared in advance of an election to put on the record the clear commitments we are making; and also because he’s a man who, in his commitment to transfer two cents of the gasoline tax to municipalities, shows and makes a commitment to an understanding that municipalities, our municipal partners, play an important role in creating the quality of life that fuels economic opportunity for Ontarians.

As opposed to these guys who trust nobody, we stand proud of our commitments to do like other sophisticated jurisdictions have done—in Vancouver, in Montreal and in American centres—and that is to take some portion of this gasoline tax and transfer it to municipalities for the purpose of helping to provide for an enhancement to public transit. That's the Liberal Party view, and the opposition view has been forward by the government of the day. What do they do? They celebrate gridlock. That's your choice, Ontarians.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I'm very pleased to rise in this debate and applaud Mr Colle and the Ontario Liberal Party for coming up with this idea and notion that two cents of our gasoline tax should be contributed to local municipalities, so that in effect that money can be used to do something about the transit situation, not only in Toronto—we all know we have a major problem here. All one has to do is sit on the Don Valley, either coming from or going to work. It used to be during rush hour. I can remember when I lived here 30 years ago you had a rush hour of about two hours per day in the morning and two hours per day in the afternoon. Now you literally have rush hour, particularly along some of our major routes like the Gardiner Expressway and the Don Valley Parkway for, let's say, 16 to 18 hours per day. That's totally unacceptable. All one has to think about is the fact that 1,900 people die annually because of the tremendous amount of pollution we have around us, and most of that pollution is caused by cars.

It's time to do something about it. It's time to come up with new initiatives. The old ways of doing things are no longer acceptable in the 21st century. The first thing we have to do is something that municipalities have been asking for, have been crying for, for the last 25 years that I'm aware of. Let's help them with the ability to get some extra money by giving them, for additional tax revenue, two cents of every litre of gasoline that is sold. That's a start, and it's a start that is absolutely necessary. I know that smaller municipalities will be quite thankful for that. It's basically a new source of revenue for them.

We all know that our municipalities are starving from the point of view that there simply isn't any methodology to get new revenues to them. They only have two ways of doing it. They can either increase the property tax base or they can increase the user fees—or establish new user fees. One of the major things this government did, about five or six years ago, that was very detrimental to most municipalities that have a transit system in this province, is when they basically said, "We are not going to fund transit at all any more." You know, they love to talk about political parties flip-flopping, but you talk about a flip-flop that took place at that point in time. Remember, at one time they said, "Absolutely, no, we're getting out of the transit business. It's up to you, local municipalities." And what happened three or four years later, when they realized that that was totally unsustainable? They came back and said, "Well, I guess we are going to support transit now."

We in this party are saying we can go one step better than that. We want the local municipalities to make the decisions as to how they're going to make transit work for them, whether they're large or small. The way to do it is to give those local municipalities extra sources of revenue, and the way to do that is to give them two cents per litre of all gasoline that is sold within that municipality.

I too heard the member from Northumberland earlier today, and I couldn't believe my ears when he said that we should actually celebrate the fact that people here in the greater Toronto area spend about an hour and a half to two hours per day involved in gridlock. That's totally, totally unacceptable.

Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party have come up with a plan, and that plan is Growing Strong Communities. That's really what it's all about. We live in a wonderful country. We live in a large province. But when you get right down to it, the vast majority of the people in this province live in their own communities, and the quality of life that they enjoy is basically a result of the communities that they've decided to live in and the amenities they find and the friendships they find in those communities and the various associations they make in those communities. So what we're talking about is making communities stronger, allowing communities the ability to invest in areas such as transit, so that those communities will become the better for it and so the people who live in those communities can lead a healthier, more sustainable lifestyle and have a greater quality of life. That's what it's all about. That's what we should be all about.

I think where government comes in is to sort of equalize the ability to get part of that higher quality of life. Government should be about equalizing the ability to get an education and to get access to the health care system. I've often said it isn't the better-off in our society who need government; they do quite well. They don't need the protection of the government. It's the more vulnerable in our society who need the help. This is another example of that. We all know that the vast majority of the transit users around the province are people who are basically from the middle to the lower economic scales, and we've got to make it easier for them to get around, to get about. They have just as much right to a high quality of life as everybody else in this province.

So I applaud Dalton McGuinty. I applaud our policy people for coming up with a plan that calls for stronger communities. One way to do that is by giving some dedicated tax money to those local communities so they can build the transit systems so we can get some of those cars off the road where they're causing, quite often, a fair amount of pollution.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I of course am speaking in favour of the motion that's before the House this afternoon. I think it makes a lot of sense. I think it is what municipalities have been looking for, municipalities who have been struggling over the last few years to meet their obligations as they relate to public transit.

We always think of the one in metropolitan Toronto, which is the largest transit system, but each one of us in our own community that has a city size or a major town size has a transit system as well, and they struggle from time to time because of lack of funding from the provincial government.

I think what is contained in Growing Strong Communities, the Ontario Liberal plan for clean, safe communities that work, offers a lot of good suggestions on improving our communities, on making them stronger, on making them cleaner. I think the part that relates to gridlock, to transportation, there are a lot of good suggestions in there.

The gasoline tax is collected, and there's a presumption on the part of people who pay the gasoline tax that it's going back into the field of transportation. Most people probably think it goes into roads and into the administration of the Ministry of Transportation. But it goes to help fund public transportation as well, and that's important.

The municipalities have said, "Look, we're having a tough time. We've had a lot of responsibilities that cost a lot of money downloaded to us. We would like to be able to access some other funds so we can devote them to transit."

Now, this is not something that the provincial government would be transferring to municipalities so that the Tories and the local council could take the money and give it away in tax cuts, as the provincial Tories do, my friend from Scarborough would know. When they get money from the federal government, what they do is feed their tax cuts with it. They simply cut their own portion and give the money away in tax cuts. That's why he, as Associate Minister of Health and Long-term Care, would know that any federal government is going to be reluctant simply to transfer more funds to the provincial government, knowing that on so many occasions they take the money and give it away in tax cuts. That's what they really want if for.

So, just as the federal government should spend directly, just as the federal government should spend more on health care and spend it directly on health care, and not put it into your hands so you can give it away in tax cuts, that's why it's important when this transfer of funds goes to municipalities that there's an assurance that it's going to be spent on public transportation and not simply squirreled away so that they can brag at election time that they have no tax increase.

If they want to add additional funds for the purpose of health care, if it's a provincial government getting federal money or, in this case, the municipal level of government and the local transit commission, they should be getting it to have additional service, improvement in services, enhancement of service and updating of equipment. For instance, we want them to purchase vehicles which are as environmentally benign as possible, not those which burn the worst kind of fuel and give the most emissions.

We want to ensure that we have some help for those who are disabled so that the new vehicles are able to accommodate those who are disabled. I know in my own municipality of St Catharines, the St Catharines Transit Commission has been purchasing vehicles where you can have wheelchair access. That makes all kinds of sense.

So public transit is a good option for people. It doesn't mean that everybody who owns a vehicle is never going to drive it. However, it does give people an option to use public transportation when it's viable and when it's reasonable.

We, for instance, in the Niagara Peninsula, would like to see an enhanced train service coming to St Catharines. Does that mean we would expect the GO Transit line that comes to Mississauga? No. There's a huge population in Mississauga; there are a lot of people who commute into Toronto. We understand that. What we would like to see would be a situation where we have more trains that are going into Toronto and coming back from Toronto, so that people would have that option. My friend from Niagara Falls who was here this afternoon would want to see that so people can enjoy the tourism of Niagara Falls, because the Niagara Parks Commission has its own transit system, as well. It's a people mover that is very useful for people who are enjoying the sights and sounds of Niagara Falls.

So the two cents of the existing gasoline tax—it's not an increased tax; it's the existing gasoline tax—makes all kinds of sense. I know that municipal leaders are going to want it, particularly those who are pro public transit.

Public transit systems have come under pressure because, as you will recall, the Harris-Eves government eliminated all provincial financial support in 1998. The capital infrastructure was the hardest hit as systems were forced to defer bus replacements, infrastructure renewal and other refurbishment needs.

I recall that when I was chair of the St Catharines Transit Commission, we received 75% in capital funding from the province and the operating funding was generously assisted by the provincial government as well. So we were able to have a service that people could access, whether they were people who simply did not want to use their vehicle on a particular day or those who didn't have access to vehicles. It saves on the roads and the maintenance of roads to have this. It improves the environment for our areas and it's just good sense to be able to do this. I'm glad it is contained in this document that Dalton McGuinty released the other day that talked about a lot of these issues that will improve everything for us.

I know the whip will tell me when my time is expiring, because I want to share it with others, but I did want to mention the transit passes. Free parking passes are not taxed as an employee benefit, so we believe it is unfair that employees who instead receive a free transit pass do not receive the same benefit. Obviously, that's a change in the taxation system that should be made. It makes a lot of sense. I'm glad it's contained in the proposals of the Ontario Liberal Party.

We should also work with the federal government to make transit passes a non-taxable benefit so that people who receive passes from their employers will no longer have to pay taxes on this benefit. That makes all kinds of sense. A pass, a ticket that would take you throughout the greater Toronto area would be useful as well. It doesn't mean the price is going to be the same if you are going from Pickering to Mississauga, but it does mean that you can use one ticket and that it's going to be much more efficient.

I think there are a lot of good ideas in this. I hope the House will approve of this resolution this afternoon in a multi-partisan or non-partisan way, because something like this deserves the support of all members of this Legislature. I certainly lend my support to it, and I know that the constituents I represent will be very enthusiastic to see this implemented. I welcome the government stealing this as one of their own policies, as they have on so many different occasions.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I appreciate the opportunity to join in and add a bit of a Hamilton perspective to this. Many of the overall views I would express are similar to those of the previous speaker, my friend from St. Catharines, particularly—I'm going to pull this out of what he said as a good starting point for me—the whole notion that whenever the feds do something, often the provincial government of the day merely takes that money as money they now don't have to spend and just deducts it from their expenditures without even so much as a thank you very much. The lot of the government in power is better, but it hasn't done a darn thing on the ground where all of this matters. What has happened, of course, is that this has been going on for so many years and through so many administrations that we now find ourselves with municipalities that are dying.

The road out cannot be paved with just good intentions. At some point there has got to be an injection of new money into all the business of municipalities, not just infrastructure. A darn good starting point is an acknowledgement that your policy will be: if the feds decide to go ahead with a major investment, which we can only hope they do, you're not going to do anything other than ensure that the money, if you're involved in the process through partnerships, is flowed straight through to the municipalities.

My understanding is that the federal government is looking at ways they can bypass provincial governments. It doesn't play very well in Quebec, and that's understandable, but for a lot of us, with the history of what's happened in the past, we wish them well because there are a lot of municipalities that would be quite prepared to sit down and make obligations with regard to where this money would go and where it would have the greatest impact on the greatest number of citizens within any given municipality, without creating a cookie-cutter, made at Queen's Park, that says virtually all municipipalities are the same, and therefore the programs we will fund will be the same for all of you.

It doesn't work that way. We can't afford for the federal and provincial governments to continue to beat up on municipalities. Government members may not like that terminology. You can phrase it as nicely as you want and pick all the flowery language you want, but at the end of the day municipalities are totally hamstrung in terms of their ability to address the challenges that face them.

The cutbacks in the transportation system we have in Hamilton for our disabled, DARTS, is getting to the point where there are people in Hamilton who are waiting weeks to get out of the house, to get out of their apartment, to go and take care of necessary business. The whole idea of having a parallel transportation system was to ensure that the special needs our disabled citizens have vis-à-vis 'the scooters, wheelchairs and other assistive devices would be accommodated in a way that would allow that parallel system to provide, as closely as possible, public transit the same as everyone else in the community gets. We are so far away from that in Hamilton, as my friend and colleague from Hamilton Mountain will attest, and I suspect it's the same right across the province.

That's not even beginning to speak to the broader issue of urban transit as a whole, at a time when our federal counterpart, as we speak, is debating the issue of Kyoto and how we as a nation and the provinces therein and the municipalities therein are able to meet these targets. There are so many reasons why taking care of environmental issues on a community-by-community basis makes sense that it really is almost a crime that we're not there now. I mention Kyoto because I'm hoping that will provide some impetus for this government, even though you oppose it. It looks like the feds are going to support it, and I hope they do. I understand the questions marks and challenges that are there, but I also live in a community where the environment and pollution are a top priority. We have young people who are finding themselves diseased with asthma at rates way beyond other parts of the country. We've got cancer rates that can only be addressed if senior levels of government provide their legal structure, but the weight of government in terms of enforcement and also the funds to do it. We can't do it alone. You can't tell us to deal with all the pollution problems that, to use the obvious examples, Dofasco and Stelco create and say, "It's your problem. You've got to deal with it." We can't do it in one fell swoop, simply because the elimination of all those jobs means our local economy would collapse in a blink.

Yet it's important to say that some of the strongest proponents of doing something are the United Steelworkers of America. So this is not about jobs versus the environment; this has got to be about jobs and the environment. And we can do it. Again in my home town of Hamilton, there are great examples of new technologies that have created jobs by virtue of the fact that they're cleaning up the environment. That's a win for all of us. But you can't leave us stranded alone to try to deal with this.

That's why the NDP, prior to the official opposition announcement of two cents, had come up with a three-cent. I'm not going to play a bidding war here: who's the best party, at two cents or three cents or a nickel? To me, the important debate today ought to be the absolute priority to transfer more money from the senior levels of government, in this case the provincial government, to municipalities and to provide for infrastructure.

Hamilton is a classic example. Growth is a priority, an absolute priority in terms of our generating the revenue we need to meet the challenges of today as well as the future. At the same time, Hamilton is a very green community and becoming more green all the time. The whole notion of stopping urban sprawl is important to Hamiltonians. But you can't leave us with this dilemma and leave us there all alone. We can't, as a province, say, "We've got to do something about urban sprawl," because we're much too quickly losing, extinguishing, valuable farmland, growing land that we're not going to get back once it's paved over, which is why the Red Hill Creek Expressway is such a problem. Once gone, it's gone forever. But if we recognize that the provincial government is not going to allow, nor do we want, municipalities to generate growth from sprawl, then we've lost the traditional way of raising and accelerating revenues in a local economy: sprawl. If you take that off the option page, now we're left with a whole new dilemma in terms of trying to find new revenue, revenue that is not there today and that we can plan for and invest for and encourage for the future to pay for all the challenges that, quite frankly, it has to be said, have been exacerbated by the policies of this government over the last seven years.

Our homelessness problem is greater than it has ever been, certainly since before you took over seven years ago. The lack of affordable housing is worse than it was when you took over seven years ago. The lack of social services and support services: we said to you that over time these things are going to show themselves, and the first place they're going to show themselves is the individual who doesn't have the supports he or she needs for a decent quality of life. Then it spreads to their family. Then it spreads into neighbourhoods, and you start to see what becomes, quite frankly, a decaying community going in the wrong direction, with no tools available to change that outcome.

So if we've eliminated sprawl as a tool, a mechanism of growth, now we're left with investment in infrastructure that's going to create the kinds of jobs and investment we need in the future. You sure can't put it all on property tax. Yes, Hamiltonians, like everybody else in the province, are prepared to pay their fair share of property tax for a quality of life within their municipality. Absolutely. Nobody's asking for somebody else to pay the bills. But we can't do it through property tax alone and we can't do it through user fees alone. It doesn't work, particularly in communities—large urban centres, older centres—where there are real challenges, serious family challenges, fiscal challenges, health and safety challenges and, yes, environmental challenges.

Our goal as a provincial Parliament should be that municipalities not only succeed in the future and grow strong and create a good quality of life for all of their citizens, but that it should be self-sustaining. But you've got to help municipalities get there. The province has got to play the leadership role in saying, "We're here to help." I know that sounds rather trite, but that's a revolutionary thought from where we have been the last seven years. You have not been there to help. You have made things worse.

I think there's lots of capacity for municipal governments to assume a lot of these responsibilities that have now been placed in front of them. I don't think that's such a bad thing in and of itself. What is bad is to hand off those areas of responsibility to municipal governments, using the provincial government's argument that the government closest to the people is the best government and they make the best decisions etc—I have no problem with all of that as a governance structure for municipalities. But what you cannot do is what you have been doing: downloading responsibilities and not giving the municipalities, that local government, the money they need to do the job. You can't do that. Yes, it makes you look good. The ministers all stand up and say, "Well, we cut taxes by this amount. We've reduced the deficit by this amount," and you brag about it. Overall, you may look fine in terms of talking about how fiscally responsible you are, but look at the damage that has been done on the way to your getting there: underfund hospitals, underfund school systems, underfund municipalities, give municipalities more things that they're now responsible for but don't give them the money to deal with it. You can only run that string out for so long, and that's where we are.

That's why, to me, the important thing we're debating today is not the details of how we get there but a commitment that every party has to make going into the next election that it will be a priority to actually be a partner and be supportive and work with municipalities so that we can create the quality of life that people are entitled to and that, quite frankly, this province can provide. We're still the richest province in this entire rich nation. We're one of the wealthiest states on the entire planet, and we are the biggest, strongest, wealthiest province within that, yet we have more poor people and more middle-class people worrying about poverty than we had when you began this odyssey. It has to stop.

If the federal government of the day is prepared, and I don't care what political stripe it is, to start talking to municipalities in a new context of a new partnership—either direct, one on one between the federal government and municipalities or, as we've done in the past, with the three, the municipality, the province and the feds, fine—but a recognition by the federal government that they can't stand back any longer and hold up the Constitution and say, "It's not our responsibility. Gee, it's a shame that municipalities are dying out there. It's a shame those local economies are slowly grinding and grinding away. But you know, there's nothing we can do. Traditionally, that's not our role"—not acceptable. It looks like we're at the point where there may be a sea change with regard to that and it should be encouraged and, yes—I'll say it—even applauded.

I was there in Hamilton in the front row when former Minister Paul Martin gave his speech at FCM, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. I think it was the first time a federal Liberal cabinet minister had me willingly standing on my feet, applauding. It was music to my ears: a federal Minister of Finance talking about the federal government's responsibility to municipalities, that they are about to recognize that things have to change and they're going to look at stepping in with real money. Unfortunately there isn't such a happy ending, because that guy got fired 48 hours later. It remains to be seen how much of that gets back on the agenda.

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): He'll be back.

Mr Christopherson: I hear some of my Liberal friends next to me saying, "He'll be back." Well, maybe; maybe not. There are a number of political lifetimes in that calendar time frame that's there. What I care about is that whoever ends up in the Prime Minister's office is prepared to make those commitments. That's what matters.

This Legislature needs to take every opportunity, and it's tougher sometimes when the government of the day doesn't buy in, but we have an obligation. And do you know what? It really doesn't matter whether we're talking environment, transportation, health care, schooling, social services, the arts community, the industrial sector, light or medium industrial, high tech; it doesn't matter. Whatever you're talking about in terms of our economy, if it's not working on the local level, guess what, folks? It ain't working. On the ground, it has to be in somebody's municipality.

In winding up, let me just conclude where I began, which is that we need the buy-in from the provincial government and the federal government more than we ever have in the history of this province, to recognize that the larger municipalities that have been created through amalgamation, the downloading of services and responsibilities to municipalities and, quite frankly, just the evolution that's happening all around the world—take a look at Europe; take a look at some of the American states, the large cities.

In many ways, we really are coming back to a modern version of the city state. That's a good thing. We're way beyond the need for a paternalistic view from Queen's Park or Ottawa toward municipal governments, but you just can't hand them all that responsibility, wash your hands, walk away and say, "Well, that's it. We're done. You're on your own."

If you want to see that proof, take a look at any of our cities and where they've been over the last seven years: the property tax increases, the service cuts and, quite frankly, the wage demand battles that have ensued in many of our communities. I know in Hamilton we've had them and it broke my heart to see the transit drivers, the HSR drivers, and the city council battling, when they weren't the cause of the problem. The cause of the problem was Queen's Park. There wasn't enough money in the municipal coffers to sit down and negotiate a fair agreement. I don't believe it was that the city councillors didn't want to negotiate one; I think it's that they didn't have the funds because they were trying to be responsible.

User fees: there are people in our cities now who are not using services that they used to be able to avail themselves of a number of years ago, because they can't afford them now. If you're talking about a working middle-class family that can afford it, that is disposable income that is now being spent on a public service that they once had and their benefit was a little bit of trickle-down tax cut, because we all know that the bigger the money you made, the more money you walked away with to the bank in terms of these tax cuts. That trade-off was not a fair trade-off.

Higher user fees, fewer services, communities divided, with citizens fighting each other, a deterioration in the quality-of-life measurements that matter to all of us, particularly toward our children: that's where we are. There is a chance to change that, but it requires hearing something different from the government than what we've heard over the last seven years. If the backbenchers are just going to stand up and make the same old tired speeches that they've made before, we're in a lot of trouble. We need to hear something different, something positive, something that gives municipalities real hope that they're going to get the tools and the support they need to deal with the ever-growing challenges that are in front of us.

I might remind the government again that, assuming Kyoto passes, those challenges are going to increase. Now's the time to step up to the plate and say things are going to be different, because if it's the same-old, same-old, we're in trouble. To that extent, we will be supporting the resolution in front of us because it speaks to these very issues that are so critical to all our municipalities across the province.

Mr Caplan: I am very pleased to speak to the resolution standing in the name of my colleague Mr Colle, from Eglinton-Lawrence.

For the information of all the members here, Mr Colle is not a johnny-come-lately to this. As a past chair of the Toronto Transit Commission, he knows what he speaks about with the need for investment in transit for reliable, sustainable, stable funding sources for public transit, not only here in the great city of Toronto, but across the entire province of Ontario. It is something that has been sorely lacking.

Don't worry, I say to the residents of Don Valley East and of Ontario, there is a leader in Ontario with a plan. Dalton McGuinty came out just yesterday with his Growing Strong Communities platform. A big component of it is a true commitment to public transit. Two cents of gas tax revenue—this is Growing Strong Communities, the second in a series of platform announcements by Dalton McGuinty. It's very exciting. It's something that municipalities have been calling for.

I am going to read a little bit from the platform as I get into my remarks, but I want to talk specifically about what some other people are saying about what's needed for transit investment and infrastructure, what's needed for sustainable, reliable, stable funding.

I want to start with a report that came out earlier this year from the Toronto-Dominion Bank, certainly not a traditional source, talking about cities and urban transit, housing, all the infrastructure that's required. They recognize very clearly that cities are the fundamental building block for our economy. They make some absolutely fascinating comments in their report. I heard one of the members of the government speaking earlier about the fact that Mr Colle and Dalton McGuinty hadn't done their homework. Nothing could be further from the truth. It seems like the government members at least are not reading any of the research, are not listening to the experts from TD Bank or other places I will be quoting.

This is what the TD Bank had to say: "Municipalities need access to new sources of funds." It said, "What cities really need is access to an ongoing revenue source." You can provide it from the federal government, from the provincial government, from a combination of both or give municipalities access to others.

They go on to say, "Federal and provincial governments have downgraded programs and services to municipalities, so they would be doing less with less," but they're doing more and more and the revenue sources have not followed to enable cities to keep up, to enable cities to keep their taxes down but also to provide the necessary services and the necessary infrastructure that we need to have a strong, growing, vibrant economy in our cities across Ontario and across Canada.

This is not simply an indictment of one level of government or another, but this has been happening for a long period of time and it's about time that somebody showed leadership, like Dalton McGuinty, and addressed this very critical problem.

It's quite true that other jurisdictions, our competitors around the world, are investing in their cities and in their communities and in necessary infrastructure. There are several examples in the American states, in England and in other places that are cited in the TD Bank report. They say that one of the greatest threats to the quality of life and to our economic viability is the erosion of city infrastructure. "Until recently," they say, "the relative youth of Canadian cities meant that the pressure on Canadian governments to reinvest in infrastructure was relatively modest compared to their US and European counterparts. But it is becoming evident to most Canadians that their cities are showing distinct signs of strain. Merely maintaining existing roads, bridges, transit systems and other types of infrastructure is not enough—modernization is also required."

It is true that in Ontario the Harris-Eves government withdrew completely from public transit, from supporting not only public transit infrastructure but public transit operating, and that has been contrary to the advice of experts like those at the Toronto-Dominion Bank.

They talk about some of the tools municipalities have available to them to finance infrastructure and ongoing programs. They say this: "Property tax not right for the job." There our four main problems with it. "First, it's based on assessable property values, and hence, has only a weak relation to ability to pay. Second, its regressive nature.... Third, the commercial property portion of the tax impedes competitiveness. And fourth, there may be extended periods during which property taxes do not rise in tandem with the cost of cities," doing business and providing "programs and services."

What do they recommend? You wouldn't be surprised if this measure we're debating here today, standing in the name of my colleague Mike Colle from Eglinton-Lawrence, is precisely the nature of what folks like the TD Bank recommend.

I'll quote from their document, "The federal or provincial government could hand over a share of the receipts from a tax in their own arsenal (ie, personal income tax, excise tax, sales tax) to municipalities. Although an arrangement of this sort is effectively a grant, there is one important distinction that makes it more attractive. In contrast to outright grants, this form of revenue-sharing is funded by a specific revenue source, and hence, whereby cities would fluctuate one for one with changes in an incoming stream. As such it is both less likely to become a drain on federal and provincial finances in difficult economic times—and it is more likely to provide a reliable source of funding than an outright grant, which is funded by an unspecified source."

So this is reliable, it's stable, it's sustainable and it's the right thing to do. This is kind of advice we're getting from the TD Bank. In fact, they go on, when they talk about excise and sales tax. The pro is that it's excellent, that it's accountable, that there's sufficient growth, that it's reliable and it's equitable. On a scale of 0 to 4 in their survey, it's rated as a 4, the highest recommendation they have. This is the way to go in order to fund infrastructure, in order to fund transit operating, and that's what Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals are committed to doing.

Other folks are commenting on this type of a proposal. Professor Peter Tomlinson from the University of Toronto, one of the leading urban economists said: "Stable funding is essential to maintain our transit infrastructure. Mr McGuinty would dedicate part of the gasoline tax to this purpose—certainly a step in the right direction, and in line with what other provinces are doing." That's from Peter Tomlinson, an urban economist at U of T.

But there are others. A couple of months ago, back in June, the Toronto Board of Trade issued a paper called Strong City, Strong Nation. They talked about the need for infrastructure investment in the city of Toronto and, by extension, to all cities. When they surveyed their members they said that providing infrastructure—transit, housing, all of those kinds of things—was a top priority, even above tax reform, for their members. Because the Toronto Board of Trade understands that to be economically viable and prosperous, to capitalize on the advantages that we have right now, we have to have the proper infrastructure in place. And we don't have that right now because we have an absence of leadership.

I've got to tell you that Premier Eves has done absolutely nothing to cure this kind of a problem. All he has suggested in Bill 198 is that we engage more debt; what he's calling opportunity bonds. That's just more debt for cities and future tax increases, quite frankly. It's not the way to go. What the Toronto Board of Trade is saying is that government should provide "greater access to gas tax revenues by cities to support transit enhancements." They go on to say in their report, Strong City, Strong Nation, "Occupying existing tax room is the preferred solution as it mitigates the potential for the overall tax burden to increase."

So we've got TD Bank, we've got Peter Tomlinson and we've got the Toronto Board of Trade all saying what Dalton McGuinty and the Liberals are saying. This is the kind of leadership we need to maintain our infrastructure. This is the kind of leadership that's required to make sure we're an excellent place to invest, to raise a family, to grow, and to cure the problems of gridlock that we're seeing.

This is a critical problem for this Legislature to tackle: our cities, the fundamental building blocks of our economic prosperity. There are many more challenges that we face and that are addressed in this Growing Strong Communities platform. I'm delighted, absolutely delighted, to have an opportunity to speak in favour of this one particular measure. It's time. It's needed. It's what real leadership is all about.

In fact, I would challenge any member on the government bench to tell us, if you don't like this plan, what is your plan? They can't answer that question. They have no plan. They have no policies—absolutely nothing that I've heard or seen to date for education, for health care, for cities, for transit, for housing. They have no plan. They have no policies.

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): Hydro.

Mr Caplan: I say to the member from Perth, you don't want to be talking about hydro, my friend. You guys have flip-flopped and bungled that file more than just about anybody has in this province. So, my friend, I wouldn't be talking about hydro today in this House at all. You ought to be ashamed of yourself, how you bungled the market completely. It's the people of Ontario who are going to pay the price for your incompetence.

But there is a leader. Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals are committed to solving the problems of what you fixed, but also taking it to another level. We're going to do it. Whenever Ernie Eves has the guts to call an election, you believe me, it's going to happen. I want to turn the floor over to some of my other colleagues to speak today, but I'm proud to support this measure.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I wasn't going to go there because I thought we'd come into this debate just saying that we support the motion because we believe it's a step in the right direction, but after the comments from my good friend talking about Tories flip-flopping, I just can't resist the opportunity to point out that for the masters of flip-flopping to be calling the Tories flip-floppers I think is a little bit hard to take. I didn't want to let that go by without making sure that people understand that the Liberals under Dalton McGuinty have been flipping and flopping on all kinds of issues.

We watched the hydro debate unfold over the last couple of weeks. First of all, our good friend Mr McGuinty says, "Oh, I'm with the workers and I'm with not privatizing and opening the market." Then it was, "Oh, no, I'm opposed." Then he was in favour, then he was opposed, and on the day he finally said unequivocally, "I oppose the opening of the market and if I was the former government," says Mr McGuinty, he would not revisit this issue. He sent out a fundraising letter to the Bay Street people saying, "Send me money because I support the market and market opening."

Don't have Liberals stand in this House and accuse Tories of flip-flopping. I like it when Tories flip-flop, because normally they're going in the opposite direction to what I want. So I give you credit as Tories for having reversed a position on a number of unpalatable issues in my view, but for the Liberals to call them flip-floppers I think is just a bit more than I want to take today.

Interjection: The NDP is flip-flopping.

Mr Bisson: No, the NDP is very consistent. I'm just saying to my good friends in the Liberal caucus and my good friends in the Tory caucus and to all those in this assembly and others who might be watching, the one thing you can count on is that New Democrats will take a position. Sometimes it may not be a popular position. We understand that at times we take a step forward as a caucus. We say as a party that we want to take a position on something that may be seen as unpopular, but we do it as a matter of conviction. Sometimes people will agree with us and sometimes they won't.

I want to get back to the motion because I think the motion that has been raised by my good friends from the Liberal caucus is a good one, and that is the whole discussion about how we're able to better support our communities out there and able to provide proper funding and a good partnership between the province and municipalities in providing transit funding. I believe it's a good start. I'm not going to wholly endorse the Liberal plan because I think there are some things in their plan that are falling short of where they've got to go, but it's a step in the right direction. I'm prepared to give it support, as are the rest of the members of our caucus.

I want to talk about what the Liberals are proposing first. That is the concept of saying that we the province of Ontario should basically give municipalities a share in the taxes paid by motorists when it comes to the gas they purchase for their cars. That's something that our caucus put forward, I think about a year and a half or two years ago. We put that notion forward as an idea, saying it was something we were interested in, in a discussion paper. We then took a position formally, that that is something that we believe in and something that we should be doing, should we form the government. The Liberals have come to see the wisdom of this NDP policy. We support Liberals sometimes coming over and supporting some of our ideas. I get a little bit miffed as a New Democrat because far too often they like to steal our ideas and basically say that it's them who thought of it, but let's not get into that fight today. Let's just talk about what the issue is.

The concept is, municipalities should share in the revenue. We, as the New Democratic Party, as a social democratic party of Ontario, understand that's not a bad idea, it's not a bad concept, because municipalities by and large are paying the lion's share of being able to provide road infrastructure and transit infrastructure in their municipalities. The pollution that happens in those communities because of the gas-guzzling cars that are out there and because of pollution in general is felt by people in those communities. Municipalities and local ratepayers by and large are having to pay for pretty well the lion's share of the transportation infrastructure. So the concept of getting municipalities to share in the gas tax revenue is not a bad one. We think that's something that quite frankly would make some sense. That's why we as the New Democratic caucus have put forward the idea, going back a couple of years ago, that there should be three cents set aside out of the taxes collected on gas for municipalities so that we can assist municipalities in providing good transit systems.

I want to come at this debate of transit from a bit of the perspective of a northerner and also from the perspective of what it means to people in Toronto. Now, many of the communities that I represent don't have transit services. The communities are small. The way of getting around is basically by road. If people are lucky enough, they own a car and that's how they get along. In a lot of communities there are no urban transit systems because of the size of the communities. That's why in those cases, those communities need to get the support to use some of that gas tax money to be able to support the roads the municipalities have and keep them in good repair in order to provide a transportation network within their communities.

I look at communities like Kapuskasing, Hearst and others across northern Ontario that are having to do this by and large on their own. Other than the connecting link program that they use in order to maintain highways that go through their communities, municipalities by and large are left alone to maintain those roads.

So I as a northerner welcome the concept that we've put forward as New Democrats, and that now the Liberals have come to, of saying that those municipalities should be able to share and they should be able to get some of that gas tax money back so they can properly maintain their roads. One thing I want to point out is that a lot of roads in these communities have gone very seriously into a state of disrepair over the past number of years. One of the reasons for that is that upper levels of government have downloaded much of that service on to municipalities. I'll defend the government to a certain extent. It started with the federal Liberal government. They started this massive downloading of federal responsibility on to the provinces. As a result, they've shed a whole bunch of spending that they used to be responsible for, and a lot of it went to provinces to support municipalities when it came to maintaining road infrastructure down to the provinces. As a result, provinces across Canada have been in a position where they've been downloading the responsibility on to municipalities, to the end user.

I want to use some words that Mike Harris said a long time ago, and it's one of the quotes where I agree with him: "There is only one taxpayer." If the federal government at the upper level decides they're going to absolve themselves of their responsibility and not properly fund provinces that, in turn, fund municipalities, they're kidding no one. All it means is that the money they cut out of this budget is eventually going to be recouped with taxes at the bottom, at the municipal side, or the service is not going to be provided at all.

In the case of municipal road infrastructure, far too often what ends up happening is that the infrastructure is not well maintained. You can go into communities across this province and see to what point the roads have deteriorated since that entire downloading process was started by both the federal Liberal government and the provincial Tory government here in Ontario. It's rather sad, because unfortunately—or fortunately, depending what side of the debate you come on—roads are an essential part of our transportation infrastructure.

So we support the concept of giving, as they say, the tools to municipalities to be able to do their jobs by sharing in the gas tax revenue. That's why we first proposed that idea, oh, better than about two, three years ago.

What do we need to do to build a good infrastructure in an urban setting? That's the other part of what I'd like to talk about.

Part of what the Liberals have focused on is what we focused on as well, which is being able to have municipalities like Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, Timmins, Sudbury or any community that has an urban transit system have funds to be able to operate that system so that the burden of operating it is not entirely on the ratepayer by way of higher rates, not entirely on the back of the municipal taxpayers. So by allowing some of the gas tax to go over to those municipalities, they're going to be able to offset some of that cost. We support that concept.

I have a bit of a difference with the Liberals in the narrowness of the plan they're putting forward. I think we need to go one step further. What we need to look at in this province, I think, is the examples of what we're seeing in some of states in the United States and some of the cities, but more to take a look at what happens in Europe. Europe has come at the transportation question in a very different way. If anybody has travelled to Europe—I have a number of times now. I've noticed they have not only a much better urban transportation system but much better city-to-city transportation. They have developed a transportation system by rail that you can get in almost any city in Europe; I would say any city in Europe is probably the correct term. You can get on a train and be able to move from city A to city B in really reasonable time, be brought from downtown core to downtown core and do it in a way that's very cost-effective.

The countries in Europe, like France and Germany and Italy and others, who are big promoters of rail service obviously are subsidizing the running of the rail service, and in many cases the rail service is owned by the country itself, is owned by the state, the point being that they made a policy decision some years ago that rather than putting all of their eggs in one basket, as we have in North America, which is the building of roads, they would divide the money they use to subsidize transportation by some of it going to rail transit, some of it going to air transport and other parts of it going over to maintaining roads.

For some reason, in Canada we've taken a very odd view, as the Americans have, that the only correct public subsidy for transportation is for highways. I find that a very bizarre policy when you look at it. In North America governments of all stripes have no difficulty—in Canada or the United States—in understanding that we have a responsibility for not only building highways and municipal roads but for maintaining them. We think nothing of the billions of dollars that we spend every year to build up road infrastructure in this province. People generally—the voters, the taxpayers—see that as a good thing too. But for some reason, in North America, and the case is here in Ontario as well, we say, "Well, we don't have a responsibility," like it's a bad thing if we spend public dollars to maintain a rail system and it's a bad thing to spend public dollars to operate an airline system.

I just think that's rather an odd position to take, because if you take a look at the Europeans, their airline, rail and road systems are in some cases entirely paid by the taxpayer or greatly subsidized by the taxpayer. For instance, in Europe, if you take a look at it, most countries own the rail system. Except for England, where they've privatized and it's become a real disaster, most rail systems in Europe are owned by the state. If they're not owned by the state, they may be privately owned but are greatly subsidized by way of construction—capital costs—or operating costs by the state itself. And the reason for that is that Europe has understood that in a setting of how many hundreds of millions of people live in Europe, if you were to only put your eggs in the highway transportation system, you would end up with congestion in the cities and the countrysides of Europe to the state that nobody would be able to drive from point A to point B in a very efficient way. They've understood that you have to have an integrated approach when it comes to developing a transportation infrastructure. So they've purposely put public dollars in the rail system.

As a result, if you go to Europe, fly to any city in Europe—I've flown into Paris, I've flown into Milan, I've flown into Heathrow, I've flown into Amsterdam. I've been to a number of cities across Europe and different parts of the world, but for the case of Europe you fly into any major city and the rail system comes right to the airport. A traveller who's coming from abroad or coming from within Europe for business or pleasure basically gets off the plane, goes through security, walks out, is on the rail platform and away you go anywhere in Europe that you want to go, at a very reasonable price and at a very quick speed. For example, a person flying into Paris to go to Brussels can get on the train at Charles de Gaulle airport and end up in downtown Brussels in about two hours, two and a half hours at the most. That's really a quicker way of doing it than renting a car and trying to drive along the highway. Conversely, when a European traveller gets on the highway system in Europe, you don't see the congestion on freeways in Europe that you do in North America.

But they have a lot more people in Europe, and you have to ask yourself the question why. Because they've understood that if you all do is build highways, eventually what you'll end up with is more road congestion and then you're caught in a vicious circle. You're caught with, "Build more roads so that we can free up the congestion, and the bigger we build the roads, the more people use the cars and the more roads you've got to build after. It's a vicious circle."

In North America we've taken a completely opposite view. We've said, "The only way to really invest public dollars that is acceptable to most governments is to spend them on building highways and not developing our rail and air infrastructure." So we look at a federal government in Ottawa that started under the Chrétien government, that has basically sold off CN. CN used to be a crown corporation that was there for the benefit of all Canadians. The government has sold it off, said, "That's a bad deal." The government, when Mulroney was in government in Ottawa, got rid of Air Canada and got rid of the whole transportation system that we used to own as citizens, taxpayers, in the airline industry. In Ontario, the Conservatives were elected in 1995. They first of all privatized the only air service that we owned as a province, which was norOntair. Conversely, now you've got Bearskin Airlines that is basically providing the entirety of whatever service is left, which is less than it used to be under NorOntair. We're paying far more to travel and the connections are a lot less.

If a traveller comes to Timmins or Thunder Bay and wants to go east or west across northern Ontario, more times than not, the east-west connections across northern Ontario are insufficient and people actually fly through Toronto. I know lots of people who are in Timmins who have to do business in Thunder Bay, and rather than paying $1,200 to fly return by Bearskin air services, which takes about three hours because of all the stops, they are electing to go to directly into Toronto and back up to Thunder Bay at a lesser cost. For example, we've got Jetsgo coming into Timmins at $188 return from Timmins to Toronto, and then you can get on WestJet to get up to Thunder Bay. It's cheaper for people to go to Toronto and back up to Thunder Bay.

We have taken a completely opposite position than I think we should have, as a public policy. This should not be an ideological debate, I would hope. Governments of all stripes have to understand that if we're going to develop a transportation system in North America, in our case in Ontario, you have to have an integrated approach.

You have to say that where it makes sense, we will spend money on roads and we will use public dollars to do that because it's for the public good. Where it makes sense, we spend money on urban transit because we don't want everybody to use cars in our cities. We should have a good transit system so people can move around conveniently and at a cheap cost. Where it makes sense we should use rail, such as GO Transit, so that a person can move from one community to another—for example, from Oshawa to Toronto to Hamilton—and do that in a cost-effective way to both the ratepayer, the person who pays the taxes, and the end-user, the who has to use it. And where it makes sense, why not look at developing our air services? Canada is a large country. It may not be feasible to build rail everywhere, so maybe in some cases you have to have some sort of air service to link communities together.

I would support that we have to come at this in a whole lot of ways. In Ontario, it would be a complete departure from what public policy has been for a long time. What you have to do in order to do this correctly is establish a special committee of the Legislature, give it a mandate to look at this for probably a year or two, because it's quite complex, and to say what kind of public investment we have to make in Ontario to develop a better integrated transportation system, so that no matter where you live in Ontario, you have reasonable service. You probably can't afford to build a Cadillac, but you can probably afford to invest and build a reasonable transportation infrastructure so that it's not just highways. The problem is, the more you build roads, the more you use them, and the bigger you make them, the more they become congested. It's a vicious cycle.

I look at Highway 401 as a good example. It was built some years ago and it was thought, "That's going to carry us into the next century without a problem. Look how big the freeway is." You may as well walk when you're on the 401 anywhere from about 8 to 10 o'clock in the morning, because you can probably walk faster on the 401, at times, than you can drive. Governments, including mine, the NDP government, and including now the Conservative government, spent money to try to deal with some of the bottlenecks, not only adding extra lanes, but building brand new highways such as Highway 407, which we did when we were in government. All that does is create more congestion on our highways because more people use cars. I would argue that a special committee of the Legislature should look at the issue of what kind of investments we need to develop a good transportation system.

Let me tell to you what I think a good system would be. You should have a system that says, for example, that in southern Ontario we invest and develop a better GO service. GO does the best it can with the limited amount of money it gets. At one point they used to get public subsidies. The Tory government came in and cancelled all that. Now they've reneged somewhat and started to give some of the money back.

What do we need to make GO really work? For example, I'm a pilot and I have flown across this great province many times. Just recently I was flying down toward the London area at night. I was looking at the rows of lights in southwestern Ontario. There's just lots and lots of population in that part of the province. It seemed to me it would make a lot more sense if we had a good inter-urban transit system when it comes to GO, to be able to connect communities like Hamilton, and communities in between, up to Toronto, and maybe even further out toward the London or Windsor area.

How you would do that would be the subject for the committee to look at. The idea would be, if I live in Hamilton and I have to go to Toronto for work every day, or if I have to come to Toronto or any other community in between, or past, you should make it as affordable to the rider as possible so that it is a disincentive for the person to utilize their car. That should be the first thing. We should say to ourselves, "If I'm living in Hamilton and I had to drive to Oshawa," or "I'm living in Hamilton and I have to drive to downtown Toronto and back," you should make it so that it's cheaper for the person to use the public system than it is to utilize their own car. That's the first thing you should do. Why? We want to encourage people off our highways.

The second thing we would have to do is say, "We need to make this trip as convenient as possible when it comes to both schedule and comfort of ride." The person says, "OK, I'm in Hamilton and I have to go to downtown Toronto. If I take my car, it's going to cost me X amount of dollars in gas there, X dollars back and so much for parking." When you add all that up, whatever the number is—we'll say it's $40—you should be able to say, "We could provide you with a much cheaper rate if you utilize GO Transit. Not only that, we're going to put in place a schedule that says you don't have to sit at the railway station for only one train that goes in the morning, one that goes in the afternoon and one that goes at night." You'd have to increase the frequency, because if you increase the frequency of the service, there are more people attracted to use it. The more you get the riders, the more revenue comes into the service.

The other thing you have to do is integrate when the interurban transit comes into the city of either Hamilton or Toronto. The person has to be able to say, "I bought a pass and it goes from Hamilton downtown to 15 Gervais Drive at the Ontario Federation of Labour," so the person says, "I buy a ticket and it gets me all the way there."

You do, for example, what they do in Hong Kong. I know when I've been to Hong Kong, you go in and you don't buy one ticket. If you're in Paris, I think it's the same system, if I remember correctly. What you do is you say, "Here I am." The machine where you're buying the ticket says, "Here you are," or you go to the person, and all you do is tell the machine or the person where you're going. You buy one ticket that gets you from point A to point B. The person who's getting off the train in downtown Toronto doesn't have to fumble around for the two-dollars-and-whatever-it-is for the TTC. He basically takes the same ticket that he or she used to get on the train in Hamilton, uses it as a pass—because you can do that with electronic swipe—so when they get on the transit system in Toronto, it gets them all the way to where they want to go. If they purchase it before they leave, they've got their return ticket. Quite frankly, that's how most of the systems work in Europe. If I'm in Paris, that's the way it works. I know I've used it there. I certainly know that's the way it worked in Hong Kong when I was there as well.

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): Fare by distance.

Mr Bisson: It's fare by distance, and it makes sense for the end-user. It makes a lot of sense. I would argue, for the transits that are selling the tickets, it makes sense to them. Not that I like the idea of having less people, but it's a little bit more efficient when it comes to being able to organize the ticket sales themselves. There's also a return on investment for the actual investor.

The idea would be, you have an integrated fare-by-distance system where you go from point A to point B, you buy one ticket either one way, return or weekly—whatever way you want to do it—and it's based on where you're going; one ticket.

The other thing I was saying is you have to have a good scheduling system so that, if I'm the commuter who does it every day, I'm the person who's coming into Toronto for the afternoon or whatever it is, you don't need a system that says, "We've only got three trains per day." You have to increase the service so that the frequency is up and up. I would be willing to guarantee that if you build such a system in southern Ontario—and most of the infrastructure's there already. This is not a massive investment; this is just a matter of reorganizing what we've got and then increasing the services. We would probably have to buy some more rolling stock and increase employment levels within GO Transit and others, but I would argue we would take congestion off our freeways. I think most commuters would say, "Hey, if I can get on a train in Hamilton and get downtown to where I'm going for cheaper, faster and better than I can with my own car, darn right I'm taking the transit system."

That's the other point I wanted to make. You also have to look at the schedules in regard to the commuter going from Hamilton to Toronto. You should have some better, more direct routes. Right now, if I get on that train, I stop, I think, seven stops before I get to downtown Toronto because we want to make one train pick everybody up. They've only got about a couple of sort-of-direct trains. What you have to do, in my view, is to say, "How many stops are appropriate in the given amount of time that you take from getting the person from Hamilton to Toronto, or from Oshawa to Toronto, in order to be able to make it so that the ride isn't longer than it would be for them to take the car?"

I would argue that you take people off the road by doing that kind of approach. There's an immediate saving, and a long-term saving, in my view, because if you take people off our highways, it means you don't have to spend as much on the reconstruction cycle of the highway. We know that we have to rebuild highways not only based on their age but based on their usage, and if we're using highways heavily, we have to reconstruct them far more often. Secondly, you wouldn't have to build more overpasses, more roads and more on and off ramps if you did that particular model.

For a community such as mine in northern Ontario, I think the model would be a little bit different. I'm going to stick my neck out. As I said at the beginning of this debate, New Democrats often take positions that I think are well reasoned, but from the public's perspective they may say, "Where did that come from? I've never heard of it. I'm not sure if I like it or not." I'll propose this: what's wrong with our saying, as a province or as the federal government, that we have a role in the airline transportation industry? If the private sector can't provide a fare at a reasonable rate to the commuter—I'm a commuter. I commute every week from Timmins down here to do my job at Queen's Park. There are a number of people in communities like Timmins and North Bay and Thunder Bay and other places around the province who have to come to Toronto or other places in southern Ontario on a very regular schedule for business or medical reasons or whatever it might be. So if the private sector, such as Air Ontario, can't provide the commuter, the travelling public, a fare at a reasonable rate, maybe there is a role for the province to get involved.

Maybe what we have to do is get into the business ourselves by running a provincially owned and controlled system, or we have to find some way of being able to support or regulate the industry itself. Maybe it's a combination of both. I wouldn't advocate that we do that overnight, because it would be a heck of a lot of money, but we need to take a look at where it is. Then you can sit down, if you're part of the people who are paying for the service and regulating or running it yourself, and start making decisions about, "You know what? Not all transportation lines are north-south in Ontario. A person has to be able to get from Sudbury to Thunder Bay, as a person from Hearst has to be able to get from Hearst to Manitowadge." You have to have those kinds of systems.

It may not be applicable to do all of those on rails because of distances. Maybe you've got to do them with the airline service. So an integrated approach, in my view, would include utilizing public policy and some public dollars that we now spend only on roads to develop a more integrated approach to being able to utilize airline services in areas of the province where there are large distances.

I've just got to make the plug for the James Bay. Communities like Peawanuck are having to fly their fuel into a community up on Hudson Bay to be able to supply the diesel necessary to run their generators. The reason for that is that we have a very poor system of transportation on James Bay. Either you put it up by barge in the summer or you fly it up by plane in the winter. That's basically the only choice the Hudson Bay communities have. So there is an argument, I would say, for public dollars to be utilized to be able to—yes, I'm going to say it—subsidize transportation costs in communities like Peawanuck, Attawapiskat or Moose Factory, because they have no other choice. The only transportation system for them north of Moosonee is airline services. People in Toronto think absolutely nothing of spending public dollars to support their transit system or to support the roads, but for some reason we think it's a bad thing to subsidize airline transportation on the James Bay coast. I would just say, what's the difference? The difference is, the only choice they have is airline services. If the province wants to go in and build a road, go and build it. I don't think they're going to build it in short order, so we need to be able to provide that transportation infrastructure.

The other point I want to make is that in northern Ontario you may, and I believe you should, take the position of keeping the ONTC public. This move by the government to privatize CN is, I believe, in the long run the wrong thing for northern Ontario. CN is trying to tell us, by way of the government, "Trust us. It's going to be better than it was before." How many times did I hear, when we privatized something, "Trust me. It's going to be better than it was before," and about five or six years down the road you find out that you don't have the services you should have? The government told us in 1996, when they privatized NorOntair, that we'd be better off. We now pay more than twice the price for airline tickets and we get less than half the service.

The point I make is simply this. If we're going to utilize, as we recommend in this motion, dollars from fuel taxes to build infrastructure, both transit and roads, I would argue we need to take a little bit more of a global approach and take a look at developing an integrated transportation strategy in Ontario. Why? Because at the end of the day, the province, in my view, is responsible for providing a good transportation network so that either travellers, business travellers or goods that are transported in Ontario can be transported efficiently and cheaply enough so that, no matter where you are in the province, you have half a chance of being able to develop your industry and not just having it all basically centred around a place like the GTA.

So as I said at the beginning, we will support this motion. We think it's a step in the right direction. As I said at the beginning, I'm glad the Liberals have taken the view they have. We had put this forward about three years ago. We're glad to have them onside. We look forward to what will happen in this debate. I hope for the day that we do have a standing committee to take a look at the whole issue of an integrated transportation system.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I'm very pleased to join in the debate with respect to the opposition day motion.

Let's be frank: redirecting a portion of provincial gas taxes to municipalities to increase the provincial investment in public transit could mean raising taxes, and this government has always been opposed to that approach.

In addition, linking tax revenues to specific programs simply doesn't work, for the following reasons: it limits the ability of the government to address its priorities; it can lead to an inefficient allocation of revenues; it may not provide enough money to fund the program adequately; in some instances, it may provide more money than is actually needed; and it is not accountable to taxpayers.

This is a Band-Aid solution that flies in the face of how this government has kept fiscally responsible to the people of Ontario by ensuring that all tax revenues go to the consolidated revenue fund, unlike the federal government, which also takes a gas tax from consumers and puts back a minuscule amount into our transportation network.

It has been reported that of all the monies the federal government takes, which is in the billions, about 5% of that goes back into our transportation system. On top of the hardship that's placed on consumers with respect to the gas they buy, the federal government has a GST component on the tax, which is a tax on tax with respect to gasoline.

This resolution points to a motion with respect to provincial investment. We should also be looking for federal investment in our urban transit system.

I think the member opposite did indicate with respect to the federal government essentially getting out of the rail industry by their act in 1996, which allowed CP and CN to get out of the rail system in a number of areas. That may have affected my riding of Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford if we hadn't gone in with some significant monies to aid the city of Barrie to maintain the rail line between Barrie and Bradford. It was Minister Eves at the time, who was the Minister of Finance, now our Premier, who had the foresight to make sure that we invested significantly to maintain the rail system. The proof in the pudding is that if you look at the rail between Barrie and Orillia, there are no rail tracks. That's a direct product of what the federal government did with our rail system.

The Ontario Legislature decides how money is best allocated to fund priority projects by putting all tax revenues into the consolidated revenue fund. Under the Financial Administration Act, all public monies are to be deposited in the consolidated revenue fund unless explicit legislation is enacted to override this provision. This is a safeguard to ensure that the government remains fiscally responsible to the taxpayers of Ontario. We can't simply reallocate taxes to satisfy a whim of the opposition.

Our government recognizes the need for a balanced, integrated transportation system. Our government is taking a leadership role in developing a coordinated approach to transit. We have announced $3.25 billion over 10 years for transit expansion and renewal. This includes up to $1.25 billion for transit expansion projects in the Golden Horseshoe and up to $250 million for cities outside the Golden Horseshoe. This also includes $100 million in 2002 for the Ontario transit renewal program to assist municipalities in replacing and refurbishing transit fleets. We have assumed responsibility for GO Transit, which frees up over $100 million per year for municipalities within the current GO service area to reinvest in transit.

I'd just like to say to my constituents that unfortunately we were not able to keep GO Transit because the provincial government of the day, the NDP government in 1992, discontinued the service from Barrie to Toronto. I have been meeting diligently with GO Transit, and the Ministry of Transportation has been involved, to return GO Transit to the city of Barrie. That would be a very expensive undertaking in terms of being able to return that to the city of Barrie.

We've seen expansion in GO Transit in the town of Bradford West Gwillimbury, up to three trains per day. Certainly that has enhanced the transportation system. We've also seen an increase in the number of GO buses out of the city of Barrie. I believe it's in the neighbourhood of about 10 per day. But returning GO Transit to the city of Barrie, in my view, is one of the fundamental requirements of what this government needs to do with respect to urban transit, because of the tremendous volumes of traffic and transportation on Highway 400. But it would also provide an opportunity for the citizens of Barrie and surrounding areas, in Innisfil and Bradford West Gwillimbury, to go to downtown Toronto, whether it's for work or for health services, and that's very important. So I'm working very hard for the return of GO Transit to the city of Barrie, and I know that our transportation policies are directed to making sure that will happen by working with municipalities.

The $100 million that's been freed up for municipalities within the current GO service area could buy municipalities 200 buses or 55 subway cars. David Bradley, president of the Ontario Trucking Association, has said he's extremely pleased that transportation issues are at the forefront of the government's economic renewal strategy. We also heard in the throne speech of the federal government in January 2001, when they said that the government of Canada will co-operate with provincial and municipal partners to help improve public transit infrastructure.

While the one-time federal announcement of $76 million for the city of Toronto is a good first step, the federal government must make a long-term commitment to funding transit nationwide. We have come to the table with long-term funding. Why can't the federal government? The government is assuming about $1 billion in GO costs over 10 years. Our government is making a significant commitment to GO Transit. This has freed up $500 million in Toronto over 10 years, which could buy 1,000 buses or 275 subway cars.

For the GTA municipalities and Hamilton, some $500 million has also been freed up. We are cost-sharing up to 33% of-eligible fleet replacement costs. We have also announced up to $1.25 billion for eligible strategic transit expansion projects in the Golden Horseshoe, such as transportation hubs, and another $250 million for cities outside the Golden Horseshoe.

On September 27, 2001, the provincial government announced a bold new visionary plan for transit that provides for a 10-year, $9-billion plan to ensure the province has a transit system that will help strengthen the economy and protect the environment. The investment is made up of $3.25 billion from the provincial government in investments to renew and expand transit. Ontario has challenged the municipalities and the federal government for matching contributions. However, the federal government has yet to respond with full matching funding.

The provincial 2001 budget announced the creation of the Golden Horseshoe Transit Investment Partnerships, also known as GTIP, by allocating $250 million from the millennium partnership fund. GTIP has now increased to up to $1.25 billion to support the expansion of transit infrastructure, along with the new $250-million transit investment partnerships, also known as TIP, to support transit expansion in cities outside the Golden Horseshoe. The GTIP funding will support interregional transit infrastructure such as commuter rail, light rail and dedicated transitways.

It also supports new rolling stock, signals, station infrastructure, and advanced fare collection. Passenger information systems will also be eligible for funding, provided they create region-wide network service benefits.

The Ontario transit renewal program targets $100 million in 2002 for replacement and refurbishment of municipal transit fleets. It reduces a municipality's share of capital investment in these fleets by sharing up to one third of the cost of ongoing vehicle replacement. Municipalities receive their allocation based on the number of riders using their system and ensuring a minimum support of up to one third of fleet renewal needs. Sixty-five municipalities are eligible to receive funding to renew their transit fleets this year. Our government is committed to build a transit system that meets the needs of the people of Ontario. Safe and efficient transit is a vital part of a seamless and integrated transportation network province-wide.

I know the city of Barrie is benefiting from this program, by our investments in their transit program. The Ontario transit renewal program demonstrates that this government is listening to municipalities. The number one concern of our municipal partners was the replacement of aging buses. The Ontario transit renewal program will mean more reliable and more efficient transit systems, lower maintenance costs, increased accessibility and, most importantly, reduced vehicle emissions for a cleaner environment. In short, this funding will give the people of Ontario a better quality of life. I know that the city of Barrie has benefited from this in terms of their transit fleet in the past. I know they are benefiting from it also this year.

Those are all my comments with respect to this motion which I don't support with respect to the gasoline tax.

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): It's a pleasure for me to rise and add to the debate on this opposition day motion brought forward by the Liberals. I want to start off by saying the motion itself is convoluted, not clear, poorly written. I looked through the government of Ontario telephone directory for this year and I just happened to find about 160 people under the official opposition, office of the leader of the Liberal Party—members and all their staff, 160 people. They don't get to put forward many opposition day motions, they don't have a lot of opposition days, so when they put something forward I thought that they'd take the time to do a clear and concise motion, but apparently those 160 employees couldn't quite get it right.

All day we've talked about this motion and assumed that what the motion meant was that we're going to take two cents from the provincial gas tax and give it to municipalities and then they would, of course, spend it on public transit. But that's not what the resolution says. That's not what the motion says at all. This has caused confusion throughout the debate. The member from Timmins was confused. He talked at length about this gas tax money being revenue that they could use up north on roads where they needed more money for roads, but that's not clear from this. What it says is that, "The Legislative Assembly of Ontario directs the Ernie Eves government to commit to directing two cents of the existing provincial gas tax to municipalities, which will double the provincial investment in public transit." But it says nothing about forcing the municipalities to use the money that they get from the gas tax for public transit. The members opposite have talked about it all day long as if that was the case, but that's not what the resolution says. As I said, the member for Timmins was confused about this. He believed that the money could be used for roads. One would assume that from listening to what the Liberals said, that somehow this resolution would force municipalities to spend it on public transit, but in actual fact it does not. There's no commitment in the resolution that says that.

I'll tell you another thing that's confusing about this. Let's just assume that that is what they meant. The member from Timmins, when he got up, made another interesting point because there are all kinds of very small municipalities around the province of Ontario that have no public transit, that aren't interested in having public transit. So if they collected money through this gas tax, how could they spend that money? Their arms would be behind their backs. They couldn't spend it. They don't have public transit. So it's a very poorly drafted resolution at the outset.

Another thing I find strange is that they say "two cents of the existing provincial gas tax." By the way, there's a provincial fuel tax. One is not sure if they want to include that or not, so we'll assume it's just the gas tax—two cents a litre on the provincial gas tax. The members opposite use the number of about $300 million. This would mean municipalities could then spend that on, I guess, public transit. Over the last seven years we've been spending, on average, about $450 million on public transit in Ontario. So that's passing strange. We spent over $3 billion in the past seven years on public transit in Ontario; on average, about $450 million over that seven-year period. Now, it's come in spurts but that's the average. This says, "No, it'll be dropped down to $300 million." That's strange.

Another thing is that if the province takes two cents of the provincial gas tax and passes it on to municipalities, that's $300 million—I'll use the member opposite's figures. That's close, I think, if you look at the books right now. Well, what do we do with a $300-million hole in our budget? They haven't said that. Are they no longer going to fund Visudyne in the province of Ontario? Maybe the $100 million for new nursing care and long-term care—maybe they want to eliminate that three times.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I hope not.

Mr Maves: I would hope not, too.

Recently we gave a little bit over $300 million for hospitals. Maybe they'll eliminate that. They haven't said what they're going to do to make up the shortfall in the revenues that this has for the province itself.

Mr Smitherman, the member from Toronto Centre-Rosedale, got up after one of our members and said, "Well, there's the difference between the Liberals and the Tories." He said, "There's gridlock and you guys would build roads to solve the gridlock. We, the Liberals, won't build roads." They won't build roads. Well, that's interesting. We spent a billion dollars this year on roads, and I know there are people up north who really are appreciative that we're going to do some work on widening Highway 69. Is it the Liberals' position that they're not going to do that? The Queen Elizabeth widening through St Catharines, the mid-peninsula corridor, Highway 11, Highway 17, Highway 400—I know the folks in Barrie want to have that widened; they need that widened. But the member from Toronto Centre-Rosedale said, "We won't spend money on roads; it's bad for the air. We're going to spend it on our public transit."

As I said, they want to commit to spending $300 million on public transit. We've been spending about $450 million if you average it out over the past seven years.

The member made it sound like we didn't spend any money on transit. Several of the Toronto members got up in the Liberal Party and lamented a lack of spending on transit. Well, in 2002 funding alone the TTC is going to receive $62 million for transit renewal. The province has taken back responsibility for GO Transit. That frees up almost $51 million for the city of Toronto. Toronto receives $13.3 million for short-term transit expansion projects this year and we're funding $19.3 million for the second platform at Union Station. The total capital assistance to TTC this year alone is $145 million. So for the members outside of Toronto it's tough to sit here and listen to the member from Toronto Centre-Rosedale and other members complain and lament lack of funding.

Let me just tell you some of the amounts we've spent on TTC capital funding: in 1996, $298 million; in 1997, $275 million; in 1998, $829 million; in 2001, $50 million. So in total since 1996, $1.8 billion at the TTC. So to hear the members complain about that, it's quite galling.

When I first heard about this resolution I was somewhat surprised. I thought maybe the Liberals were, for the first time in seven and a half years, going to stick up for Ontarians against their federal cousins. We all know in the House how the Ontario Liberals, the Dalton McGuinty Liberals, are the only party in all of Canada to refuse to stand up to the federal Liberals with regard to health care funding. Every single government, every single party in Canada, every stripe—Liberal, NDP, Conservative—they all agree that the federal government spends 14 cents on the dollar on health care. But only the Dalton McGuinty Liberals refused to take them to task. They help the Liberals and they push forward this tax point argument, which is a foolish argument. There is a study for the Romanow commission that said, "It's a terrible argument. The Liberals shouldn't be advancing it any more." In actual fact, everybody agrees that they're only spending 14 cents on the dollar on health care except the Dalton McGuinty Liberals. They refuse to stand up to their federal Liberal cousins.

I digress, but I thought that maybe in this resolution they were going to go after their federal cousins and say to them, "You take nearly $2 billion a year out of Ontario alone on gas taxes." That's right. The federal Liberals, with the GST involved also, take out nearly $2 billion a year on gas. So I thought maybe the provincial Liberals are finally going to stand up to them and say, "Spend some of that on roads." No. That's not what this is all about. They absolutely refuse to do that.

I have some statistics for you. If you look at capital funding for transit, the total investment for transit since 1995 in Ontario, federal and provincial, is $3.178 billion. That's not bad. How much of that came from the province? It's $3.171 billion. That's right. Only $7 million, a fifth of a percentage point, came from the federal Liberals and they take $2 billion a year in gas taxes from Ontarians. So I thought maybe these guys would finally stick up for Ontario. No, they failed to do that again.

We look across the border at some of our American cousins. Ohio has a very similar population base to ours, 11.5 million. They have spent only $900 million since 1995 on transit; $205 million of that came from the state government and $700 million from the federal government, or 77%. In New York state, their population is a lot higher than ours; it's 19 million. Since 1995 they've spent $13.5 billion on transit. The federal contribution was $4.7 billion; 35% came from the federal government. So of our American cousins around us, the federal government gets it; the federal government makes that contribution.

Here, we just can't get it. We can't get it in health; we can't get it in transit. The member for Kingston and the Islands will not ask his federal cousins to pony up. He says to them, "You keep taking money out of Ontario. You keep nailing us on gas taxes and then you refuse to give us any money for our roads or for our transit." He supports that.

I thought the resolution would say, "Let's get this House to say that the federal Liberals should put back some of that $2 billion a year they take out of Ontario gas taxes." No, they didn't want to do it. They had an opportunity and they failed again. It's very disappointing. Not only, as I said at the outset, is it a very poorly drafted resolution, but the Liberals had an opportunity to stand up for Ontario and they refused to do it again.

Some people ask me, "Why don't they ever stand up to Chrétien? Why are they the only party in all of Canada that refuses to stand up?" I don't know. It could be that the only way they have successful fundraisers is by having a federal minister there, and if they start standing up to them, maybe they won't come any more. I don't know. That's something I've heard but I'm not going to say that's the case. I'll leave the members opposite to talk about that.

You really can't trust them across the aisle when they tell you something. An example of that came up the other day on the Agricultural Employees Protection Act. This was really interesting. I believe they abstained, as an entire caucus. That's right. Members are looking at me incredulously, but they absolutely abstained, as a caucus, on introducing the bill. Then I think they voted for it on second and third reading. Then, the other day, what comes out from Greg Sorbara, the president of the Liberal Party and one of the front bench members of the Liberals, is, "If the Liberals form the government, I think we'll have to repeal it and do something different down the road."

They abstain. They vote in favour. And I'll never forget second and third reading votes. I think it was the second reading vote we voted on. As soon as we said we were going to vote on it, half a dozen of the Liberals left the room. Yes, they all scattered. It was actually closer to eight or nine. I remember jotting down all their names. Then three or four came back in. I saw some of them being escorted back in by Mr McGuinty's staff. It was very interesting; comical almost, if not so sad. But they ended up voting for the bill. Then the president of the Liberal Party, Mr Sorbara, says, "If the Liberals form the government, I think we'll have to repeal it." That's right, they will repeal the Agricultural Employees Protection Act. So they vote for it, and then they tell you they're going to repeal it. You can't figure it out. You just can't trust what they tell you.

One of the things they've been telling Ontarians now for several months is that they're going to fund all kinds of promises. They are going to change the Family Responsibility Office and add staff. They're going to add money to colleges and universities. They're going to add money to roads. Oh, one person says he's not going to add money to roads. Mr Smitherman today said no, they're not going to build any more roads. So they've got a problem there. They said they are going to spend billions on education. They're going to spend more on long-term care. They're going to spend more on health care. They're going to spend money on the environment.

Where are they going to get the money? Well, the interesting thing is that they keep claiming they're going to spend $2 billion from a corporate tax cut, and there isn't $2 billion in a corporate tax cut, but that's what they keep saying.

They have now spent that money, by our count, nine times. They've spent the money nine different times. And so, people around the province of Ontario, just be forewarned. You know what? I think the people of Ontario are already on to them. They know. They know when they hear a Liberal promise, when they go into a meeting with a Liberal, the Liberal will nod their head in agreement, "Yep, we're going to do it. We're going to fund it. Where are we going to get the money? Oh, we'll get the money from corporate tax." At the same time there are probably about 36 other Liberals having meetings with other people around the province of Ontario, nodding their heads, saying, "Yep, we'll do it. We'll do it. We'll do it. I know where we'll get the money. We're going to get the money from this corporate tax." They've spent it nine times.

I've got quotes from every one of them. We could give you quotes from Hansard like you wouldn't believe of all the different members opposite telling the public how they're going to spend this money on education, long-term care, family responsibility, colleges and universities. It's all the same money they keep spending over and over and over again. We're getting a little frustrated. The NDP's even getting a little frustrated, if you can believe that.

So I can't support this resolution. Not only was it poorly drafted by the 160 Liberal employees—they couldn't get it right—it has caused confusion in the House. I'll mention the member from Timmins is very confused about it. It appears they've got no way to replace the revenue. They want to rip it out of the Ontario government treasury. They're going to spend $300 million a year. Well, we've been spending about $450 million a year. So we can't support their resolution.

I'm actually going to conclude my debate, because I know Minister Turnbull wants a few minutes. I'm going to leave him that opportunity.

Hon Mr Turnbull: I wasn't supposed to join this debate, but I just couldn't help putting on record a few of the facts which come to mind.

The provincial Liberals are proposing to add two cents to the gasoline tax, which would be dedicated revenue.

Mr Bradley: No, not add.

Hon Mr Turnbull: Oh, now they're saying it's going to come off the existing tax.

Mr Bradley: Exactly.

Hon Mr Turnbull: Well, this is very interesting, because all of their promises they've been making to date show that they are spending more money than the province brings in, several times over. We know the last time they were in government they raised taxes 39 times, and that was the thing that drove inflation in Canada more than any other factor in the whole of Canada.

It was very interesting. I was at the opening of the new Sheppard subway the other day. The cost of the new Sheppard subway was $934 million, of which the Ontario government paid approximately 60%. The federal government's representative was Jim Peterson. You may recognize the name, Mr Speaker. That's the brother of the former Liberal Premier of this province, David Peterson. He got there and he proudly proclaimed that they put $7 million into it. Out of the $934 million it cost to build the subway, we put in approximately 60%, and he said they put in $7 million.

Let's just compare this with what happens in the US. The US federal government actually gives at least 83% of every federal gasoline tax raised in the US back to the state to spend on roads and transit. That isn't the only sum they give for roads and transit, but that is dedicated revenue.

Let's just look at this. Our federal government is raising in excess of $2 billion a year in gasoline tax, but we're not getting anything back. We got $7 million toward building the Sheppard subway, and they had the cheek to show up. I'm reminded of the fact that David Collenette, the federal transportation minister, has spouted so many times about how money should be spent on transit and building roads, but there's no money coming from them.

What happens? The provincial Liberals have never, ever spoken up about the fact that the federal government should be at the table. They vote against every effort we make to try and get the federal government back to the table. If you were to put in 83% of the over—

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming-Cochrane): The first thing I'd like to say to the member across the way is that the federal government should be back at the table discussing this issue for sure, because public transportation is a big part of the—

Hon Mr Turnbull: Are you going to help us?

Mr Ramsay: Absolutely, we'll help you. The federal government should be here in dealing with urban transportation problems right across this country.

If we are as interested as Michael Colle, the member for Eglinton-Lawrence, is in solving two problems that are big problems here, gridlock and the environmental concerns in the Golden Horseshoe area, then all three levels of government have to be working in partnership on that. Yes, the federal government should be at the table, especially when they have the Kyoto accord. We should be doing that.

Hon Mr Turnbull: We put money in roads. You guys didn't spend any money in roads when you were the government.

The Acting Speaker: I'm going to warn the minister.

Mr Ramsay: Thank you, Mr Speaker, for protecting my right to speak in this House. I appreciate that.

I want to salute the member from Eglinton-Lawrence for bringing this motion forward. As the members know, this is a very simple, straightforward proposal that basically we would dedicate two cents of the existing tax against gasoline toward public transportation.

This government has underfunded urban transportation in all our towns and cities. That is a big mistake, because we need to make sure that not only is the population in our urban centres able in an affordable way to get around their municipalities; we also have to make sure that we develop integrated transportation systems that are seamless and low-cost to encourage people, to compel people to use a transportation system. You should be able to walk onto a GO train in Hamilton, maybe just put a toonie in the box and end up in North York. You should be able to do that in a seamless way so that it's fast and convenient and saves the environment. That's the type of system we need. The governments should be partners in that, both the provincial and the federal governments.

A week ago I was speaking to an elementary school up in Cochrane, Commando public school. When I talk to schoolchildren, as I know most of the members do from time to time when they get back to their ridings, what really beats in those children's hearts is a love for the environment. They look at a person like myself, an elected official, and wonder why we aren't doing more to save the environment. We need to be doing that. I thought that the people of my generation were going to be the ones to save the environment, and that really hasn't happened. We've still let it go and we've got to do much more to do that.

I would recommend to the members across the way the release the Ontario Liberal Party put out on Monday, Growing Strong Communities, because in that we have quite a comprehensive program to reduce pollution in Ontario and protect the environment. Jim Bradley, the member for St Catharines in our caucus here, an ex-Minister of the Environment—

Mr Caplan: The finest one we've ever had.

Mr Ramsay: —the finest Minister of the Environment in this province, is a very strong advocate and pushes all the members in this caucus to do more and more for the environment. We listen to him and we have a very good policy on the environment. I encourage people to go to the Ontario provincial party's Web site to look at that policy and to send in to us their e-mails and comments on that, because we want to start that dialogue now. Now is the time to do that, when we have some time before the election, so that people understand where we stand and where we want to go, and we're still willing to work with people and entertain new ideas on how we can improve the environment in this province. It's very important, and Mike Colle's resolution this afternoon I think is a very important first step to that, to dedicate two cents from the gasoline tax, the existing tax, toward public transportation for our municipalities.

Mr Ramsay: Yes, to the member across the way, we should make sure the federal government is a partner in that. I think the federal government needs to be a partner in the public transportation system and also a partner with the province in rebuilding our Trans-Canada Highway system. I think the feds should be a partner in all our transportation endeavours in this province. They have a national vision with that, and it's time, as they do with the Maritime provinces, for them to be a partner with us.

Again, I'd like to salute the member from Eglinton-Lawrence for the hard work he has done on the environment in presenting this motion. I certainly hope this resolution passes today. It deserves the support of all members of this House, and I ask members to support this resolution.

The Acting Speaker: That completes the time allocated for debate.

Mr Colle has moved opposition day number 4. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1746 to 1756.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please stand one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Pursuant to standing order 37, the question that this House do now adjourn is deemed to have been made. The member for Parkdale-High Park has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer given to his question by the Minister of Education.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Gerard Kennedy (Parkdale-High Park): It is a limited pleasure to rise tonight and to address the inadequacies of the Premier's response. In a sense, my question yesterday was directed to the minister, but also today I asked a similar question to the Premier. It was a simple question.

It was the Premier and the minister who said, "We will appoint someone to take over the Toronto school board and we will balance their budget." They said that a number of weeks ago. They said that about Ottawa and Hamilton as well. Then there were the events of the last number of weeks. They spent a lot of money. They hired new people. They hired public relations people.

When the day came to provide what they called a balanced budget, they put this out—this isn't available unless there's a big zoom for the cameras in the Legislature—a cut-and-paste number of columns. This is what they released to the public. On this release are net expenditures and gross expenditures mixed together. What this release did was permit the Premier of the province to say categorically last week that the classroom expenditures, the artificial category that even this government concedes are important expenditures to students, were being increased. The Premier said that; so did the minister. The minister said these cuts had not materialized to the classroom. The supervisor opened his presentation and said that. The government in fact hitched its entire credibility to the fact that it had cut the budget and saved money for the classroom and protected children.

Instead, we learned that these figures do not tell the substantive story, the important story, of what was happening at the Toronto board, that in fact there's another $110 million that was spent last year that was deliberately omitted from these figures—and I say that carefully. We have now had five days in this House where no one on the government side—Mr Amott is here on behalf of the government to remedy this, I hope—has produced an official set of figures to show the degree and the depth of the cuts to children in public schools in this city.

Should Mr Amott or anyone else in the government show up without that, then I'd say it besmirches this House, because to me it is fundamental that when we're talking about things like children's education, there are certain things on which we can rely. This government would be happy to have this debate dissolve into one about numbers, but it is instead about important areas.

For example, the government tried to say that there would be more money spent on textbooks. In fact, by the best figures we were able to obtain from the school board, there is less money being spent on textbooks. Further, teacher assistants, $2.4 million; fewer teacher assistants, not a $640,000 increase. Supply teachers, a $2.8-million decline.

The government tried to say today and yesterday that somehow the figures we were using weren't fully accurate. What we found and confirmed with board officials is that the figures I was provided with by the school board, which were confirmed by them, are far closer to the reality of this government.

I say again to the public of Ontario and I say to the honourable members opposite, they need to release these figures to have any honour in this House. This House would deny them any reasonable credibility if they can't tell us what their handiwork has done. The only people in this province who are elected democratically who can respond to the needs of the children in Ontario, in Toronto, Ottawa and Hamilton, are in this House. Should this government show up tonight without a set of figures, with just more rhetoric, without being able to tell us exactly and precisely how much harm they're doing to education in Toronto, I say shame on them in a way I've never felt in this House before. Should that be their deliberate response, the one I asked for by being here tonight, then that is the government prepared to go, without reservation, to no shortage of space to deceive us. I put that forward not as something I'm implying, but I would say there's a set of conditions here under which the government needs to provide to the people the very rudiments of their ability to judge its performance.

I say on behalf of students in Toronto—and I understand in Ottawa we have learned now that they can't balance the budget, that that supervisor has been able to find less than half of the savings that this government promoted and promised would take place.

This government needs to come clean with the students of Ontario. It needs to provide to this House and these only elected officials the information and the assurances to reconcile statements made by the Premier of this province, the person who should be able to be depended on when he says children are not going to be harmed.

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): It's a pleasure to respond to the member for Parkdale-High Park. Let me start off by placing into historical perspective the issue of the appointment of school board supervisors, an issue which is paramount to this debate. We appointed a supervisor because, "The Education Act is very clear. No school board is allowed by law to plan for a deficit; that is simply not permitted."

Those words were spoken, I'm told, by an honourable member opposite, the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, who is here in the House tonight, when he made this statement in the House on June 14, 1990, when he served as Minister of Education in the Peterson government. The member was quite right when he said that.

Now that this is on the record, it's equally imperative that we clear up any distortion or mistaken information instigated by the member for Parkdale-High Park. As of late, the member opposite, through exaggerated conjecture and rhetoric, has tried to infer that the Toronto District School Board's balanced budget is somehow askew. Well, the member opposite is simply incorrect. This House is well aware of this member's tendency to embellish and his unwillingness to put information in its proper context or, in other words, his fearmongering—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Stop the clock. A point of order?

Mr Kennedy: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member opposite is using the word "embellish." There are facts that I have put on the table here and—

The Acting Speaker: That's not a point of order, and I'm not permitted to allow points of order.

Mr Arnott: For the record, allow me to correct the member opposite with respect to his claims. You see, the member for Parkdale-High Park is on record trying to fearmonger by saying that the supervisor's budget would "cut all the pool programs, all the recreation programs, all the special-needs programs." This was Gerard Kennedy on CFRB radio, August 27, 2002.

As he so often does, the member for Parkdale-High Park, much like his leader, the leader of the Liberal opposition, claimed that the sky would fall. But the sky isn't falling; in fact, quite the opposite. The member said that the pools would close. I say to this member, his dire prediction was wrong. The pools will be open. The member for Parkdale-High Park said that recreation programs would be cut. Well, he was wrong again. In fact, the programs in place when the supervisor arrived stayed in place. Not only was he wrong about the supervisor cutting programs, the supervisor announced new investments in key areas such as teachers, technology, textbooks and classroom supplies. The member said that special education in Toronto would also be cut, and he was wrong yet again. The supervisor protected special-education funding and ensured that the needs of the students would be met.

The supervisor recently passed a good-news budget for the students and people of Toronto, and it's utterly shameful that the member opposite would try to distort the reality of the situation at the TDSB. That budget showed that tough decisions could be made while still protecting key programs in the classroom.

I'm advised that the budget plan also included some of the following highlights: the budget increased spending for classroom teachers by $5 million; increased spending on textbooks and classroom supplies by $500,000; increased spending on classroom computers, while still achieving significant efficiencies, by $2 million; and so on and so on.

The Liberal leader and his education critic continue to employ the Liberal version of accounting, which, as we all know, is somewhat lacking, to say the least. You see, their methodology is fundamentally flawed. The other day, the member for Parkdale-High Park tried to make comparisons on spending in the TDSB by comparing total expenditures in the fiscal year 2001-02 to net expenditures in 2002-03, which, as we know and as has been established in this House, is an apples-to-oranges comparison.

I'm told the member for Parkdale-High Park's expenditure comparison that he released regarding total expenditures against total expenditures in 2002-03 was a fair comparison, and it supports the supervisor's claim that funding under this budget is going up in four key areas.

At the end of the day, regardless of how you look at the numbers, the supervisor's budget has put the board back on the road to financial health. The supervisor has been successful in finding $90 million in savings. The programs that were in place when the supervisor was appointed are still in place, such as swimming pools, heritage language, outdoor centres and parenting centres.

It's time that the member opposite stopped fearmongering and admitted that his doom-and-gloom predictions did not happen. With sound fiscal management—

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The motion to adjourn is deemed to have been carried. The House stands adjourned until 6:45 of the clock.

FUNERAL, BURIAL AND CREMATION SERVICES ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LES SERVICES FUNÉRAIRES ET LES SERVICES D'ENTERREMENT ET DE CRÉMATION

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 25, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 209, An Act respecting funerals, burials, cremations and related services and providing for the amendment of other statutes / Projet de loi 209, Loi traitant des funérailles, des enterrements, des crémations et des services connexes et prévoyant la modification d'autres lois.

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): I seek unanimous consent with respect to this evening's debate on Bill 209: that one hour be divided equally among the recognized parties for the purpose of tonight's debate. At the end of that time, the motion for adjournment of the House will be deemed to have been made and carried and the Speaker shall adjourn the House. For the purposes of standing order 46, tonight's debate will be considered one full sessional day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Mr Galt has asked for unanimous consent of the House. Agreed? Agreed.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I'm pleased to come before this assembly to speak to the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002. As honourable members know, the new legislation would, if passed, regulate both funerals and cemeteries, which were formerly regulated under two statutes: the Cemeteries Act and the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act.

In our efforts to find practical solutions that balance industry and consumer interests in this important sector of our economy, we listened to the stakeholders. They told us we needed legislation that recognizes emerging trends and new kinds of transactions emerging in the 21st century marketplace. They told us we needed to encourage the development of new ways of doing business, and they told us we needed legislation that would provide strengthened consumer protection provisions. Based on our extensive and ongoing consultative process, we are confident that stakeholders know they have been heard.

The well-thought-out recommendations from the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee form the foundation of the proposed Funeral, Burial Services and Cremation Act, 2002.

Today, I would like to address the potential benefits the proposed legislation contains for service providers within the bereavement sector.

Ontario's bereavement sector is a significant industry for this province. It consists of more than 550 funeral homes, 5,000 cemeteries, approximately 60 monument retailers and several other organizations that provide services to consumers regarding responding to the death of a friend or family member. Diversity characterizes the participants in this sector. Funeral establishments tend to be private, for-profit businesses. However, on the cemetery side, profit businesses coexist with religious, not-for-profit and municipal cemeteries.

Purchases in this sector are also unique. About 80,000 Ontario families need bereavement services every year, and most of them will have no experience to guide them through the emotional decision-making process. Adding to the emotional nature of the decision is the financial commitment, a commitment that for the majority of today's consumers is a significant one, with funerals often the fifth-largest purchase most individuals will make.

Given the complexity and sensitivity of this sector, regulating it is no small feat. And let us not forget the implications of conducting business the 21st-century way. New business models and structures are developing at lightning speed in every industry, and the bereavement services sector is no exception.

It is no surprise, then, that businesses and consumers alike have asked for reforms to current bereavement legislation, reforms that would result in legislation that would be more responsive to market forces. Modernized bereavement legislation is called for, and our government has answered with the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, before us today. We have drafted legislation that not only keeps step with today's marketplace and its ever-changing demands, but one that can also respond to future needs as the bereavement services sector itself evolves.

The proposed legislation would benefit businesses in the bereavement sector in three ways. First, the proposed legislation would establish clear rules under which combined cemetery and funeral home operations would be permitted. Second, it would foster a level playing field for all industry participants. Third, it would strengthen consumer protection provisions.

In a major reform of what is currently in place, the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, would set out conditions under which combined cemeteries and funeral homes would be permitted. The two existing statutes, the Cemeteries Act and the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act, were created to regulate two traditionally separate segments of this sector. With time, the regulatory split has reinforced what many see as an artificial separation. Ontario is one of only two jurisdictions—Prince Edward Island is the other—in Canada prohibiting joint ownership and co-location of cemeteries and funeral home establishments.

Consumer expectation for a wider range of services and a desire for one-stop shopping are among the reasons for the move toward combinations in many jurisdictions. In general, consumers are increasingly requesting options other than traditional funeral service and burial. The combination of cemeteries and funeral homes would result in the development of innovative business models. By allowing for these new business approaches, consumers would have greater choice.

Expansion of services is top of mind with many service providers as they try to accommodate recent trends in bereavement management. The increasing number of consumers choosing cremation as an option is just one example of a new trend that has had an impact on service providers across North America and Europe. With rising land costs and increasing cultural diversity, this increase has been quite dramatic. In 1989, cremation was the choice for just under 28% of funerals. By the year 2000, 40% of funerals involved cremation. Similarly, there has been an increase in the number of consumers looking for non-traditional services or no-frills interment.

Allowing for a greater variety of services to be made available from service providers would also help consumers who want to make all their arrangements through one location. For example, under the proposed legislation, a funeral home could offer interment services or a cemetery could provide consumers with funeral services.

Let us remember that the concept of one-stop shopping is not simply a trivial convenience for consumers. Simplifying the process is essential, given the emotional fragility of the person making the bereavement arrangements.

Some have asked, "What will the proposed legislation offer family-owned funeral homes in Ontario?" The legislation provides for important new opportunities that would allow family-owned funeral homes to better serve consumers; an ability to serve the growing cremation market directly; an opportunity to purchase and resell interment rights to consumers where the cemetery is agreeable; the chance to enter into partnerships with other service providers, which might include municipalities and other non-profit organizations to develop new business models.

The second major benefit for businesses that would result from the passage of the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, is the fostering of a level playing field for industry participants. Operating a business in today's competitive environment is challenging enough without having a playing field slanted in the competition's favour. With the proposed legislation before the assembly today, our government is endeavouring to level that playing field.

First of all, the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, would work toward greater consistency in the sector by expanding the scope of licensing. Sector participants who were previously unregulated would be licensed according to the provisions in the proposed legislation. Throughout the Ontario government's long history of working with the bereavement sector, we have jointly sought to ensure professionals in the industry are properly qualified and licensed and that consumers are provided with appropriate protection.

The proposed legislation before the Assembly today would bring to fruition the work of these joint efforts. Specifically, regulation of the bereavement services sector would now include licensing of the following:

- (a) cemetery operators and their sales representatives;
- (b) crematorium operators and their sales representatives;
- (c) funeral establishment operators;
- (d) funeral directors;
- (e) transfer service operators and their sales representatives;
- (f) casket retail operators and their sales representatives; and finally
- (g) marker retail business operators and their sales representatives.

The legislation would result in the definition of more classes of licences to recognize no-frills players, creating a much-needed consistency throughout the industry.

By setting a standard level of professional requirements, the proposed legislation would help to ensure that consumers are protected. At the same time, by expanding the scope of who is licensed within that sector, the proposed legislation would also benefit businesses by allowing for flexible licensing regimes to recognize new trends. Again, this is part and parcel of ensuring that the proposed legislation is responsive to the demands of the marketplace, not only to the 2002 marketplace but to the shape and form of the marketplace to come.

We have discussed how this new approach would offer a simplified option for consumers and increase service offerings for providers. It would also benefit businesses by allowing for efficiencies that currently do not exist. We need to arm Ontario businesses with the means by which they can thrive and be competitive, especially during these times of global economic upheaval.

In allowing for services to be combined, the proposed legislation would provide the key to a new world of business strategies for the bereavement services sector. New ways of operating would allow for efficiencies that under the current legislation the bereavement services sector cannot leverage. Bereavement services providers who would take advantage of these efficiencies would be able to build stronger businesses. Stronger businesses mean a stronger industry, and that translates into an industry that can better meet the needs of Ontario consumers. A financially sound bereavement services industry would ensure that consumers' investments in their bereavement arrangements are being protected now and in the future.

Finally, the strengthened consumer provisions outlined in the proposed legislation would offer a protective umbrella to shield consumers and businesses alike. Prohibiting unfair business practices, increasing disclosure requirements and providing that all licensees comply with a code of ethics are key consumer protection provisions that also have immense implications for protecting service providers within the industry.

Most members of the bereavement services sector deal with their customers and their competitors in an honourable way. Unfortunately, as with many business enterprises, there are those within the industry who not only take advantage of consumers but also engage in unfair practices that thwart fair competition. In legislating against such unfair practices, the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, would ensure that all service providers work within the boundaries of fair practice. Under the new legislation, falsifying information, false advertising and the furnishing of false information would all be subject to stringent penalties. Not only would the proposed legislation give power to control current advertising, but regulations would also be put in place that require advertising be pre-approved before publication if an order in respect of false advertising has been made.

The proposed legislation would also promote a level playing field for service providers by broadening disclosure, including ownership disclosure. Easy-to-understand educational brochures and standardized price lists are also part of these new disclosure requirements. As part of the proposed regulations, licensed operators would be prohibited from selling at a price that is more than the price indicated on the price list. Again, this would ensure that any competitive advantages between service providers were not the result of unscrupulous activities.

Where currently only funeral directors are subject to a code of ethics, the proposed legislation would require that all licensees, including funeral directors, cemetery owners, transfer operators, marker and casket retailers, and all those who work in the bereavement services industry, comply with a code of ethics.

To monitor these licensees, the proposed legislation would provide for the establishment of a discipline committee and an appeals committee. Licensees who have been found to have breached the code of ethics by a discipline committee could be fined up to $25,000. The proposed legislation would provide for an appeals process as well as an offence section that sets out the consequences of a conviction. Once again, such provisions would ensure that the reforms to our current bereavement legislation result in a more rigorous, protective framework for Ontario consumers, thereby creating a fair-play structure for businesses within that sector.

The powers outlined in the proposed legislation that would encourage compliance and enable enforcement serve consumers and service providers equally well. There is a fairness in this approach. Honourable members, it is critical to recognize that the needs of businesses and consumers are inextricably intertwined. By giving consumers the mechanism by which they feel confident in the industry, we would be supporting growth in that industry.

Strong consumer confidence strengthens an industry. A strong industry means good businesses. Good business supports a thriving economy.

The reforms proposed today reflect stakeholder input and consensus on significant policy issues in the bereavement sector. The proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, would support the development of new and modern business models for service providers in this sector, promoting a level playing field while increasing protection for consumers.

This legislation, the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services, Act, 2002, has been brought forth after extensive consultation with stakeholders. It's trying to deal with practical solutions to the industry as it exists today. We are dealing with the bereavement industry in the 21st century. What we're trying to do is not only encourage new ways of doing business that make sense to the participants in this industry, we're trying to make sure it is also fair and affordable to consumers. When you're dealing with something as abstract as what we are dealing with here today in terms of trying to regulate an industry, you cannot lose sight of the people who get involved in it, the everyday person who has to make those emotional decisions with respect to dealing with their loved one who has died, passed away. It's very difficult for anyone who has gone through that to deal with the different businesses, if you want to put it that way, that are involved in this particular sector. Certainly when you are dealing with going to a funeral home to get that particular service today, you are not only not necessarily seeing church services, you are seeing funeral homes providing that church service, and also at the same time making a decision whether you are going to cremate that body or you are going to bury that body in a cemetery. Those are significant decisions that have to be made, but you are also dealing with significant participants in this industry.

What we are trying to do is license the total industry, all those licensees that form part of that particular industry. That industry in itself is changing. It's changing in a way that consumers need to be made aware of what their rights are. They need to have full disclosure of what their rights are and also what they can expect in terms of services that are being provided through the bereavement industry. It's a very complex, very sensitive area. We need reforms to deal with the way the combined cemetery and funeral home operations would be permitted. As I said before, the one jurisdiction that doesn't allow for this is Prince Edward Island. But what we're looking to do is trying to bring together an approach here that would allow for combined cemetery and funeral home operations.

We are also looking to strengthen consumer protection provisions. We are also looking to make sure that the playing field is level with respect to this particular industry. The fact of the matter is that what we're seeing by the statistics I indicated earlier—in 1989 cremation was a choice for just under 28% of funerals and by the year 2000, 40% of the funerals involved cremation—is a significant change in terms of how people are dealing with their loved ones, and also what they should be made aware of in terms of what they have to face in a particularly difficult time.

I would urge the members to seriously consider what is being proposed here, to seriously consider what the protections of the consumers need to be here. This is an area that is long overdue for reform. There have been extensive consultations on this area. Certainly this is an area that I think the Legislature needs to address. I am confident that it will be addressed by this Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): I'm pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill 209, An Act respecting funerals, burials, cremations and related services and providing for the amendment of other statutes. Given the substantive nature of the legislation that is now before the House—legislation relating to hydro, an omnibus bill that was just tabled today—you might question whether or not this is one of the most important items on the agenda of the current government. I would submit to you tonight, though, Mr Speaker—and I know you would be entirely sympathetic to this view—that an act respecting funerals, burials and cremations is very significant legislation indeed. You would know as well, Mr Speaker, that when people have to access the services of a funeral director they are doing so on typically very short notice. They are doing so with a need to make instant choices about very large, very expensive purchases that their family is about to incur and they are making these choices at a time when they are particularly emotionally vulnerable. So perhaps there are very few issues of consumer protection that are more crucial to the consumer than this particular bill is.

I would also suggest that not only is it important in terms of consumer protection, but it's also important economic legislation. There are some 500 funeral businesses in the province of Ontario, largely relatively small businesses, many of them family businesses. They are businesses which are potentially affected in very real ways by any legislative changes that are made in the acts and regulations that govern their operations.

The government is suggesting that the reason this bill is here is because it is really just a repealing of the two acts which do now govern both the operation of cemeteries and the rules and regulations that funeral directors and establishments operate under; that they're repealing the Cemeteries Act and the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act and they're replacing them with one statute. It's a simple process of consolidation. In fact, as you look at what is really quite a large bill, you realize that it does more than simply consolidate two existing acts. When it comes to consumer protection, it's probably fair to say that most of what's being offered in the name of consumer protection is already in the existing acts and this merely consolidates them.

But there's a very significant addition, a very significant change, and that is the change which ends the separation of the work that is done by those who operate cemeteries and the work and services provided by those who are funeral directors. Under this legislation, for the first time, it's possible for cemeteries to build funeral homes on cemetery grounds. This has been defended by the government in the address that we just heard to the House as being a way of giving the consumer one-stop shopping options. That may be fair enough, that may be something the consumer sees as desirable. But I think there are some very real risks in this, in ending that separation which has been the history of the provision of funeral services in this province.

One of the real risks is that there is a danger of moving from those 500 relatively small businesses that operate in the province of Ontario to much larger, consolidated businesses that could become almost monopolistic. I think that's a serious concern. It would certainly affect consumer choice. It would certainly affect prices that people are having to pay. I think it's a serious enough concern—it goes well beyond simply consolidating two existing acts—that this bill deserves full public hearings.

The government will say, "Why would we need to have public hearings? We've just had extensive consultation." The member opposite in making his address this evening referenced the fact of consultations repeatedly in his remarks, to assure us that everybody who might be concerned and aware of the issues sufficiently to read this legislation has been involved in the consultation, has given their input and is happy with that.

We've had interesting experiences with the consultation process, perhaps from all governments, and particularly from this one. I remember one particular consultation, and you'll recognize it's an unrelated issue but I raise it because of the whole question of faith in consultation, because consultation has been offered repeatedly tonight as justification for not having to look more closely at this bill. There was a sudden announcement in my own particular riding about the name change for a provincial park. Not a big deal as provincial issues go perhaps, but it caught the community by surprise.

I called the Ministry of Natural Resources. I can't remember whether it was under this government or under the previous one. I wanted to find out where this name change had come from. They told me that there had been a consultation, a thorough consultation. As the sitting member, not having been aware of the consultation, I was curious to know about it. I asked, "Could I see the consultation documents, please?" They produced them for me, as they were required to, and there was a lot of consultation. The fact that it was done very quietly is beside the point. There was a lot of consultation, pages and pages of input. People obviously cared about the change in the name of this park.

What surprised me was, as I read through each one of those consultation documents that individuals had taken the time to send in to the Ministry of Natural Resources, all but one were opposed to the name change. So the government said, "We've consulted," and indeed they had, but what they did was the exact opposite of what the consultation would have suggested they do.

Today in the House I raised another issue around consultation. As you know, this government doesn't particularly like to consult. They have to be pushed into it most times. And when they do consult, they often do it privately, which was the case with the consultation on changes to Cancer Care Ontario which was the issue I raised in the House this afternoon. We find in that case that the government consulted in private, got very negative responses and decided to go ahead anyway. So when I hear the government defend a bill purely on the basis that they've consulted—"We don't need to talk about it any longer; it's fine"—I get very nervous. So I went to what we had heard from the people who were directly involved in the consultation process; for example, the Ontario Funeral Service Association, obviously a group that's going to be involved in a consultation on significant changes to the provision of funeral services. They did in fact have extensive involvement in the committee that the members opposite have referred to. They express in this press release related to the bill, when they first saw the bill tabled, "We are hopeful that this legislation will bring all service providers up to the same high standards of professionalism and accountability that currently exist for funeral homes."

Obviously they're not concerned that there's a lack of regulation or consumer protection currently, but they want to make sure that there's going to be a level playing field for everybody as these significant changes are brought forward.

And what does this association, probably the single most involved stakeholder group, say about the legislation itself after all this consultation? They say, "Although the basis of the legislation is in place, there are some issues that remain a concern." They add that they "have every intention of playing an active role in drafting regulations that address them."

Well, if this group is to be involved in regulatory changes, they've got their work cut out for them. I looked at this quite large bill and discovered that there are no less than nine and a half legislative pages that are used to set out the regulatory powers to be held by the minister and the government. How can we even talk about what this bill does for consumer protection when nine and a half pages worth of regulations are going to be determined not in the full view of the Legislature, not with public debate, not necessarily with consultation at all, as much as the funeral service association is planning to have involvement in the development of regulations, but it's to be done by the minister and the government behind closed doors, as all regulations are developed?

I think we have reasons to be concerned when the main stakeholder group, the group most involved in the consultation process, feels that they have to make this bill work through a process of affecting regulations which we know is not going to be done in public. Not only that, but when the funeral associations are making these comments, expressing these concerns, they say "without having reviewed the bill in its entirety." We can only imagine how those concerns would be magnified if they'd had a chance to actually look at the details in the bill.

I think it's probably true that the other very involved stakeholder group, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, has had some opportunity to really look at the bill and to express its concern. Obviously, as I mentioned, there are 500 small businesses involved. These are the people who are represented by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. So the Canadian Federation of Independent Business was also involved as a stakeholder in the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee. They wrote to the minister in May and talked about the fact that negotiating a consensus within the stakeholder group proved far more difficult than was imagined.

But much of what was agreed upon by the committee was based on the following principles: that there be a single regulatory regime—now, with nine and a half pages of regulations, how do we know there's going to be a single regulatory regime to ever emerge out of this? Nine and a half pages of regulatory powers, not regulations that we're looking at; powers to create regulations. You don't give away that much regulatory-making power and expect that you're going to have a single regulatory regime.

The other principle, an important principle, was a level playing field for industry participants; a third principle was that there be strengthened consumer protection, that there be clear rules for allowing combinations to include "strengthened viability of separated operations." It sounds to me like the directly opposite way from which this government has chosen to go with this bill.

They go on to say, "The 'level playing field' imperative resulted in a proposal that would have municipally owned and non-profit businesses in this sector make payments in lieu of taxes."

It's the whole issue of a level playing field: who has an advantage, the kind of advantage that might put other businesses out of business because they're at a competitive disadvantage?

What does the Canadian Federation of Independent Business say about the bill itself? Well, they say, first of all, on the issue of the lack of a level playing field—I should preface it by saying that before they get into the details, they simply say, "We have reviewed the draft legislation ... there are areas where it does not respect the agreement of principles put forward by that committee, the very committee that the government keeps holding up as the model of consultation. The CFIB says, "Our reading of the legislation is that there are areas where it does not respect the agreement of principles put forth by the BSAC to your predecessor.... As a consequence, we worry that the future viability of independent operations in the bereavement sector will be threatened, ultimately putting consumers at risk."

So what are their specific concerns? First of all, on the issue of a lack of a level playing field on taxes: that whole question of whether or not those who are not now paying taxes, those who own cemetery properties should be paying a grant, a payment in lieu of taxes, has been rejected, that the proposed payment in lieu of property taxes, which may appear, is to be returned, dollar for dollar, to the municipal cemeteries, ostensibly for care and maintenance, and this without any accounting for the disposition of the money, clearly giving the advantage to the cemetery, to the great competitive disadvantages of those 500 businesses, funeral homes, that are currently in operation.

The CFIB is concerned about restrictive practices. They're concerned about the "operators of 'existing visitation centres' on cemetery property, and existing crematoria ... being rewarded through a 'grandfathering' clause, that they're going to be grandfathered. The reason CFIB points out this concern is that these are the operations that have essentially been illegal. These are the sorts of phony funeral homes, not called funeral homes, visitation centres on the cemetery, with something off-site owned by the cemetery operation to do what is not technically allowed to be done on cemetery property. They're essentially unregulated funeral sites breaking a rule, and this government has decided to reward them for that by grandfathering them even as they bring in new legislation.

There you have the results of the consultation: two of the key stakeholder groups, both very involved in the consultation, both expressing serious reservations, serious concerns about the legislation which has actually resulted from that consultation process, and saying they don't believe that this legislation is true to that consultation at all. So, again, this needs to go out for public hearings, because it is significant enough to warrant that kind of hearing.

There's a question of who is concerned about this, who should be concerned. Clearly, small funeral homes—we've talked about that; the not-for-profit operations, the Memorial Society of Thunder Bay, for example—that offer a low-cost alternative to individuals who choose that route. What new rules are they going to play under? What kinds of new costs are they going to face and what costs will have to be passed on to the people they're offering services to, offering services in the name of a low-cost alternative? Those are all unknown.

I honestly don't know exactly where the municipalities stand on this; I'll confess that to you. I've heard that there are some real advantages for municipalities. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business thinks that municipalities may use their local government powers to serve their own commercial interests, that they can take advantage of this bill, particularly since they are not going to be expected to make the payments in lieu of taxes or, if they're expected to make those, that they're going to get compensation in full from the government for that. The CFIB clearly feels that municipalities could be a beneficiary of this legislation.

On the other hand, I understand that many of the municipalities are extremely concerned, as cemetery owners, that they may be liable, if the operator of the cemetery goes out of business, to take over the operation. So I think, again, we need to find out whether this is something municipalities agree with or don't agree with once the municipalities have had a chance to find out, not what was being recommended through a consultation process, but what actually appears in the bill.

I'm actually running out of time, because there is a lot to talk about with this bill. I wanted to come back to what the minister has offered as his reasons, his defence of the bill, why he thinks this is a good bill. He talks about the fact that we are a very diverse community and that we need in this kind of legislation to be able to reflect the diversity of religious and faith beliefs that exist in our community. I couldn't agree more with that sentiment. I just don't understand how setting in place legislation which potentially creates a greater monopoly of the provision of services responds to the diversity of the Ontario culture.

The minister has talked in his opening comments on the bill about providing greater choice for consumers who want to make all the arrangements in one place. I understand the making of all the arrangements in one place. That's clear: one-stop shopping. The members have made it obvious that that is the main reason they're bringing this forward. It's what they say is the main reason for bringing this forward. But I have to argue with whether or not that provides greater choice. Because if we should lose the existing funeral homes, if we jeopardize and lose some of the small not-for-profit operations, the operations like the Memorial Society of Thunder Bay, if we make it virtually impossible for them to continue to do business in this climate, then we haven't created greater choice for consumers; we've restricted choice for consumers.

The minister also said that this permits new business models and, by permitting new business models, it will allow businesses to grow and create jobs. Well, again you have to question whether or not that's what the legislation actually achieves. Sounds good. Think it's a good idea. But suppose those 500 businesses are negatively affected. Suppose some of those 500 businesses are shut down. In what way have we actually created jobs? Does creating bigger and bigger establishments offering one-stop shopping to consumers create jobs or does it in fact reduce jobs?

Obviously, the main purpose of this legislation is to offer consumer protection. I guess as I look through this bill, this very extensive bill, 85 pages, if I have any sense at all—and I won't claim expertise—of what was in the two acts that this replaces, I would think that most of the legislation that provides consumer protection is already in the other acts. In fact I think there's been general agreement that legislation in Ontario regarding both cemetery operation and the operation of funeral homes has been quite stringent. The regulations around the requirements of the people operating those homes are also very stringent. So I'm not sure we've added much consumer protection through this; in fact, it's at least possible that we've opened up a new area of challenge for consumers, because it's not clear that this bill prohibits retailers from coming knocking on the doors, selling funeral services and doing so on commission, a totally different situation from the way in which pre-sold funerals can be done now.

Again I tell you, we've had very recent experience in the province with a retail opportunity newly opened up by the government of Ontario: people knocking on our doors to sell us electricity. We've seen how vulnerable the consumers are to that kind of operation and to sham presentations and misrepresentations that get presented to them at their doors. So there may be less protection here than there was under the previous acts.

I do believe that there are enough concerns around this bill and that this act affects people in a way which is profoundly important to them at time of need, that it affects the operation of small businesses in virtually every community across this province, sufficiently important that we do need to call for public hearings. I am not optimistic. We have seen what's happening in the legislative agenda of this government. We've seen that what they want to do is ram through legislation in the next—what do we have?—two and a half weeks left before the government wants to adjourn the House for the Christmas season, and it appears they want a clear docket. We should still push for public hearings.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I want to begin my remarks where my colleague from Thunder Bay left off, and that is the call for public hearings. Some might say that happens on virtually every bill. Well, surprise, surprise. When you pass laws, there's this argument out there in the public—I know it's kind of a silly notion they have—but they kind of like to be a part of the process of the laws that are going to affect them. So we'll begin and end with that request. It's probably the most substantive part of what I'll say this evening, that there needs to be hearings on this.

I just want to briefly in the time that I have go through a bit of a chronology. The first time this issue came on to my political radar screen was a phone call from the faith groups, who asked for an opportunity to meet with me to talk about this pending legislation. I couldn't make it at the times that were available. My good friend and colleague Tony Martin from Sault Ste Marie took that briefing and advised me of the concerns they had. A little time goes by, and the next thing I hear, I get a phone call from one of the councillors who just happens to be in one of the areas of my riding, Councillor Marvin Caplan, who called me and said that he had it from reliable sources that within a day or two indeed this bill would be tabled. He wanted to express concerns that he had, both on behalf of our city, Hamilton, and AMO, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, where he had played a part in the role of looking at this bill to determine what the implications were for municipalities. So both locally for Hamilton and on the broader municipal scene, he had some concerns.

As things turned out, last night I was in the Speaker's chair when we had the first round of debates on this and I heard the Minister of Consumer and Business Services, Mr Hudak, when he stood in his place and expressed an opinion that this need not be partisan. I have had no reason to date to do anything other than take Mr Hudak at his word on other matters and I believe he was sincere. If he's walking me down the garden path, then so be it. That's always possible, but that's not the way I took it.

Further to that, in fact, a little later in the evening the Honourable Norm Sterling, another individual known for his integrity, said this—this is just last night in the House: "Yes, I think we should have hearings on this if that's what you feel comfortable with," meaning the opposition members. "There's no fear on our part about the outcome because the outcome should be whatever the consumer and the industry want." From all of that, one would conclude that the government is serious.

I asked my caucus whip, Gilles Bisson, whether or not we'd had that kind of indication or commitment from the government and, to date, that hasn't happened, and to this moment my colleague is indicating to me we still haven't heard that there will be committee hearings. It would be very helpful, assuming we are to believe—and as I say, I choose to believe the word of two cabinet ministers, Mr Hudak and Mr Sterling—that the government is not seeking to impose any kind of ideological thinking on this, that they're not looking to score any political points, that what they really want to do is get a good bill.

OK, let's hear it. It would be really helpful if somebody—even one of the ministers who is here—would just nod to me now. We have the Deputy Premier in the Legislature right now. It would be helpful if she would indicate to us that, yes, there are going to be public hearings. Then we could really stand down a lot of our concerns here and put those over to the committee hearings where we can have experts come in.

In talking to a former minister of this ministry, Marilyn Churley, no one is questioning the complexity of this. From last night's remarks, I'm led to believe it's been like 100 years since some of this legislation has been looked at, and for decades various governments have said, "You know, we really ought to do something about this legislation. We ought to get it modernized. There are things we need to do in the industry to bring some better harmony and consumer protection," etc.

Fair enough. Let's accept that it's complex. Let's also accept that it's not an easy thing to debate. I've watched members both from this vantage point and where you are, Speaker, and there's nobody here who is truly 100% comfortable with this. Maybe the Speaker, because it's his profession, but for most of us it's not something we're particularly comfortable talking about. Usually we don't know an awful lot about it, because whenever we are dealing with the details, it's at a time of great emotional distress: life is in chaos, you've lost someone who means a great deal to you and you're hurting. It's more a matter of, "Let's get the mechanics of this over with, because I've got to deal with what I've lost and somehow put my life back together and keep going." I think that's perhaps the story for a lot of us here and, I would suspect, a lot of the people who may be watching and listening to the debate around this.

Is it just us? Is it because we aren't prepared to tackle the hard political choices that are to be made? Some are suggesting that is the case with the government, notwithstanding the excellent work of Justice Adams. I understand he's played a crucial role in trying to bring the various parties together in an attempt to, if not mediate, certainly, through discussion, come to a consensus within the industry and those people who are involved. Let's not be shy about calling it an industry. There are businesses, there are a thousands of people in this province who earn their living in this area of society and of life, and the other part. Knowing there has been that attempt again gave me reason to believe that the minister is not trying to spin anything, that he really wants to do something about this.

But I want to underscore comments made by previous speakers, both this evening and last night, about the number of groups involved. I did hear a couple of government members suggest that everything is all hunky-dory now that Justice Adams was able to work everything out. Well, apparently not, because a lot of the detail, once again, is going to come out in the regulations. We don't know what the regulations are. It's one thing when a bill is being driven by the politics of the government and damn the torpedoes—they'll bring out the regulations when they darn well choose and not a moment sooner—versus a bill where the lead minister is telling us, "We don't want this to be partisan. There's a lot of work that needs to be done and, as lawmakers," as opposed to being labelled by our parties, "we should be attempting to do something about this." It would be very helpful if the government would indicate, in addition to public hearings, that we get some sense of what the regulations are going to look like. If that's indeed where the bulk of the law is, notwithstanding 86 pages of Bill 209, the regs are crucial.

There are a lot of different players involved in all of this, all legitimate players who have a right to have their voices heard. I've mentioned the faith groups. There are the independent funeral establishments. I've got notes that indicate that the urban perspective is different than it would be for the rural or the medium-sized, and then there are general applications for all funeral establishments. That's just within that one part of the overall sector.

Cemeteries: there are a lot of different entities that own and operate the cemeteries. So now we're getting into sub-subgroups that have a valid concern, a valid voice, and deserve to be heard, if you're being forthright about this not being a partisan bill.

Consumers: obviously, and there are people who have had some very bad experiences. There are consumer groups who represent those consumers who know these issues from that consumer perspective. That's not going to be heard through this debate.

Casket and marker retailers: there's another whole world. Municipalities have serious concerns. As I heard from my friend Councillor Caplan, municipalities have some real issues. AMO, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, sent in a letter advising that they have concerns and outlining what they are. What do they want? Public hearings. They just want an opportunity to be heard.

In fact, AMO said, "The report"—meaning the initial government report—"offered a number of recommendations aimed at meeting the minister's objectives, claiming it had broad consensus from committee members. However, municipal representatives on the committee have indicated that a broad consensus does not exist and a number of recommendations have the potential to negatively impact municipalities"—exactly what Councillor Caplan was outlining to me in his phone call about the concerns they had. What he didn't want to find out was that this would be one of those rare occasions when, given the fact the government says this isn't partisan, it gets all-party support and hustles through here. So his point in calling me as his MPP was to make sure that didn't happen. Of course now, as I get more into this issue and as all of us here get more into this, we're finding out that municipalities aren't the only significant players that have concerns. So I say to the minister, we're not there yet; notwithstanding what some members of your government may say, we aren't.

The Anglican Church of Canada says in part in their correspondence, "We told the minister that we supported the intention in the bill of furthering consumer protection, but have concerns about the board of a new authority making decisions that would have inadvertent consequences for religious communities," and then they proceed in their correspondence to outline what those concerns are. I can't believe for a second that you're going to just turn your back on the churches, on the faith groups.

But I'm still not getting an indication from the Deputy Premier that there are going to be public hearings. That's all we're really asking at this stage, and it's not that much to ask. Nothing.

Some of the concerns of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business have been raised, but I'll put one more sentence in their correspondence on the record: "As a consequence, we worry that the further viability of independent operations in the bereavement sector will be threatened, ultimately putting consumers at risk."

The Ontario Monument Builders Association says in part, "OMBA is deeply concerned that the proposed act will severely disadvantage consumers and further create an uneven playing field between competitors in the bereavement services industry."

So not only are there concerns in each of the various components that make up this sector and their relationship to the law and concerns about the consumer, as I would hope, being the ultimate interested party in this matter, there are also concerns raised that if this isn't done properly—my words—and thoroughly and with broad enough consultation, it's going to create problems between businesses within the industry, within the sector.

If this is all starting to sound pretty complicated, it's because it is. Again, all we're asking at this point—I can tell you, I can't imagine anybody building an election plank out of this matter. It's just not going to happen. Given the reputation of the two ministers I've mentioned, Ministers Hudak and Sterling, I would say the government's integrity is on the line here. For what it's worth, your word is on the line. All we're asking for at this stage is to let us have some public hearings. I know that's a huge thing to ask of this government; it shouldn't be, given all the times that bills should have gotten some attention, but you're the one that led this debate by saying, "This isn't partisan." I heard the minister last night. He was almost baiting opposition members to prove him wrong, that given the nature of what we're talking about, surely opposition members wouldn't make political hay out of this. Fair enough. Some of us enjoy nothing more than the opportunity to actually have some input and affect the outcome of legislation. It's sort of a rare treat when you're on this side of the House. I can assure you there are a lot of us who would be quite—what are you doing? Is it going to fire something at me? For those who can't see, one of the ministers was putting something rather interesting on his desk.

Anyway, I don't want to treat the matter too lightly. I just want to point out that you'll notice that even my volume is down this evening because I'm not angry about anything; I am concerned—

Interjection.

Mr Christopherson: I know. See? It can happen.

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): It's a shock.

Mr Christopherson: Well, there you go. Now shock me by asking your Deputy Premier to indicate that there will be some public hearings, and we can all walk away happy and shocked rather than angry and shocked, which is usually the way I find myself leaving this chamber.

But I don't want to be too trite about it. It's obviously an important matter. It affects virtually every one of us—literally, I guess, every one of us—at some point.

Hon Mrs Johns: You don't care when it happens to you.

Mr Christopherson: Well, I like to think somebody will. But even if it's not for ourselves, we do have loved ones. We all go through these very difficult times in our lives. The business of burying our own shouldn't be a further burden. We've now got an opportunity. The bill is in the House. We're halfway through the debate, or maybe close to the end of the debate, on second reading. The ministers, on behalf of the government, have indicated that they really want to have a non-partisan bill.

Both opposition parties have pointed out that there are very serious, legitimate concerns, that there are people who have expertise and who are prepared to come to committee hearings to assist us in making whatever changes are necessary. And maybe there are no changes necessary. That could be. But we really won't know until we give these individuals and these organizations an opportunity to come in and have their say.

So I put it back to the government: if you're legitimate and you're sincere about what you said and you're going to stand behind your word, then indicate to us that we'll get at least a few days of public hearings. Then perhaps we can have one of those rare times when we all walk out of here feeling good about a law that has been enacted rather than the usual winners and losers. On this issue, there is really no room for losers, because it affects all of us.

Again, on behalf of all those involved in this as a business and as a profession or as an investment or as part of their religious practice, give Ontarians a chance to have a say. Let's make it one of those bills that's non-partisan. Let's work together. I'm prepared to take up the government on their offer to see what we can do to come up with a bill that meets everyone's needs. We can all take credit for that, as if that was the most important thing, but more importantly, we'll get a law that reflects the needs of the people of Ontario. At the end of the day, isn't that supposedly why we're all here in the first place?

The Acting Speaker: With reference to the unanimous consent, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow afternoon.

SAVE THE MASKINONGE

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): In the summer of this year, I met with representatives of the Save the Maskinonge committee, along with York North Liberal candidate John Taylor, to discuss contamination of the abandoned Thane Aluminum Smelter site on Warden Avenue in Georgina Township.

On Monday of this week, I visited the site and again, along with the Save the Maskinonge committee and Mr Taylor, toured the property and observed personally the visual mess and evidence of contamination on the smelter site and on wetlands adjacent to the smelter property. It is unacceptable that after ministry studies concluded that toxic materials at the site should be removed and that contamination of adjacent wetlands should be mitigated, the Minister of the Environment informed me in a letter dated September 6, 2002, in reply to my letter to him concerning this subject, that "there is not sufficient evidence of off-site adverse effects that would justify the expenditure of provincial funds to clean up this site."

Once again, I call upon the Minister of the Environment to comply with the request of the Save the Maskinonge committee, and the request which is contained in their petitions, read by me in this House, to conduct a thorough environmental assessment of the Thane property and adjacent lands and to ensure that a complete cleanup of the contaminated lands takes place at the very earliest opportunity. The adjacent wetlands, the Maskinonge River and Lake Simcoe are all in danger of contamination if this government fails to take timely and complete action.

ONTARIO PROFESSIONAL FIRE FIGHTERS ASSOCIATION

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): Today I'd like to take this opportunity to welcome members of the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association to Queen's Park. They've been spending a lot of time with us here today, ensuring that their voices are heard on issues that are most important to them. I believe that the president of the association, Fred LeBlanc, and the first vice-president, Ron Gorrie, are in the chamber with us right now, along with many of the other folks.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order.

Mr Dunlop: That's too bad, isn't it? Sad, isn't it?

The OPFFA represents about 8,500 professional firefighters through 74 local organizations. Our government recognizes, values and supports the work these individuals accomplish every day in the name of public safety.

Firefighters are first on the scene during emergencies, at times putting their own lives at risk to save the lives of others. They go quietly about their business, not looking to be recognized for heroic acts. Pictures of the September 11 tragedy that are forever etched in our memories include such acts by firefighters.

Following the events of September 11, the government launched a number of initiatives to support firefighters, including an investment of $3 million to create a centre of excellence at the Ontario Fire College.

The centre will provide specialized training and educational resources for firefighters in responding to chemical, biological, nuclear and radiological emergencies. They will offer interagency training for fire, ambulance, police and other front-line personnel who must work together to provide a coordinated, effective response to disasters.

Again, I welcome the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association to the Legislature and hope their day is very productive.

TOM NOBLES

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): Our community lost a great person two weeks ago with the passing of Tom Nobles. Tom was an individual who loved everything he did. He loved his family with a passion that words can't describe. He loved his church. He loved being reeve of Sidney township. He brought an energy to it that was unmatched. He loved being a councillor in the city of Quinte West and he loved working for muscular dystrophy. Jerry Lewis may think they're his kids, but they're Tom's kids. Particularly, Tom loved being a professional firefighter.

Firefighters don't become heroes for what they do at the scene of a fire. Firefighters become heroes the day they join the fire department, for they know that every time they go to work, they may be asked and called upon to make a sacrifice.

Tom was off work for some years with an illness that could not be diagnosed. We now know what it is that killed Tom. Tom went into a fire some years ago in a chemical plant and breathed some chemicals that ultimately caused his death. Tom died in the line of duty just as much as if he had died at that fire. I don't believe it ever occurred to Tom to not go into the fire that day. He was prepared to make any sacrifice he had to make.

I would like to express our sincerest condolences to his wife Barbara and to his children. Tom made a very real and positive contribution to our community and we will miss him.

VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS LEGISLATION

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): As was pointed out, today Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association representatives are at Queen's Park lobbying MPPs. While I respect all firefighters and appreciate their dedication and bravery, I continue to speak out in favour of my Bill 30.

Bill 30 is intended to stop tactics of harassment and intimidation used by firefighters' union leadership to threaten their members who also serve as volunteers in their home communities. The damage is done as these double-hatters succumb to the threats and quit their volunteer posts.

Tim Lee, who is here in the gallery today, a firefighter who works in Whitby and volunteers in Kawartha Lakes, was recently convicted by his union for the so-called offence of volunteering. Mr Lee's courage is also an inspiration. He isn't quitting, and every member of this House should agree that Tim Lee and hundreds of others like him should have the right to volunteer on their own free time. Bill 30 would preserve that right.

The fire marshal has stated that this type of legislation is needed to avoid putting public safety at risk. The Association of Municipalities supports swift passage of my bill and has said so repeatedly. The Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs last week called a general meeting to discuss Bill 30 and urged the government "to schedule third reading and passage of Bill 30, as amended, in as timely a fashion possible."

I have been encouraged by the Minister of Public Safety and Security and the Premier and the interest they have shown, but without action, public safety is left at risk. We can't turn a blind eye to this issue of public safety. That is why we need to call this bill for third reading and passage into law right now.

OMERS PENSION FUND

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I want to speak about an issue that's important to firefighters in this province. That's the issue of the autonomy of the OMERS pension.

Earlier this fall my leader, Dalton McGuinty, wrote a letter to the government, which was passed on to the government House leader, indicating our support for the autonomy of OMERS. What we said was this: we believe the legislation must provide for a dispute resolution mechanism similar to the teachers' plan, a single-base plan with additional supplemental plans for all members and employers, the exclusion of OMERS from the Municipal Act and the ability to override the Pension Benefits Act to allow monies to be taken from pension funds to pay for the start-up and ongoing costs during the transition period.

We believe this should be a stand-alone, clean bill to allow its speedy passage through the Legislature prior to adjourning for the winter, so that it can be dealt with presumably in advance of an election. It's our belief that allowing the autonomy for OMERS and the ability to operate within these guidelines will provide the compromise that is needed between all the groups involved. We on this side of the House believe in compromise. We're not wedded to just beating people up and harming them.

So if this government really cares about firefighters and it really wants to do the right thing, do what they've been telling each and every one of you to do: support the autonomy of OMERS. That's what you ought to be doing for our professional firefighters from across the province of Ontario.

VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS LEGISLATION

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I too, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, want to thank the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association for being here today as part of their yearly lobby of all members of this Legislature.

I want to say to the member from Wellington, as he speaks about Bill 30 and the need to pass that bill, he knows full well that the association that is here today do not support passing that bill. To stand up in this House today when the firefighters are here, who have very serious concerns about that bill, and urge his government to pass it—I think it is just incredible that he would do that today.

I would also say to him that if the members of his government, including the Premier, are so confident about that bill, why don't they call it for third reading?—not that I'm recommending they do. But yesterday, when I asked the Premier about my adoption bill, the Premier, after he said my bill was non-partisan and a moral issue, linked it with your bill and said that we, as the House, should deal with all those bills at the same time. He knows full well how our party, the New Democratic Party in its entirety, feels about Bill 30. To stand and say that we should start negotiating such bills to get to Bill 77, which right now, by not being passed, is causing unnecessary deaths in this province, is a travesty.

FOOD DRIVE

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I'd also like to welcome the professional firefighters.

On behalf of the members on this side of the House, I'm pleased to announce that the province-wide door-to-door food drive was held this past Tuesday, November 26, and was a tremendous success. Rental property managers and owners joined forces with residents across Ontario to collect over 75,000 pounds of food. All food collected will remain in the respective communities.

The Fair Rental Policy Organization, the Greater Toronto Apartment Association, Bonnie Hoy and Associates, and residents across the province organized over 430 apartment buildings to make this holiday season a good one for all Ontarians. That's over 150,000 suites across Ontario. This event is no doubt the largest multi-unit food drive not only in Ontario but indeed across Canada.

I commend the associations and the residents of Ontario for the difference they have made in ordinary people's lives, especially at this time of year when generosity should greet everyone and everyone should be generous to those who are less fortunate.

ONTARIO PROFESSIONAL FIRE FIGHTERS ASSOCIATION

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I rise in the House today to speak on behalf of Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals to recognize Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association Day here at Queen's Park. We want to recognize the OPFFA and all its members for their dedication to fire services in Ontario. The OPFFA represents more than 10,000 full-time firefighters and provides expertise and support to professional firefighters so they can continue to keep our communities safe and secure. The Ontario Liberals value the contribution all firefighters make to keep Ontarians safe and secure in their communities—all firefighters.

Dalton McGuinty announced in our plan, Growing Strong Communities, that we will be providing a thermal imager to each fire service in Ontario and have pledged right-to-know legislation and OMERS autonomy and to discuss with municipalities further ways to support our fire services regarding staff and equipment.

I commend the OPFFA for continuing to come back to the table to discuss solutions and offer alternatives to the ill-advised Bill 30. They have shown their true dedication to fire services by doing so, and I thank them for doing that.

On November 28, 2001, I introduced private member's Bill 141, which would require that any reduction or reorganization of fire services be approved by the fire marshal's office and that the fire marshal report to the ministry to ensure that our communities are safe and secure.

We thank them for the work they do in this province. We want to thank you and your families for your dedication.

LIBERAL COMMUNITY STRATEGY

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): I rose the other day to speak of a poll that demonstrates that the people of Ontario simply don't trust Dalton McGuinty and the Liberal Party.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We'll give the member full time. Come to order, please. We'll give you your time to begin again.

Ms Mushinski: A good example of why this is the case is the so-called Liberal community strategy released by Dalton on Monday. Dalton says that he will protect victims' rights. Well, where has he been? How could he miss that this Legislature, during this session, has already passed Bill 60, the first bill to protect victims' rights? If he doesn't know this, how can he possibly ever expect people to trust him to be the Premier? Dalton also wants to hire 1,000 more police officers. Again, where was he when we put 1,000 new cops in place in 2000 and, more to the point, why did he vote against 1,000 new cops in 1998 and in the 2000 budget? More flip-flops.

In fact, a close look at the Liberal community strategy shows that the government has already taken action on most of the various elements. Safe drinking water? Well, we've already enacted the toughest drinking water standards anywhere. Nutrient management? The Legislature already passed Bill 81, and get this: Dalton voted against the bill. This Liberal plan has more flip-flops than a pancake breakfast. It represents one more example of why the people of this province simply don't trust Dalton and his Liberals.

VISITOR

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to welcome Charlotte Van Leeuwen, who is in the members' gallery, the mother of Lauren, who is a page. I hope she won't be too disillusioned here today.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that today the clerk received the 11th report of the standing committee on government agencies. Pursuant to standing order 106(e), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON REGULATIONS AND PRIVATE BILLS

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on regulations and private bills and move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bills as amended:

Bill Pr9, An Act respecting The Elliott.

Bill Pr12, An Act respecting the Municipality of Chatham-Kent.

You committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr11, An Act respecting the Town of Erin.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): On a point of order: I know that today is a special day, so I want to take a moment to introduce, in the west gallery, the president of the Brantford Firefighters' Association, Mr Ed Glover, and with him, Gene Nesiol, the secretary and recording secretary. I'd like to welcome them and thank them for being here.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): I seek unanimous consent to put forward a motion that the House move to committee of the whole following question period in order to separate the offending sections of Bill 198 and that the official opposition will not put forward any amendments or seek debate.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I hear some noes.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

TORONTO ATMOSPHERIC FUND ACT, 2002

Mr Gilchrist moved first reading of the following bill:
Bill Pr15, An Act respecting the Toronto Atmospheric Fund.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Pursuant to standing order 84, this bill is referred to the standing committee on regulations and private bills.

RENT FREEZE AND RENT CONTROL ACT, 2002 LOI DE 2002 SUR LE GEL ET LE CONTRÔLE DES LOYERS

Mr Prue moved first reading of the following bill:
Bill 215, An Act to amend the Tenant Protection Act, 1997 / Projet de loi 215, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur la protection des locataires.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): This bill is introduced because rents continue to rise all over Ontario. For example, in Toronto they have risen in the last few years by $226 per month; in Ottawa by $201; in Hamilton by $129; in Oshawa by $128; and in Kitchener by $120. It is beyond the ability of many tenants to pay.

We have a choice here, and that choice is, do we allow people to make millions of dollars off this or do we ask the taxpayers to pay? We believe there is a need for a rent freeze until rent controls are restored.

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): Mr Speaker, on a point of order: We have questions today for a number of ministers who have not yet arrived, including the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. We all know what time question period—

Interjection.

Mr Duncan: Yes.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): There are only six junior ministers there.

Mr Duncan: We're looking for ministers.

The Speaker: They are coming. The minister is now here.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PENSION PLANS

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Minister of Finance. I want to draw your attention to the people sitting up in the public gallery behind me. There are several people who have come here today. They are very concerned and angry about your proposed changes to Ontario pension laws.

Several of those here today are from Peterborough. They are former employees of Johnson & Johnson Medical Products. Some 200 of those employees were laid off in 1998 and they are still waiting for their fair share of the pension surplus. They were awaiting the Monsanto decision, which came down last Friday, as you know. That decision said that employees are entitled to share in their pension surplus. Their employer is fighting them, and in a letter to the employees earlier this year said that they will hold out until you pass your legislation, which obviously is going to give them a decidedly unfair advantage.

These people, Madam Minister, want to know whether or not you are going to do the right thing, stand up for fairness and ensure that you withdraw the pension portion of Bill 198.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): Equitable treatment between employers and employees, making sure that employees have the pension they are entitled to, is extremely important. That's why, as you heard in my commitment on Monday and the Premier's commitment on Tuesday, this is not being proclaimed until consultations have occurred. If things need to be fixed, they will be fixed, because we need to ensure that pensioners understand and know that their pension rights are protected.

Mr McGuinty: Madam Minister, the people who are here today and the people whom you have angered around the province do not trust you.

Interruption.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Stop the clock, please. I would ask all the members in the gallery kindly to respect our rules. The members of the gallery are not allowed to speak out. I know you've come a long way to watch the questions and answers. I would appreciate your co-operation so that we can run smoothly.

The leader of the official opposition.

Mr McGuinty: Madam Minister, here's a comment made by a member of your own caucus: "We made a mistake and let's admit it.... People think we're letting companies steal the surplus from their pensions and we can't ... explain convincingly that we're not."

That member is right, and you are wrong. These people sitting behind me are right, as are their counterparts throughout the province of Ontario. They don't trust you. They don't trust you to somehow take this over and under cover of darkness maybe do what you did when you gave that sweetheart deal to professional sports teams in the province of Ontario.

What we're asking you to do is the only honourable and fair thing: to withdraw the pension portion of your bill, set it aside and kill it.

Hon Mrs Ecker: The opposition has raised concerns that people felt that they weren't consulted and that a process and time were not taken. So the Premier's commitment is very clear: we need to do further consultation; we need to ensure that pensioners are satisfied that their rights are protected. If changes need to be made, those changes will be made.

Mr McGuinty: What are you talking about? First you pass the bill, and then you consult? Is that the new rule around the Ontario Legislature? We're supposed to do it the other way around.

You never properly consulted. You never listened to these people. Had you bothered to stop and listen, you would have received the kind of information, the kind of anger and upset that these people are obviously expressing, not only here today but right around the province.

The only acceptable thing to do in these circumstances, the right thing to do, the fair thing to do, is for you to stop standing up for employers and to start standing up for fairness and to reject this portion of the bill that you're trying to sneak through and somehow have us believe that we're going to trust you. Reject this portion.

Hon Mrs Ecker: I think it's important to stress for the pensioners here in the gallery and for those who may be listening that there is nothing—there is nothing—that is proposed or under consideration that affects the earned benefits of pension plan members or—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Come to order. If the member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale does that again, he's out. We're not going to put up with that.

Sorry, Minister of Finance.

Hon Mrs Ecker: I think it deserves repeating that there is nothing on the table that is affecting the earned benefits of pension plan members, of retirees, of employees at all. The Premier's commitment is very, very clear: there needs to be further consultation. We need to ensure that those rights are protected. If changes need to be made, they will be.

The Speaker: New question?

The Speaker: We'll stand the question down and go on to the next one. The member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): My question is to the Minister of Finance. Minister, the issue is very simple: people don't trust you. It comes down to simply that. They've looked at what you've done over the litany of seven years when it comes to attacking every worker across this province. Whether it's the Employment Standards Act, the Workers' Compensation Board or working over professional firefighters under Bill 30, everybody knows what side you're going to fall on. You're going to fall on the side of the employer. So I say to you very simply, are you going to do the right thing at least for once in the last seven years and withdraw this legislation once and for all so people know they're not going to get shystered when it comes to their pensions?

Hon Mrs Ecker: First of all, there is already legislation on the books that very clearly protects the rights of pensioners in terms of their earned benefits, as it should. No one wishes to tamper with that. Pensioners depend very much on the pensions they've worked for throughout their lives, and we do not wish to tamper with that.

On the particular issue of employers versus employees on distribution of surpluses in certain circumstances, the Premier has been very clear: consultation needs to occur, and if changes need to be made, we will make those changes.

Mr Bisson: It's clear. There was a decision about a week ago on the Monsanto case that upheld what has been happening in this province since 1991; that is, employers don't have the unilateral right, on their own, to either take a pension holiday or take withdrawals from the pensions. What you're proposing to do is turn the clock back to the Conrad Black days, and that's not acceptable. Minister, people don't trust you. The question is really simple: will you do the right thing and withdraw this from the legislation?

Hon Mrs Ecker: I agree that employers do not have unilateral rights in these circumstances; they should not. The government would not wish to put anything in place that would do that. The Premier's commitment, as I've said, is very clear. He respects the rights of pensioners. He's been very clear that consultation will occur to ensure that pensioners' rights are protected. And if changes need to be made, we are quite prepared to make those, as we should. We think it's the responsible thing to do, and we have the Premier's commitment that that indeed will be the case.

Mr Bisson: That doesn't cut it. We don't have a problem now. That's the part you don't understand. The rules that have existed since 1991 have expressly forbade employers from being able to unilaterally withdraw surpluses from pension funds. In addition to that, the Monsanto ruling is saying, in fact, that the 1991 and 1988 changes that were made do exactly that. If there isn't a problem now, and you don't have a situation where employers are raiding pension surpluses or taking pension contribution holidays unilaterally, why do you need to make these changes? It's a very simple question.

I come back to you again on the premise of the first question: if there isn't a problem now and pensions are solvent and not in danger of growing broke and we don't have a problem with employers taking out surpluses, then why are you bringing in these changes through this legislation? It could be just for one thing; that is, withdrawing pension surpluses. I ask you again, on behalf of the people in the gallery, on behalf of the people I've met in Chatham-Kent on Monday and on behalf of all pensioners and future pensioners, will you do the right thing and withdraw this legislation?

Hon Mrs Ecker: The honourable member says there are no problems now. Well, there are some significant issues that need to be dealt with.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): The courts did that.

Hon Mrs Ecker: No, the courts did not deal with some of those issues. For example, they did not deal—
Interjection.

Hon Mrs Ecker: Are you interested in hearing the answer or not? They did not deal with cases where pension plans may not be in surplus situations today. They did not deal with cases where an employer is not providing the surplus they should be putting out for employees in a timely fashion. That has been something pensioners have complained about to us.

There are a number of issues. We have pension plans in this province where the employer and the employees have come to agreements about surplus sharing, and because of court rulings they're not allowed to put that forward. So there are some significant issues that need to be dealt with. Consultation will ensure it is done correctly. If changes need to be made, we're prepared to make them.

The Speaker: We will now go back to the stand-down question, if the minister is here.

ONTARIO STUDENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. While your government has been busy enabling tuition fees in Ontario to skyrocket, we learned this morning that you were actually spending less on student assistance today than you did in 1997. In fact, every single year for the past five years you have spent less and less on those students who cannot, by virtue of their financial circumstances, get into Ontario colleges and universities. Can you explain to parents and students who need financial assistance why you have abandoned them?

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): I'm very happy to answer the first question I've had in this whole sitting from the leader and from, of course, my colleague—I think she's asked me one—probably because of the answer I'm going to give, quite frankly.

I think what I'd like to share with the leader of the official opposition is that there are a lot of reasons for this number to be lower, but the first one is that over the last five years many fewer students actually have applied for OSAP. The reason they haven't is because there are so many more programs we offer to students. I will tell you that in 2001-02, 152,575 students in fact applied, and in 1997, 263,550 students applied. We have so many—

Mr McGuinty: Madam Minister, I'm not sure how you can say that with a straight face. The reason there are fewer students in Ontario today applying for student assistance is because you changed the rules on them. You've narrowed the grounds for eligibility. We have the toughest eligibility rules in all of Canada because of changes that you brought in on your watch.

Listen to one of these: "... parental income is now taken into account ... for all single students who have been out of high school for five years, regardless of whether they are dependents" and living at home with their parents. That means if somebody left high school at 18, they've been out there working for five years, maybe they're 23—you're now telling them that as far as you're concerned, they're dependent upon their parents. I think that's unreasonable. That's the reason why you're having fewer people who are eligible even to apply in Ontario.

I ask you again: in a knowledge-based economy, how can you possibly justify giving out less student assistance?

Hon Mrs Cunningham: This opposition leader can quote the press. I'm going to quote the federal Millennium Scholarship Foundation. A study released on September 16, 2002, noted that over the past decade the government—

Interjections.

Hon Mrs Cunningham: You know, Mr Speaker, I can't—I shouted last—

The Speaker: Member for Windsor-St Clair, come to order, please. This is his last warning as well.

Interjection.

The Speaker: This is your last warning. If you want to go out, we can do it right now. This is his last warning.

If I get up again for the member for Windsor-St Clair, he's out for the day. Minister, continue, please.

Hon Mrs Cunningham: A study released on September 16, 2002, by the federal Millennium Scholarship Foundation, with which we work closely, noted that over the past decade the government of Ontario has greatly increased annual expenditures on student financial assistance.

We have in fact introduced many other options for students. We have a set-aside at our universities. There's $126 million every year for students who may in fact have approached OSAP and have OSAP or have not got OSAP; there is another alternative. The Aiming for the Top scholarships: $26 million to students this year; it will grow to $35 million. The Ontario student opportunity trust fund: $600 million in endowments. The list goes on.

I will say right now—

The Speaker: The minister's time is up.

Mr McGuinty: Madam Minister, it doesn't matter how you slice it or dice it; the reason that Ontario students are not getting student assistance is because you've tightened up the eligibility criteria.

Here's something else you have done that exists nowhere else in Canada. A "family of four with a net income of $40,000 is expected to contribute toward their child's post-secondary education." That would never have happened under the old rules: a family of four, $40,000. Take into account rent or mortgage and car payments and groceries and taxes and the like and you're saying that in those circumstances those families are not entitled to any student assistance whatsoever.

You tell us now about your Ontario student opportunity trust fund, some special supplementary assistance you've created. In the last two years, you had $120 million allocated for this fund, but you only spent $46.5 million. That's less than 40% of the extra money you have apparently put in place to help students. Madam Minister, why not stand up and admit that the reason you're spending less money on student assistance in the province of Ontario is that you have deliberately narrowed the eligibility criteria?

Hon Mrs Cunningham: With regard to OSAP, it's true that in Ontario less students are applying. It's also true that across the country for the Canada student loans, less students are applying. The reason less students are applying is that governments are working together across the country. The students have opportunities for OSAP; they have opportunities for the millennium fund. They therefore have opportunities for loan forgiveness. They have numbers of opportunities. But the key point is that less are applying because people have jobs. Parents are better off than ever before. They are borrowing less money and they are paying down their student loans.

Last year alone, $1.1 billion in loan assistance was delivered to students through OSAP alone. I will say that we are working with the students—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

TORONTO YOUTH ASSESSMENT CENTRE

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): A question to the Minister of Public Safety: Minister, you've created a crisis in both our adult and youth correctional and detention facilities. Just last week, Judge Weagant imposed an absolute discharge on a 17-year-old young offender who pled guilty to multiple counts of theft and mischief because of the 10 hellish days—"hellish" is the language of the judge—that young person spent in your Toronto Youth Assessment Centre under conditions the judge described as "Dickensian," among other things. The judge talked about the youth sleeping on a mattress on the floor with no pillow in a range that was festering with vermin crawling across the floor and across those beds. The judge spoke of frequent beatings administered upon this youth and presumably upon others because of your overcrowding and because of your understaffing and underresourcing of the Toronto Youth Assessment Centre and other, similar provincial facilities.

What are you going to do about it, Minister?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): I am unable to talk about the specific case, but I can tell you that the ministry has launched an investigation into the allegations. The child advocate, whose responsibility it is to ensure that treatment is appropriate within our institutions, was in the facility this month, and as far as I am aware as of today, she had no concerns with respect to the operations of the facility.

Mr Kormos: Minister, you'd better have some concerns, because the judges in this community and across this province sure as heck do, and they are releasing young offenders out on to the street as some modest restitution for the conditions in your facilities.

This isn't new to you. Back in October, reporter Victor Malarek wrote about the beatings that were being administered by gangs of young offenders in the back of police vans as young offenders were being transported from facilities like the Toronto Youth Assessment Centre to provincial courts. You appear to have done nothing about that either.

You were invited to go to Mimico. I was one of the people in this Legislature who, at the request of the staff there, asked you to go to that facility and examine it. You say the advocate took a look. Why haven't you taken a look? Is the judge wrong, or are you irresponsible?

Hon Mr Runciman: As is frequently the case, the member opposite is wrong. The Toronto Police provide court transportation for offenders. We've spoken with the police with respect to the problem in transportation and the violence that apparently has occurred within some of the vehicles transporting young offenders to the courts. They are in the process of putting video cameras into the back of these court vehicles.

I think all of us appreciate that many of the youth who show up at this centre have behaviour problems. They're not happy to be there. They're often quite violent and that's why we have a staff psychiatrist on duty.

It's a busy remand centre. Our long-term plan is to close down this facility, to renovate Vanier Centre for Women to serve as a 300-bed youth jail for Toronto and the GTA. As indicated in my initial response with respect to this specific matter, the ministry has launched an investigation into the allegations.

PENSION PLANS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Madam Minister, for something like the tenth occasion in less than a week I'm asking you a question about a bill that you don't seem to understand. People from Stratford and Barrie and Peterborough and places all over southern Ontario have come here today to demand of you that you stop suggesting that this Legislature should pass a piece of legislation that is admittedly flawed. So I'd like you to stand, Madam Minister, and take your eyes up just to the front row of the galleries and talk to the people there and explain to them why it is that in this Legislature you should ask members of this place to pass a piece of legislation that you have come awfully close to admitting is deeply flawed.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): I don't think theatrics help this situation at all. I think it's important that pensioners understand, that they know their pensions are safe, that they know the viability of their pensions is going to be protected. The Premier has made a very clear commitment. We do wish to continue to consult on this. We do wish to ensure that the problems employee groups have told us about are fixed as well, because there are issues that they, in the consultations over the last year and a half, have raised. They had problems they wanted fixed as well.

So I think there are some legitimate issues. Obviously people have not been satisfied with either the information they have or the positions that have been taken, are not satisfied that their pensions are protected adequately. We will consult to find the right resolution for that, and if changes need to be made, we will make them.

Mr Smitherman: It's interesting that you'd characterize my passion as theatrics. The real theatrics we're seeing are from you because you're a bad actor. You're a bad actor trying to play a role as a senior minister who doesn't even understand the implications of her own legislation.

So don't tell me one more time when I put the facts before you, when I have clearly demonstrated the points in the bill that will strip the rights of these employees to gain access to the surpluses in their pension funds—don't talk to me about theatrics, Madam Minister. Stand in your place this one time and tell me why it's appropriate to ask this Legislature to pass a piece of badly flawed legislation. Stand in your place.

Hon Mrs Ecker: The honourable member likes to say that he understands the legislation. If he does, then why is it that he objects to something that talks about respecting surplus sharing agreements between employers and employees? I'm sure that he would agree that the chosen way to deal with questions around surplus sharing is with an agreement between the employer and the employees. That is the preferred option. That is what we think should be part of what happens in all circumstances.

Again, we recognize that pensioners are concerned. We recognize there are issues that need to be dealt with, and we are taking steps to do that.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On a point of order, Speaker: I'm seeking unanimous consent to ask the seniors in this gallery if they're feeling better after that answer.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We're not going to do unanimous consents with theatrics like that. If you wonder why we don't get down to your question, it's doing things like that that take the time away from question period. When you don't get down to your question, you'll know why.

INNOVATION INITIATIVES

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): It's hard to follow the comedy act of the member for Timmins-James Bay and the member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale, but I will do my very best.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): You think it's a comedy act? You think it's funny?

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Take your seat. The member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale is named. I'm going to have to ask Mr Smitherman to leave the chamber.

The Speaker: The member for Waterloo-Wellington has the floor for the question.

Mr Arnott: My question is for the Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation. Minister, our government recognized long ago that innovation is the driving force in our new economy. We were all pleased and appreciative, therefore, when the minister announced $22.8 million for research and development programs recently at the University of Guelph. This funding will not only provide critical innovation infrastructure but also help to put Guelph and our area on the map as important players within Ontario's innovation strategy.

Will the minister inform the House about some of the other initiatives our government is undertaking to promote innovation in the province of Ontario?

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): I thank the member for Waterloo-Wellington for this important question. The Ontario Innovation Trust announcement at the University of Guelph last week was just part of our government's drive to create a culture of innovation.

Our government has invested in a very wide range of initiatives: $750 million in the Ontario research and development challenge fund, $1 billion in the Ontario

Innovation Trust and $32 million in the Ontario research performance fund.

Just last June, we announced a $51-million biotech strategy, and our goal is to make Ontario one of the three main biotech centres in North America.

The Premier's research excellence awards have a total commitment of $85 million.

The Speaker: The associate minister's time is up.

Mr Arnott: Our province has certainly led the way in terms of taking initiatives to support science, technology and innovation. I know an important component of our government's innovation strategy lies in our centres of excellence. As the members of the House know, we recently announced the creation of two new centres of excellence for electricity and alternative fuels. With our focus on these hubs of innovation, will the minister elaborate on the role of centres of excellence as part of our overall innovation strategy?

Hon Mr Turnbull: The centres of excellence program helps us to strengthen the R&D links between industry and academia and it helps to accelerate the process between the lab bench and the marketplace.

We have four existing centres: Communications and Information Technology Ontario, the Centre for Research in Earth and Space Technology, Materials and Manufacturing Ontario, and Photonics Research Ontario. In 2002, we made a budget commitment of $161 million over the next five years to support these centres. In addition to this, we're adding two new centres: the Centre of Excellence for Alternative Fuels and the Centre of Excellence for Electricity. This is all part of our government's priority of promoting innovation in this province.

Our government has invested a record amount of $3.2 billion since we became the government.

CRIMINAL INJURIES COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Attorney General. Attorney General, you will be familiar with the case of Jonathan Wamback. In June 1999 he was savagely beaten by a gang at the age of 15 years. He was on life support for 16 days, in a coma for three months and suffered permanent brain damage.

After three years of fighting with your Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, his parents have withdrawn their application in disgust. They have been asking for $8,000 to pay for medical expenses related to their son's brutal assault. They were looking for help with ambulance fees, physiotherapy and pharmaceutical supplies, all the kinds of things you hope you never have to buy for one of your kids.

This is what Jonathan's dad said about your Criminal Injuries Compensation Board: "Victims of crime are innocent people thrust into a nightmare without end. They need immediate assistance, not bureaucracy and revictimization. This province continually makes people beg on their knees for help that never, ever comes."

Minister, why have you failed the Wamback family?

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I thank the member opposite for raising this important issue. Certainly no government has done more than our government when it comes to supporting victims across this province, but as the honourable member knows—or I believe he knows, because he is a lawyer—when matters are in front of the court—and this matter is still in front of the court—there are some things that can be done and some things that can't be done.

I understand that Mr Wamback has some concerns. Quite frankly, I'm very concerned myself by his experience. I say to the Leader of the Opposition that we are prepared to look into the matter. We are prepared to do whatever we can to improve the system, understanding, of course, that there are certain principles we cannot modify in this system, and one of those is that until a matter has made its way through the courts, there are certain things that politicians cannot do.

Mr McGuinty: That's not good enough, Mr Attorney General. This is the party that holds itself out as the defender and champion of victims of crime. This is one of the most notorious and infamous cases in all Canada. Jonathan's dad collected a million signatures and went to the federal government to bring about changes in federal young offenders legislation.

What I am asking you today, Mr Attorney General, on behalf of the Wamback family, is why you have not done anything to step up to the plate to help this family. This father wasn't even entitled to interim compensation. He gave up his job and they sold their cottage and depleted their RRSPs because your Criminal Injuries Compensation Board would not step up to the plate and help this family, even on an interim basis.

I ask you again, on behalf of this family, why have you been missing in action when it comes to supporting this family?

Hon Mr Young: Let's talk about missing—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Young: I think this is important enough that the members of the opposition should sit and listen to the answer, as I listened to the question. Let's talk about missing in action. The Ernie Eves government has been fighting the Young Offenders Act, has been fighting its successor legislation, which is more costly, which is more cumbersome, which is more complicated, and we have been calling on the opposition Liberals to phone their federal cousins and stop—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Come to order, please.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Enough is enough. The Attorney General has the floor.

Hon Mr Young: Here's what I know: we have called on the provincial Liberals over and over again to talk to the federal Liberals. We've called upon them to have the guts to say something, to fight—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. If I get up again, people are going out. We'll name a couple at a time; we can do it in groups. I'll get them all out. We're not going to continue to shout across.

We've lost track of time. I believe the Attorney General has about 10 seconds to wrap up.

Hon Mr Young: Not only have they not opposed the federal legislation dealing with young offenders, what they have done recently, and Dalton McGuinty led the charge, is he said he's going to hire 50 more crown attorneys in the next four years—50 more crown attorneys. We hire 36 a year. That means you're going to hire 12 a year; you're going to slash the number of crown attorneys in our courts. You're not going to allow criminals to be prosecuted; you're not going to let victims have their day in court.

GREEN ENERGY AND CONSERVATION

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): My question is for the Minister of Energy. We've heard from people across the province that the government's recent announcement to lower electricity rates and provide rebates for consumers is exactly the kind of relief they were looking for. Obviously, this has been the focus of a great deal of media attention. But people may be less familiar with some of the other important aspects of the government's action plan.

Minister, could you please tell us what the government is going to do to promote green energy and conservation?

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I distinctly heard our most eminent Attorney General call my colleague a moron. I ask that he stand up and withdraw that, now.

Interjections.

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I apologize for the use of that word. I know the deputy leader of the Liberal Party will want to apologize for using the—

Interjections.

Interjections: Withdraw.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. He did withdraw it.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. OK, you know what you can do? The government House leader is named. Mr Stockwell is out. The member for Windsor West is out too. You can carry this on outside, both of you. Mr Stockwell, leave right now, and Mrs Pupatello. You can carry it on outside.

Mr Stockwell and Mrs Pupatello were escorted from the chamber.

The Speaker: If you want to yell across when I'm standing up, continue. You can do it all afternoon for all I care. You're an embarrassment, all of you; a disgraceful performance in here.

While we're at it, do we want to throw anybody else out right now? Because you can all leave, as far as I'm concerned. There are kids sitting up there; an absolutely disgraceful performance by all of you. You should be ashamed of yourselves.

Who has the floor? The Minister of Energy.

Hon Mr Baird: Our government is committed to the promotion of green energy and conservation. This Friday I'll be in Huron county with my colleague Helen Johns, the Minister of Agriculture, where we'll open the first commercial wind farm in Ontario. This wind farm will generate enough electricity in the province to meet the annual needs of about 3,000 homes with green electricity. That's good news for Ontario and good news for the environment.

We all believe we should have a commitment to promoting green energy. That's why the government has accepted the challenge and a set of targets to show provincial leadership by targeting to buy 20% of its electricity from green sources. I think that's good news. We've also introduced some really substantial tax incentives to try to promote both energy conservation and clean, green and renewable energy in Ontario.

Mrs Munro: The government is clearly providing incentives that will encourage new green energy supply in the province, but individuals also have a role to play. Can you tell us what people can do to conserve energy and what the government is doing to help them?

Hon Mr Baird: It will be in Bruce county, not in Huron county, though the wind comes from Huron county on the way to Bruce county, I say to my colleague from Huron-Bruce. She is a strong supporter of the Bruce nuclear facility and Bruce Power, I should add as well.

One of the principles this government stands by is that the more electricity used, the more you should pay. In fact, if we look at the summer months of July, August and September, we saw electricity demand across Ontario go up by about 7%. That just shows there were huge demands on the system with the warm weather we had. We believe the government can lead by example and we've set a target of reducing the amount of electricity we use as a government by 10%, and already some specific initiatives are underway to help us meet that goal.

We also have in place a number of incentives to encourage the people of the province to purchase energy-efficient appliances. Consumers who buy an eligible appliance between November 25, 2002, and November 26, 2003, will have their retail sales tax rebated once the Legislature passes the bill we introduced this week.

HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a question to the Minister of Health. Tonight you're holding a meeting to promote your scheme of for-profit hospital construction in Brampton. What's clear about this scheme is that a for-profit company is going to build and own the hospital, but the public is going to pay for it, and the public is going to pay dearly because the for-profit owner will of course demand a huge profit as part of any construction loan or leaseback scheme. Frankly, once the for-profit owner has a foot in the hospital door, it's not going to be very hard to move to the next step of letting that same for-profit owner also run direct hospital health services.

Minister, I think you're heading in the wrong direction, and the experience in Britain shows that. Will you cancel your scheme of for-profit construction and ownership of our hospitals?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): Let me say to this House that nothing could be further from the truth. If the honourable member is asking what prevents the extension of contracted-out or P3 services to clinical services, the answer is quite simple: the Public Hospitals Act of Ontario and the Canada Health Act, which is a federally inspired bill. So the fact of the matter is, that is not possible. It is not contemplated; it is not part of the solution. We are simply ensuring that the hospital can concentrate on what it does best, which is to deliver excellent and universally accessible, high-quality health care services, and the private sector can contribute what it does best, namely, building and maintaining expensive buildings at, quite frankly, a measurable saving to the taxpayer. If that is not the case, then we simply won't award the contract.

Ms Martel: There is no place for for-profit hospital construction in Ontario, and a look at what happened in Britain would show that. The first 18 P3 hospital projects in Britain cost £53 million for consulting fees alone—C$110 million. The first P3 hospital that was built in Cumberland had serious structural defects. Two of the ceilings collapsed because of cheap plastic joints and piping and other plumbing faults. The sewage system did not have enough capacity and the operating rooms were flooded with raw sewage. A roof design flaw and no air conditioning meant that on sunny days the temperature inside the wards was over 33 degrees Celsius.

For-profit hospital construction did not work in Britain and it's not going to work in Ontario either. Will you cancel your scheme of for-profit hospital construction and ownership in Ontario?

Hon Mr Clement: The answer is no, I will not do that. If the honourable member says this is unprecedented, I invite her to walk outside of her office and go down University Avenue, because right in front of you, at Toronto General Hospital, UHN, is a privately financed building going on right now; a brand new hospital wing for downtown Torontonians. This has been something that has been applied in the past in Ontario. It is not contrary to the Canada Health Act; it is not contrary to the Public Hospitals Act.

The honourable member seems to be aware of certain accusations in Britain. I commend her to look at the national auditor in Britain, who suggests that, through the PFI—private finance initiative—of that neo-Conservative, Tony Blair, they have actually saved 17% of the cost to taxpayers, to go into actual clinical services and health care services. I would be a happy man as Minister of Health if all of my construction projects saved 17% rather than adding to the bill for the taxpayers. That would be a good day for Ontarians.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Minister of Energy. Lynn is a single mom who lives in Cochrane. She is the mother of two children who are two and five years of age. She's on Ontario Works. This fall, Lynn's bills were double the usual so she scraped together as much as she could to make as great a payment as she could. In November, her bill was $179. She also got a letter saying that she had to pay by the 26th of this month or her power would be cut off. She told her utility that she thought she would be able to get the necessary money by the 29th. Her hydro was cut off yesterday. It was minus 16 degrees in Cochrane last night.

Three weeks ago, your Premier made a very specific promise that nobody's power would be cut off for failure to pay. Why is it, Minister, three weeks after the Premier made that very specific promise, people like Lynn are still having their hydro cut off?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): We feel very strongly that, given the uncertainty we've had with respect to electricity prices and the effect that has had on working families around Ontario, it was important we come forward with relief to provide support to people to recoup some of the funds they spent on electricity since May 1, and also to deal with the go-forward basis, to provide some stability in the early running of the market.

The Premier directed me some weeks ago to direct Hydro One—which I did both in writing and directly on the telephone to Hydro One—that we, as a distribution company that's owned by the taxpayers of Ontario, wouldn't cut people off. If the member opposite wants to provide me with specific details of that, I'll look into it personally and right away. If I might have the address and the account number, that might be helpful as well, I say to the member opposite.

This is a concern. You and I both know from living in Ottawa about the problems you can have when electricity is not available, particularly in the cold winter months. We take that responsibility incredibly seriously, and later today I'll be moving second reading of a piece of legislation to provide some stability to people in the province of Ontario.

Mr McGuinty: It was minus 16 degrees in Cochrane. I'll repeat: her children are two and five years of age, respectively. This is a single mom. She's on Ontario Works. She relied on your Premier to keep his word that her power would not be cut off. Her power was cut off. I'll ask you the same question that I asked the Premier before: am I going to bring these cases here on an individual basis now? At what point in time are the people of Ontario going to be able to rely on you and your promises?

It's one thing for your bungling to hit them in the wallet, but now you're jeopardizing their health and safety. I ask you again: with respect to this particular case, this particular woman and these particular children, what are you going to do to ensure that this woman's power gets back on and that nobody finds themselves in these circumstances ever again?

Hon Mr Baird: That situation is unacceptable. We—you and I and the members of the third party—have the power to change this today. We can pass the legislation we introduced this week that would make it illegal for that to happen between now and the end of March.

You and I have the power to solve this problem right here, right now, today. If the member opposite wants—don't shake your head. I'll call your bet. If you want to pass our legislation right here, right now, our government will allow speedy passage and we'll ensure this never happens again.

GRAPE AND WINE INDUSTRY

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Business Services. As an Ontarian, I'm very proud of our world-class, award-winning grape and wine industry. To help this important industry grow, this government announced the Ontario wine strategy last year.

As you know, that strategy set some very ambitious goals for our wine industry, such as strengthening the VQA brand, creating thousands of new jobs and increasing both domestic and international sales of our wines. An important part of reaching these goals is increasing sales through the LCBO. Minister, could you please update the House on what the LCBO has done to increase sales of Ontario wines?

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): I appreciate the member from Peterborough's question on this very important industry in Ontario. Coming from the Niagara region and being proud to represent much of that area, it's certainly of interest to me and to the people I represent.

Since Minister Norm Sterling announced the Ontario wine strategy, great strides have been made to help promote Ontario wine, and particularly VQA wine, which is 100% Ontario product. I'll give you some examples comparing this quarter to the same quarter last year. VQA wine sales are up over 15% year over year. This is partly due to the craft winery program as well as the Taste the Quality campaign, the largest promotion in the history of the LCBO for Ontario wines.

The craft winery program, which I'm particularly proud of, helps the up-and-comers like EastDell, Strewn and Lakeview, to name but three, and saw sales jump 23% in this period over the previous period.

Mr Stewart: I'm pleased to hear there has been a dramatic increase in the sales of Ontario wines, again through the LCBO.

I believe it's important for us to build on these successes in the future, to ensure this industry continues to grow and create jobs in our local communities. But there is still some work to do before we reach our ambitious goals of seeing one of every two bottles of wine sold in this province made in this province, and the creation of thousands of new jobs in this industry. I believe that if we make the right decisions now and continue to aggressively market Ontario wines, sales can continue to grow for many years in the future.

Minister, what is being done to build on that momentum of strong sales of Ontario wines?

Hon Mr Hudak: The member is right. We have to keep moving forward. As I mentioned, the October promotion, the largest in the history of the province for Ontario wine, saw VQA product increase 20% from the previous year. Those promoted wines were up over 30% in their sales. Obviously, as we increase sales, we're increasing shelf space for Ontario wine, VQA product, at the LCBO. In fact, we'll have seen an increase in shelf space by almost 25% by the end of the year.

Similarly, to help support this culturally, they've hired a new Ontario wine category manager as well as VQA advocates as champions within the store system to help promote the great Ontario wine products made in Niagara, Lake Erie North Shore and Pelee Island, and we look forward down the road to Prince Edward county as well.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question to the Minister of Education. You sent your hand-picked supervisor into the city of Ottawa to assume responsibility for the Ottawa public board of education. You did that because you claimed the trustees didn't know what they were doing and they couldn't see their way through to doing what you call the right thing, which was to balance the budget. Now, after several weeks, and all kinds of money being spent on this very expensive charade—over half a million dollars—your hand-picked supervisor tells us that he can't balance the budget.

Will you now finally admit, Madam Minister—and of course we just saw this movie earlier in the week with the situation here in Toronto—that the issue here is not one of trustees who are not acting in a fiscally irresponsible way; the issue is really that we don't have enough money in public education because you took too much out?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I'm very surprised at the question that has just been asked by the member of the opposition. I'm surprised that he didn't mention the number of new investments in textbooks and teachers. I am surprised that he didn't mention that the supervisor has addressed an issue regarding the accommodation of students in the Ottawa area that has long been neglected by the trustees.

In fact, I think we have to congratulate the supervisor for developing a three-year plan for putting the Ottawa-Carlton District School Board back on the road to sustainable financial health and at the same time reinvesting in teachers, reinvesting in textbooks and identifying that the needs of all of the students, when it comes to accommodation, whether you live downtown or in the suburbs, can be accommodated. He has actually addressed decisions that these trustees, a small majority, have refused to tackle in the past four years.

Mr McGuinty: Everybody sees through this. You've taken $2 billion out of public education. Our public schools are on their knees. You have compromised our children's education. The reason that the supervisor couldn't balance the budget in Ottawa and couldn't balance the budget in Toronto is because there's not enough money to get the job done.

Your Premier said that these cuts wouldn't compromise what went on in the classroom in Ottawa. One of the first things you did was to remove 50 special education teachers. You also said that the budget would indeed be balanced; that, in fact, has not proven to be the case. Everybody knows that there is a shortage of money in public education. Why don't you start by doing two things here and now: (1) admit that there's a desperate shortage of money in public education; and (2) tell us you're no longer going to put half a billion public tax dollars in private schools?

Hon Mrs Witmer: The Leader of the Opposition needs to understand, and I would think he would know this already, that the trouble of the Ottawa board didn't start overnight. They were given transition funding by the province. In fact, they got over $128 million. Instead of using the money, as other boards did, to go about restructuring, they simply avoided making the decisions that were going to be necessary. Unfortunately, the transition funding has now run out and the board finds itself in a deficit. I can tell you, these problems didn't start overnight. For example, last year they didn't spend their money as they should. They simply refused to make the decisions, when they had the transition funding, that were necessary to provide for the needs of the students.

FOREIGN-TRAINED PROFESSIONALS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. I was delighted, last week, in your announcement of the three new initiatives to help foreign-trained professionals. I know my constituents in Durham commented, and they were pleased.

You know that most newcomers to Canada choose to live in Ontario and it's no mystery why: we offer a strong and diverse economy, as well as strong social programs and of course a very high standard of living. This issue is really all about fairness and it's also about our economy. As you understand, we have a shortage of certain skills in our economy, and a large part of the solution can be found in those newcomers who choose to locate in Ontario but want to practise in their trained field.

Minister, can you tell this House, and the members who may be listening, your three new initiatives and how they will fit the foreign-trained professionals and allow them to work in Ontario?

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): We have a focus within our ministry of helping our foreign-trained professionals, and we've been making significant gains in the last couple of years.

Last week we announced a partnership with the Ontario Society of Professional Engineers that will create a new program called Pathways. This is employment experience for people who are already qualified to be engineers in their own country, but must pass the test and be qualified here with the regulatory body. This is an opportunity for me to thank about 150 companies that have given these people an opportunity to work for about a year and to learn Ontario standards and experience.

There's also a partnership with the Canadian Manufacturers and Exporters, and we'll be continuing to work with them as well. These are just two of many programs.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you for that answer, Madam Minister. I'm very impressed with this whole integration of foreign-trained professionals to allow them to work in their field of training. I know I've worked with constituents—I could mention Lilian Lockyear and others. I'm delighted you're moving forward to provide for foreign-trained engineers and others to work and be licensed in Ontario.

I know you've worked to create other new bridge training programs. For the members who don't know, these are programs to allow newcomers to learn what they need to meet Ontario standards without duplicating what they already know.

Working in partnership with regulatory bodies in Ontario has produced several new programs in high-demand fields like nursing, pharmacy, carpentry, medical radiology, medical labs—and the list goes on. It was our government that took action to create these opportunities. I congratulate you.

Perhaps you could continue to share what work lies ahead to provide opportunities—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Minister?

Hon Mrs Cunningham: The programs we have in Ontario are fairly new in the country. We refer to them as bridge training programs. We're working across the country with other provinces. We've actually been told that we have some very excellent models.

One I would like to talk about is the CARE program, which I shared with this House last year. It's quite emotional when you have nurses who come to you who are not working in their chosen field. The CARE program we started last year—300 internationally trained nurses will have completed the CARE pilot program. The goal is to double the previous pass rate of 33%. To date, 288 internationally educated nurses have been recruited to participate, of whom 51 have secured employment as registered nurses or registered practical nurses. Of the 128 participants who have written the licensing exam, 70% have passed. This exceeds our goal, and this—

The Speaker: The minister's time is up.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): My question is to the Minister of Education. Minister, I want to tell you that your school budget sham is over in Ottawa. You congratulate the supervisor on his three-year plan, but what this really means, in case you don't know, is that you're allowing the supervisor to carry over a $14-million deficit, just like you're allowing the Toronto supervisor to carry over a $16-million deficit, something that trustees were not allowed to do. You also said the books could be balanced without cutting, but you know that in Toronto and Ottawa they have cut millions.

I am saying to you, don't try to fix the trustees. They're not the problem. Fix your flawed funding formula. And while you're at it, why don't you try to reinstate the Ottawa trustees now that your board takeover has clearly failed?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I would just say to the member that I believe the supervisor is to be commended, because one of the things the supervisor has actually done is he has developed a three-year plan to put the Ottawa-Carleton District School Board back on the path to financial health. The other thing the supervisor has done is he is going to be speaking further to the whole issue of accommodation. In the city of Ottawa, we have many schools in the downtown area that are underutilized. We have hundreds and hundreds of students in the suburban areas of Ottawa. As a result of the work that's going to be undertaken, this will mean that these new students will have new schools, and they're going to actually have accommodation which has been long needed. A good example is Stittsville. These people who have been neglected by the trustees are now going to get the schools they need.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): On a point of order, Mr Speaker, and this is a very serious point of order: The leader of the official opposition raised a very serious case with respect to a woman in Cochrane, where it was below minus 15, who was cut off her hydro. We do have legislation before the House to deal specifically with that problem—Lynn in Cochrane. I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to move it, second and third reading and to pass without debate Bill 210, An Act to amend various acts in respect to pricing, conservation, supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity, so we can solve this problem for Lynn today.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): If people can be quiet, I can hear whether there is a yes or no. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

PETITIONS

ALUMINIUM SMELTER

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This petition is to clean up the abandoned aluminium smelter in Georgina. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the abandoned aluminium smelter located on Warden Avenue in the town of Georgina has been deemed to have heavy metals exceeding the Ministry of the Environment guidelines; and

"Whereas the site is adjacent to a wetland that leads to the Maskinonge River feeding into Lake Simcoe;

"We the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"The Ministry of the Environment should immediately conduct a full environmental assessment and cleanup of the site."

I affix my signature, as I am in complete agreement with the sentiments expressed in it.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I have a petition here to the Ontario Legislature that reads as follows:

"Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion from public education over the past seven years;

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students;

"Whereas district school boards around the province have had to cut needed programs and services, including library, music, physical education and special education;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors;

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned members of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto district school boards."

It is signed by some 25 people from the Toronto area. I am in complete agreement and affix my signature thereto.

COMMUNITY HEALTH CARE CENTRE

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): I have a petition to address to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas Sarnia-Point Edward and area is experiencing a crisis in a shortage of health care professionals, specifically doctors; and

"Whereas community health care centres are a proven primary health care system that can attract professionals and deliver primary health care in a cost-effective and efficient manner;

"Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario approve a community health care centre for Sarnia-Point Edward and area as soon as possible."

As I strongly support this type of delivery for primary health care services, I will endorse the petition.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (Vaughan-King-Aurora): It's not often that I get to introduce petitions, but I have an extremely important petition here signed by hundreds of residents from the riding of Vaughan-King-Aurora. I won't read all of the preambles, or the resolution, but it deals with the incredible mismanagement of Ontario's hydroelectric system under the Harris-Eves government, and I will affix my signature and I support the contents of the petition.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I have a similar petition. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion from public education over the past seven years;

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students;

"Whereas district school boards around the province have had to cut needed programs and services, including library, music, physical education and special education;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors;

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned members of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto district school boards."

It is signed by 33 teachers in the Mississauga area. I am in agreement and will affix my signature thereto.

EMERGENCY RESPONSE TEAMS

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I wish to read in a petition under the title "Honour Emergency Workers Who Lose Their Lives in the Line of Duty.

"Whereas the Ontario Legislature has debated a private member's bill titled the Flags at Half-Mast Act, 2002, requiring flags at all provincial government buildings be flown at half-mast for a period of mourning to honour police officers, correctional service officers, firefighters and ambulance workers in Ontario who lose their lives in the line of duty; and

"Whereas our emergency response personnel deserve our thanks and respect for their efforts to ensure the safety and security of all Ontarians; and

"Whereas MPP Toby Barrett has spoken and voted in favour of this legislation;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario support Halton MPP Chudleigh's Flags at Half-Mast Act, 2002, and require all Ontario government buildings to lower their flags for a period of mourning to pay respect to dedicated men and women who lose their lives in the line of duty."

I affix my signature to this petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr John C. Cleary (Stormont-Dundas-Charlottenburgh): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem...; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable ... $200 a month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions...; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase ... funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort...;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

This is signed by my constituents and constituents of Prescott and Russell, and I sign the petition also.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): The third and final instalment on this comes from teachers who live and work outside of the greater Toronto area, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion from public education over the past seven years;

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students;

"Whereas district school boards around the province have had to cut needed programs and services, including library, music, physical education and special education;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors;

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned members of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto district school boards."

There are some 80 signatures from outside of the GTA, and I am pleased to affix my signature thereto.

SCHOOL CLOSURES

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I have a petition calling for a moratorium on high school closures. It's signed by students and parents from Windham Centre, Teeterville, La Salette, Delhi, Norwich, and other communities.

"Whereas one high school has closed and several others are threatened by the Grand Erie District School Board; and

"Whereas the Education Equality Task Force led by Dr Mordechai Rozanski is reviewing the current funding formula for education in Ontario; and

"Whereas the Grand Erie District School Board is expected to issue additional high school closures; and

"Whereas parent groups and community volunteers feel the Grand Erie District School Board has not set aside adequate time to review and explore all other viable options to keep area high schools open;

"We, the undersigned, request the Grand Erie District School Board and the Ministry of Education declare a moratorium on secondary school closures until such time recommendations from the Education Equality Task Force will have been implemented."

I support this petition and affix my signature.

WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"The unreasonable and inhumane restrictions that the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources is placing on wildlife rehabilitators with respect to the release of orphaned animals will eliminate their ability to help wildlife; and

"Whereas wildlife rehabilitators provide an essential public service for many thousands of people seeking help on behalf of orphaned and injured" young "wildlife in Ontario; and

"Whereas the unreasonable release restrictions imposed on wildlife rehabilitators by the ministry will prevent responsible wildlife rehabilitation, not only compromising wildlife and frustrating the public but forcing it underground and jeopardizing public safety; and

"Whereas this will incur significant new costs for local governments with respect to bylaw and public health and safety interventions while creating an emotional and volatile climate because the majority of people in Ontario are simply unwilling to see healthy young animals" killed;

"We, the undersigned, are deeply concerned that the release restrictions imposed by this ministry will eliminate the provision of responsible wildlife services in our community; and

"We petition the government of Ontario to work with wildlife rehabilitators to ensure that progressive, humane and responsible regulations with respect to release criteria for rehabilitated orphaned wildlife are put in place in Ontario."

I have hundreds and hundreds of petitions and I am signing my name too.

SCHOOL CLOSURES

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I have another set of petitions. These are also concerned with high school closures, signed by people from Delhi, Courtland, Wilsonville, Otterville, Port Dover—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): If you would like to read it, we'll hear it now, or else we'll go on.

Mr Barrett: "Whereas the education funding formula applied uniformly across the province of Ontario has forced many consolidated boards of education to move to close schools, especially in rural areas; and

"Whereas the formula is now being reviewed by Dr Mordechai Rozanski, with a report to the provincial government anticipated by November 2002;

"Now the undersigned petition Dr Rozanski, the boards of education and the province of Ontario as follows:

"(1) Include in any future funding formula recognition of the importance of rural schools to their communities;

"(2) Give communities the opportunity to directly support (by taxation, if necessary) their schools to ensure their continued existence; and

"(3) Mandate an immediate moratorium on the consideration of the school closures until the new funding formula is in place."

I agree with this additional petition and affix my signature.

SCHOOL BUS SAFETY

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): "Whereas some motorists are recklessly endangering the lives of children by not obeying the highway traffic law requiring them to stop for school buses with their warning lights activated;

"Whereas the current law has no teeth to protect the children who ride the school buses of Ontario, and who are at risk and their safety is in jeopardy;

"Whereas the current school bus law is difficult to enforce, since not only is the licence plate number required but positive identification of the driver and vehicle as well, which makes it extremely difficult to obtain a conviction;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the measures contained in private member's Bill 112, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to protect children while on school buses, presented by Pat Hoy, MPP, Chatham-Kent Essex, be immediately enacted. Bill 112 received the unanimous all-party support of the Ontario Legislature at second reading on June 13, 2002....

"We ask for the support of all members of the Legislature."

This petition is signed by a number of residents from Mattawa, Sturgeon Falls and North Bay, and I too have signed this petition.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I have a series of petitions signed by people from Townsend, Courtland, La Salette, Port Dover, Tillsonburg, Vittoria and Turkey Point, all members of what's referred to as the Family Fund, concerned with their local hospital:

"We, the undersigned, endorse the following petition:

"Our community has raised its share of funds, over $7 million, toward the redevelopment and expansion project at Norfolk General Hospital. We call on the Ontario government to declare its support for quality health care in Norfolk county by authorizing the Norfolk General Hospital to proceed to tender at this time and then to construction on this project with 50% capital funding from the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care."

Residents are also encouraged to fax letters of support directly to Minister Tony Clement.

I sign my signature to this.

CHILDREN'S HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have petitions here that came from the citizens of Vankleek Hill:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario government is shutting down the heart surgery unit at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario; and

"Whereas the closure of this program will restrict the accessibility to life-saving surgery for children in eastern Ontario; and

"Whereas every year CHEO treats 140 cases of seriously ill children close to home; and

"Whereas centralization of children's heart surgery in Toronto would force patients and their families to travel 400 to 600 kilometres away from home at a traumatic time; and

"Whereas there is a waiting list for cardiac surgery in Toronto but not at CHEO; and

"Whereas the people of eastern Ontario demand accessible, quality health care for their children;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to immediately override the government's decision to close this life-saving program and to ensure that top-quality, accessible health care remains available to every child in eastern Ontario."

I gladly affix my signature.

FUNERAL, BURIAL AND CREMATION SERVICES ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LES SERVICES FUNÉRAIRES ET LES SERVICES D'ENTERREMENT ET DE CRÉATION

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 26, 2002 on the motion for second reading of Bill 209, An Act respecting funerals, burials, cremations and related services and providing for the amendment of other statutes / Projet de loi 209, Loi traitant des funérailles, des enterrements, des crémations et des services connexes et prévoyant la modification d'autres lois.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Mr Hudak has moved second reading and now we're going to debate. I'm looking to my right, to the government benches.

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): I'm pleased to join in this debate to speak in support of this very important bill, the Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002.

The government of Ontario recognizes the vulnerability of people coping with the loss of a loved one, especially when they have to make funeral arrangements. Unfortunately, I had to go to England this summer to help my sister, who lost her husband, and I know firsthand the challenges, issues and personal stress that are involved in having to make funeral arrangements. I think it's extremely important to address this particular issue, and certainly that's what this particular act does. It serves to better protect consumers, and in order to do that, the government has brought forward this proposed legislation that would, we believe, strengthen consumer protection for people who are seeking bereavement services. It's an issue that I know has been under discussion for quite some time.

The Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, will provide enormous advantages to consumers across the province when they purchase bereavement services. It would make more information available so that they could make more informed choices and it would also help to protect consumers from any unscrupulous suppliers that might try to take advantage of them at a time when they are most vulnerable.

There are a number of consumer protection provisions contained within the legislation, including the prohibition of falsifying information, false advertising, and furnishing false information. Under the proposed legislation, all service providers would be required to maintain standardized price lists of the supplies and services they sell and would be prohibited from selling at a higher price than indicated. These rules are intended to be strict where consumer protection is concerned, yet flexible enough to allow the orderly development of new business models in the sector.

Our consultation with sector stakeholders was very extensive. The proposed legislation has been developed through a long-term and diligent consultation process. I was personally involved in that, not only as a member of the Scarborough Centre constituency but also as a member of the Red Tape Commission, and I know that it involved many stakeholder and consumer groups to ensure that this particular piece of legislation is both responsive and indeed responsible.

I'd like to take a few minutes to explain how the consultation process was developed and what we believe it has achieved.

Ontario's bereavement services sector consists of some 5,500 participants and businesses, and that's pretty substantial. Among the services, of course, are funeral homes, cemeteries, marker and casket retailers, and transfer services. Within that sector are diverse participants, including funeral establishments, which are often private businesses working for profit, and cemeteries which may be run by religious non-profit organizations or even municipalities.

For some time, government, consumer groups, and sector stakeholders have recognized that current legislation that covers the bereavement sector needed to be updated. The marketplace has evolved, and the needs of the participants, consumers and, indeed, the community at large have changed, although Ontario's standards for the operation of funeral, transfer services and cemeteries continue to be among the highest in North America.

Four years ago, the government began consideration that a full review of changes in legislation was needed for consumers and practitioners in the bereavement sector. In 1998, the then Minister of Consumer and Business Services—my colleague the Honourable David Tsubouchi—became involved with the issues around bereavement legislation. Convinced of the need for detailed consultation on the important issues that affect consumer groups and sector stakeholders in very personal, as well as financial, ways, the minister asked the Red Tape Commission, and I've already alluded to that, to meet with stakeholders and to ensure that Ontario's standards and regulatory framework were current and relevant to the marketplace. This request was based on the Red Tape Commission's proven track record of consulting with businesses and consumers to improve regulations and, of course, to cut red tape.

The Red Tape Commission struck a working group of MPPs, consumers and service providers which met on a number of occasions from the autumn of 1998 through to the spring of 1999. The group looked at and worked on issues critical to the sector and to its consumers. Membership was voluntary and was designed to represent service providers and consumers from across the province. Interested parties who were not part of the working group were kept informed of the group's activities. Their efforts and those of Minister Tsubouchi set the stage for the development of the proposed legislation before this House today, and all are owed a debt of gratitude for their perseverance and determination in helping to set the stage for this most important proposed legislation before us today.

In February 2002, the Red Tape Commission shared its work with Minister Bob Runciman, who had assumed the consumer portfolio. Minister Runciman determined that the importance of increased consumer protection, and providing a level playing field—and that's important because that's what the Red Tape Commission is all about—and future flexibility for service providers, warranted moving toward the development of proposed bereavement sector legislation. Minister Runciman knew that there were many challenges to be faced in arriving at proposed legislation and sought out a mediation strategy to resolve a lot of stakeholder issues that are related to this very complex subject.

The resulting mediation methodology he pursued has been recognized, we believe, across the Ontario public service for its very innovative leadership.

First, Minister Runciman sought out an experienced mediator who would help the diverse sector participants arrive at a consensus, because I think it can be agreed that there was considerable dissent within this sector initially and it was really necessary to make substantial changes to the current legislation.

The man the minister asked to guide the consensus was the Honourable George Adams, QC. I don't know how many people outside legal circles are fully aware of the extraordinary expertise and experience of this facilitator, mediator, arbitrator, lawyer, teacher and former Superior Court judge. His experience relative to facilitation and mediation is formidable and most impressive. The Honourable George Adams, QC, was a member of the advisory committee which designed and managed the project that gave rise to Ontario's mandatory mediation system and has written extensively on mediation, arbitration and other alternative dispute resolution procedures. His assistance was extremely important in bringing together the diverse groups that make up the bereavement sector.

From one consumer's point of view, the purchase of bereavement services involves a conscious decision to prepare for an eventuality that none of us escape. Another consumer may make similar purchases at a time of shock or profound personal sorrow when a loved one passes.

The majority of service providers in this sector are responsible professionals who provide empathy as well as understanding of each consumer's personal situation. They are, as I've already said, also a diverse group of professionals who may work for profit or not, and may operate internationally or in one small Ontario town to supply funeral, transfer and cemetery services as well as markers and caskets to Ontario's consumers.

Their interests are equally diverse, and while most share the government's view that current legislation should be updated to provide greater advantages to consumers and service providers, there was little consensus as to the direction the legislation should take.

In February 2001, the Honourable George Adams, QC, met individually with industry and consumer representatives. The significant pre-consultation period provided both a look into the concerns of individual groups and a basis for establishing the agenda of the meetings.

The Honourable Adams's conclusion that an intensive two-day session to discuss central areas of interest should be scheduled was reported to the new minister, Norm Sterling, who strongly encouraged the parties to participate.

On the first day of the meeting, information was exchanged and goals were set. On the second day, a detailed review of common challenges was completed. Issues related to consumer protection and changes within the industry were also discussed and carefully considered.

Following the successful meetings, in May 2002, Minister Sterling invited interested parties to participate in the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee to advise the government on matters of interest to the sector and to consumers. I won't go into the lengthy list of that committee, but believe me, it represented a wide cross-section of the sector.

In the course of the meetings, the diverse group of stakeholders committed to support legislation founded on four basic tenets and committed to working together with the Honourable George Adams, QC, to advise the government. The committee's advice, achieved through consensus, has informed many areas, but especially provisions to strengthen consumer protection, measures to foster a level playing field for industry participants, options to create a single regulatory regime, and clear rules setting out the conditions under which combinations would be permitted.

The last two points are of greatest interest within the sector, and public awareness of them is also important to making informed decisions in the marketplace.

By proposing to create a single regulatory regime by combining the Cemeteries Act (Revised) with the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act, 1990, into one piece of modern legislation, the government is working toward providing a legislative framework that's easier for consumers and businesses alike to understand and follow.

Under a single piece of legislation, consumers would be protected in a system where inspections, investigations and penalties would be more consistent and effective. Legitimate sector participants and consumers alike, we believe, need clear, consistent standards that minimize loopholes for unscrupulous businesses to exploit and that competitors can follow quite easily.

The few bad apples who might try to take advantage of bereaved customers would be dealt with on a basis similar to that proposed in other consumer protection legislation already introduced in this session of the Legislature.

Compliance is best achieved through a range of activities, from educating service providers about their responsibilities and advising consumers of their rights, to continuing to provide civil remedies and rules to guide the resolution of contract disputes, to establishing administrative remedies as alternatives to prosecution.

Under the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, maximum fines for misdeeds, such as falsifying information or false advertising, would parallel those proposed in other government consumer protection initiatives, increasing to $50,000 for an individual and $250,000 for a corporation. Courts would be able to order restitution paid to consumers in appropriate cases.

As the various sectors are licensed, the proposed legislation would give the regulator the authority to establish and maintain discipline committees to deal with infractions of the code of ethics. Consumers who deal with services that become insolvent would be protected by a compensation fund similar to the one that currently exists under the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act, but is also geared to the needs of the specific group of providers.

The other major service issue pursued by the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee is known as the combination of services. Under current Ontario law, cemeteries must operate as separate corporate entities from funeral homes and all crematoria must be located on cemetery grounds. Funeral homes, on the other hand, may not be located on cemetery grounds. At the time the legislation was passed, this type of regulation was appropriate. Cemeteries were, for the most part, community operations frequently staffed entirely by volunteers. Funeral homes, on the other hand, were led and operated by professionally trained service providers. There was little overlap between the supplies and services offered by the two groups.

Today, bereavement services include a wide variety of options, including non-traditional and very simple funeral arrangements. Consumers want the ability to choose the services that they consider appropriate and to choose from one supplier or from specialists. Providers wish to offer the services that consumers want.

The proposed legislation would provide for the licensing of all service providers. The proposed licensing system would be developed with input from the stakeholder groups to maintain and increase the current high standards of Ontario practitioners in each service area.

Time doesn't allow me to continue for much longer, but what I can say is that I believe this particular legislation has come about as a result of a very strong, co-operative effort between the various stakeholders within the sector. The government received 15 major submissions from consumer groups and service providers, and if the proposed legislation passes, the government is committed to further consultation with the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee on potential regulations that are fair, effective, clear, flexible, and would minimize the burden of red tape on consumers and businesses—all with the goal of ensuring that an appropriate range of bereavement services is available for consumers within a reasonable legislative framework that meets the needs of both consumers and service providers in Ontario.

The consultation process has been truly extensive and productive in the development of the proposed legislation that we have before us today, and I want to thank everyone involved with the development of this piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: We are now open for comments and questions, up to four, and we'll start to my immediate left, the member of Elgin-Middlesex-London.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): This is very important piece of legislation that we are dealing with here, but I do take some exception to some of the comments that the honourable member made.

She talks about consumer protection and she talks about a few bad apples, and it troubles me that she's impugning this industry. This is an industry that last year performed over 80,000 burials. Out of those 80,000 burials, there were 26 complaints. And out of those 26 complaints, maybe about 13 of them were actually from consumers. So we're dealing with an industry that already recognizes that they're dealing with individuals at a difficult time. We're dealing with an industry that recognizes the importance of customer service, and it troubles me that she impugns—that there are bad apples out there that are in some way are hurting this industry.

You know, she talks about the services and supplies, and one of the areas that I have some real trouble with is the creation of monopolies within the whole bereavement sector. By allowing cemeteries to get into the funeral home business, they are creating a concept of one-stop shopping. They're creating a true monopoly, where the public is going to go into that cemetery, they're going to pay for their funeral service there, they're going to have to buy their grave, they're going to have to pay for the opening and closing charges in that cemetery, they're going to have to pay for the cost of the monument in that cemetery. I think we need to have consumer choice, and this isn't allowing for consumer choice.

This opening up of the large cemeteries is going to seriously threaten the viability of a number of private funeral homes that have spent countless dollars improving their facilities and are going to see that thrown out the window because this government is prepared to allow monopolies within the funeral services industry.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I'm pleased to speak following the speech by the member for Scarborough Centre. I thought she put forward a fairly detailed and effective argument for the bill that's before us. The only thing I would challenge her on is the contention that they consulted widely. They may have consulted widely, as they usually do, but mostly with the business side of the industry.

We've had a number of groups come before us, as a caucus, concerned about this bill, that there hasn't been enough consultation and there haven't been enough guarantees given that their interests are going to be recognized and looked after. These are the faith groups who, in many instances, run small rural cemeteries that are already struggling in many ways and who fear an imposition of new fees and taxes that may cause them financial hardship that they won't be able to respond to and deal with. They may, in fact, have to turn over their operations to some business interest that may then bring a corporate culture and approach to the way funerals are dealt with in those parts of the province, and stand the chance of losing many long-standing and important traditions in this very important area of public life: how we celebrate and work with families around the death of loved ones.

I also would contend that her suggestion that there will be further consultation as the regulations are put in place—it hasn't been the track record of the government to consult on regulations, but simply to make the regulation and show them to us after they're done. I hope the member would be willing to stand and give us further assurances on that front.

Mr Bob Wood (London West): I think the member set out very well the history and purpose of this legislation. I think she quite rightly pointed out there's been a long consultative process that has led to this legislation. All the stakeholders and the general public have had ample opportunity for input, and as a result of that there seems to be considerable consensus around this legislation.

This legislation is in fact 21st-century regulation. The regulation of this industry was badly outdated, and there was consensus around that from virtually everyone who made submissions on the legislation. There certainly are differences of view as to how to get to what was generally desired as a result, but I think we have a good example of consultation, application of good regulatory policy and a very good result. I think the member made that quite clear in her speech.

I think as well of the question not just of process but of substance: what is good 21st-century regulation? I think she dealt with that very well in her speech as well. What we are doing is offering informed consumer choice, achieved through appropriate competition. In achieving informed consumer choice, we are also giving a lot of consumer protections, which are necessary. There are unique features in an industry of this nature that indicate there have to be certain areas of regulation that might not be present in a different form of endeavour.

I thought the member covered the subject very well. I think she touched on the key points and made it quite clear why this is indeed a good piece of legislation.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I'd like to add some comments on the presentation by the member for Scarborough Centre. Indeed, she went into some detail explaining not only the history but the content of the present bill as it has been introduced.

I think the introduction of this bill is a good beginning. It is, I would say, a modest step in addressing some of the concerns surrounding the bereavement business, if you want to call it that, and they need to be addressed. I think the public in general needs to have alleviated some of those concerns that have been spoken of not only in the bill, but in the various agencies and the community.

It will never be 100% acceptable to both sides, but if we really want to see a more complete bill, I think this is the time that the minister should say, "You know what? Let's have some public hearings and let's have some input from those individuals, groups, agencies, either people who may have an interest in the legislation the way it has been drafted and are wanting to make it better or who are part of the industry and have some concern with the legislation." I think we owe it to those people who have a concern. As I said, yes, it does improve the situation, but there is still a lot of concern out there. This is an area that I think we have to address, and only once we expose the legislation to the general public, those who have a concern, can we say that indeed this will go a long way in offering protection to the general public.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Scarborough Centre has two minutes to respond.

Ms Mushinski: I'd certainly like to thank the members for Elgin-Middlesex-London, Sault Ste Marie, York West and London West for their contribution to this debate.

I would in response say to the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London that the whole issue around developing a code of ethics to address what I refer to as "bad apples" was actually raised by the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee itself. It was members who expressed serious concern about ensuring that consumers are protected from high-pressure sales tactics, misrepresentation and unconscionable consumer representations. It was for that reason that the development of a code of ethics to help protect individuals, as I said earlier, who perhaps are at one of the most vulnerable times of their lives, having lost a loved one—they would actually be facilitated by the proposed legislation. We believe higher maximum penalties for offences under the legislation would act as a deterrent, and that is actually in direct response to that serious issue that was itself raised by the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee.

To the member for Sault Ste Marie, I would reiterate that the government received 15 major submissions from consumer groups and, as I have already said, if the proposed legislation passes, this government will consult further.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Peters: As has oft been said, there are only two sure things in life, and that's death and taxes. For the most part, this Legislature deals with the tax end of things. It's not too often that we're dealing with death or the bereavement industry.

It's an important piece of legislation that we are dealing with in front of us today. Having been associated in numerous ways with the bereavement industry, from having served on a couple of cemetery boards to having family members who are in the business—and yes, I've already written to the Integrity Commissioner and I'm free to comment and to vote on this bill. There are a number of really positive things in this bill. There are some areas, though, that we do have some grave concern about. I want to go through the bill and point out some of the areas where I think we as government—and I heard the Minister of Transportation say this past Monday that he had no problem with this bill going to committee. I think it's imperative that this piece of legislation go to committee. I think, as much as we've heard that there's consensus out there, that there is a lot of concern that is being expressed by some individuals within the bereavement industry. I think we need to give them that opportunity to express their concerns.

You talk about section 47(3), which talks about speculating on cemetery plots. I can understand the rationale in here for talking about this, but on the flip side of it, when you talk about a refund, this could have a real burden on a number of cemeteries—a non-profit cemetery or a municipally run cemetery. In days of old, many plots were sold for $10, $25, but the value today could be $400 or $500 or substantially higher. The refund, though: if somebody bought a plot years ago and then came forward to a cemetery and said, "We're not going to use this plot. We would like a refund," this legislation says that they are going to have to pay market value. That could be an extreme burden. I know the St Thomas Cemetery Co, as an example, just struggles to make ends meet. If there was a flood of individuals who came forward and said, "We would like to resell our plots," this could cause a serious financial burden on cemeteries.

Section 49 talks about declaration of abandonment. I think this is a good piece of the bill, because after 20 years a cemetery can apply to the registrar to have the rights abandoned. There are hundreds and hundreds of plots in cemeteries across this province where the cemeteries could look for new sources of revenue. So section 49 of this bill I think can have a positive impact and help out cemeteries.

I think we need to look at some concern as well, though, under section 53(12), which talks about the perpetual care fund. One of the important things with cemeteries has been the establishment of the perpetual care fund, but they're leaving it open here that a capital portion could be accessed and could be permitted under regulation. I think we are going to have to watch this very closely, because these care funds are meant to look after a cemetery in perpetuity. If we start allowing cemeteries the opportunity to get in and remove the capital from these funds, down the road that could have a detrimental effect on the cemeteries.

This is another area in the legislation, sections 102 and 103, that I think needs to be strengthened. It talks about prohibition of interfering with the cemetery and liability. One of the most despicable crimes that we see around this province, and it happens all the time, is vandalism of cemeteries. Every cemetery in this province has experienced it. Do you know, for committing most of those crimes, unfortunately it's just a slap on the wrist or some community service that an individual has to undertake? I think it's incumbent on the government and every one of us in this Legislature that we strengthen sections 102 and 103, that we send a message to these idiots who are vandalizing cemeteries that this is not acceptable, that we ensure that it's right in the legislation so that the message is sent out to those individuals, and that we put strong fines in place for those idiots who vandalize cemeteries. I would ask that we work toward strengthening this legislation.

The other aspect of the legislation that I think we need to be concerned about is section 112. This in the area of dealing with abandoned cemeteries, and this is a real problem in this province. We have a lot of cemeteries in this province that are run by small rural boards, boards made up of volunteers who may only conduct one or two interments a year. They often find that they don't have adequate perpetual care funds. The graves have been sold for a much lower price, and many cemeteries find that they can't look after them. The burden then lies with municipalities, which then become responsible for the care and maintenance of these cemeteries.

We need to ensure, if cemeteries are being down-loaded, that there is an obligation on us to try to do what we can in the provincial Legislature to help some of these cemeteries out to meet their costs, and not do what has been suggested previously, which is that cemeteries that are finding themselves in difficult times are going to have to go out and undertake fundraising. Beer and bingos to help save cemeteries is not the answer. Downloading the responsibility for the care and maintenance of cemeteries shouldn't lie fully as a responsibility of the municipalities. There should be a role that we as government play in this.

The other area that needs to be addressed in this legislation is the whole question of fees. Cemeteries, it appears in this legislation, are going to be fee-ed to death. There's going to be fee after fee imposed. Again, it's not so much for the large cemeteries that this is going to be a real issue, but for the small, rural cemeteries. The small, rural cemeteries are already struggling right now. When they send their money to the care and maintenance fund, they have a whole pile of overhead costs and fees that they have to pay to the province.

I think we need to look at what we're doing with this legislation to ensure that we're not going to put so many fees in place that a small, rural board is just going to walk from a cemetery, which will then put it into the lap of the municipality, which is then going to put it on to the local tax base. We need to ensure when the fees are established that we take into account the ability of a small, rural cemetery to pay for those fees.

I'd like to go to some of the areas where I think there are some serious flaws in this legislation. In this province, we have 550 funeral homes. As I pointed out earlier, last year there were 80,000 deaths in this province—80,000 individuals who were looked after by the bereavement industry—and we had 26 complaints. Approximately 13 of those complaints were funeral-home-to-funeral-home complaints; but 13 complaints out of 80,000. Again, that's why I took exception to some of the comments that were made about bad apples out there. It's obvious this has been a very well-run industry. The individuals who are in this industry treat people with respect and dignity.

I take my hat off to a funeral director, because they are dealing with individuals at a most vulnerable time and they are dealing with individuals who are dealing with the loss of a loved one. I do commend those individuals in this industry. It takes a special person to be a funeral director. The way they comfort families and ensure that families get through these difficult times is to be commended. But we need to ensure, though, as these changes are being made that we're not radically altering the face of this industry.

I'm concerned in particular with one aspect of this legislation where we are radically going to alter the face of this industry and we have the potential to drive individuals out of business. Right now in the province there's a prohibition in place that a cemetery cannot run a funeral home. I think that has worked very well. It has given individuals the choice to go to the funeral director they want, it has given them the opportunity to pick the cemetery they want and it has given them the opportunity to pick the monument and casket they want. That's choice. But I'm afraid we're creating monopolies with this legislation. When we allow a funeral home, which can sell caskets and monuments, to be set up in a cemetery, we are creating a monopoly.

I know my brother, Joe Peters, who is a funeral director, gets paid a salary. Joe is paid to work with and for a family. If this legislation is going to go through, I think we need to talk about this whole area of commissions, because we know an individual who is being paid a salary will approach things much differently than an individual who is being paid a commission. An individual who is being paid a commission is going to push for a high-end casket; he's going to push for a high-end monument.

I have a problem with that. I think we need to ensure that in this legislation, if it is going through—and the government will probably use its majority and probably invoke closure on it, as they have done with 80% of the bills we've dealt with in this session.

There's a real serious problem. I think you need to recognize that you are dealing with people at a very vulnerable time. To have a commission salesman standing there and saying to a lady, "You know, Ma'am, your husband would want nothing but the best. He'd want that bronze casket. He'd want that cement vault that's bronze-coated. He'd want the great big monument." People are vulnerable, and when somebody is working on a commission, they're going to try and push to get the best sale they can. So I think the whole question of commissions seriously needs to be looked at.

We need to think about what's happening within this industry. We're already seeing a consolidation. We're seeing large companies being formed that are getting into this business because it's a business, quite honestly, that is recession-proof. We may see ups and downs in the auto industry and difficulties faced by the farmers but, as I said in the beginning, there are two sure things in life: death and taxes. In dealing with death, death is recession-proof.

We need to ensure that we do not do anything that is going to interfere in this industry. I am very concerned that by allowing cemeteries to get into the full-scale funeral business, we are going to hurt individuals who have made substantial investments. Buying a funeral home is not a cheap undertaking. Ensuring that your funeral home is up to date and modern is going to cost you a great deal of money. We need to ensure that we help those individuals who have made those investments to protect those investments.

The other aspect we need to think about is that many of these cemeteries that are going to be in the business, that are sitting there right now, putting their hands together and thinking, "Wow, we're going to be offering everybody one-stop shopping," are tax-exempt. Many of these cemeteries are run by non-profit corporations. Many of these cemeteries are faith groups. And in this legislation, you're going to allow them to remain exempt for a further five years. You talk about wanting to have fair competition. Well, I don't think it's very fair at all that an individual who has made a substantial investment, has paid property taxes and business taxes for many years—and it could be Williams Funeral Home in St Thomas, which has been in business since 1893—and all of a sudden, they're going to be up against somebody who is a non-profit and hasn't paid taxes. So I think we need to think about that.

I come back to the point of the consultation that was undertaken. I would assume that when the government undertakes extensive consultation and goes out and listens to the various stakeholders out there, the views of the stakeholders are going to be included in the legislation. I think the government has failed a number of stakeholders out there by not ensuring that the views and concerns they have are incorporated in this legislation.

In particular, I look at the funeral homes of this province. The funeral homes and the operators of these facilities have some very serious concerns. It's difficult to ensure that you don't put too many puns into your speech when dealing with this, because I can tell you honestly—and there is no pun intended—that there are some grave concerns out there with this legislation that's in front of us, and those concerns need to be addressed.

I come back to the point where it's incumbent that we take this bill out for public consultation. It's a consultation that not only needs to take place in Toronto but should take place outside Toronto, because in many cases around this province you have non-profit cemeteries. As well, I think we need to think about municipalities that are running cemeteries already. Right now, municipalities could be sitting back thinking, "This could be a very lucrative business for us to get into. If we're running a cemetery, this could be an opportunity for us to help increase revenue to look after the care and maintenance of the cemetery. Why don't we get into the funeral business?" If a municipality chose to do that—a municipality is tax-exempt; it's like a contra account; it's just in and out. They're not going to pay property or business taxes to themselves. Municipalities could potentially be getting into the business of operating funeral homes in direct competition with individuals who have made substantial investments over the years.

There are a number of flaws in this legislation that need to be addressed. In reading the bill, another area that I didn't see addressed and that I think should be addressed in legislation is the whole question of indigent burials. Every cemetery in this province has ensured that if an individual passes away they're going to receive a dignified burial. In conjunction with the province—it should be increased; I think they're only allocating about $2,600 to an indigent burial—a cemetery has always provided a grave space. We've ensured that an individual receives the same rights and benefits that any other individual has. Cemeteries have provided those grave spaces since time immemorial.

But there are challenges that cemeteries are facing now, and I think it's incumbent on the government to not allow this to be dealt with in individual cemetery bylaws; it should be incorporated in this legislation. One of the challenges that cemeteries are facing right now is that they have always provided a grave space free of charge for an indigent burial; they've never asked for a cent. But some cemeteries are now facing a challenge where individuals, for whatever reason, because of their financial situation have been buried with indigent burial fees. Some family members are coming to the cemetery now and asking to construct a monument. Cemeteries are saying that their bylaws state they can't allow them to put up a monument unless they own the plot. They don't technically own the plot. The plot has been provided for a family. I would like to see included somewhere in this legislation clarification given to cemeteries, so that when they provide this most important service of indigent burials, cemeteries know clearly what rules they're playing by.

As I said in the beginning, there are many positive things in this bill; there are a lot of good things. But I think there are some areas that we do have some grave concerns about, and I would ask that this government undertake good, open, public consultations to ensure that this is a piece of legislation that truly does meet the needs of everybody involved in the bereavement sector.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): As I sat here and listened, this debate made me feel old. I look around at who is in the chamber today and recognize that I am the only member who was here the last time this Legislature dealt with cemeteries and funeral services. I think that was in 1988.

As I listen to the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London, I'm hearing some of those arguments again. But what's interesting is that they sound like some of the arguments I was making, and the proponents of the bill at the time were the Liberals. I've got to go back and check Hansard on this, because I certainly remember some debate and concerns that I raised about not permitting funeral homes to sell monuments, for example, to deal with the whole issue of monopoly. We're going to go back and have a look at Hansard and see where some of these things fell. That's how long ago it is since we last dealt with this.

Some of the arguments are very much the same. That's not to be critical of the member; I'm not trying to do that. I hope he doesn't take that the wrong way. All I'm saying is that some of the arguments are very much the same in terms of worrying about big corporate owners and how they can take over some of the small family-operated cemeteries or monument services.

It is true we should have some more public hearings on this bill. I look at one of the Alerts that went out from AMO to all its members on November 21. The Alert that went out made it very clear that in fact the municipal members of the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee feel there were not unanimous recommendations and that there was not the full support the minister might have us believe for the provision. They made it very clear that AMO itself would be requesting changes to the bill, but they also make it very clear that they have asked the minister for public hearings and hope that will take place.

The municipalities aren't the only ones who have concerns with the final product. The faith communities do as well, and that's why we need the public hearings.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I appreciate the comments of the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London, though I think he needs a little bit of enlightenment in terms of what's really happening, to help him along. One of the issues he was addressing was selling a plot, in terms of what the legislation deals with.

The legislation responds to consumers' concerns about the value they are getting for the cemetery plot. Right now the law says a cemetery must pay you the same price for the plot in current dollars as you paid 5, 10 or 20 years ago when you purchased the plot. We are proposing to allow consumers to sell their plot back to cemeteries at fair market value. This will not hurt cemeteries, because they can resell the plot at the current value of the plot, or they can choose to hold on to it and sell it down the road. As to what the member is suggesting, or needs further explanation of, I think I have provided that to him in terms of the selling of a plot, with respect to a cemetery plot.

The member also suggested this legislation is bad for small and rural cemeteries. We will be setting a minimum threshold for cemeteries that perform a small number of ceremonies each year. This will be done in regulation after we've had a chance to consult with the industry to determine the right threshold. Cemeteries that fall under the threshold will of course be subject to the exemptions. So my comments relate to the selling of a cemetery plot. They also relate to the member's concerns with respect to small and rural cemeteries. I am confident the legislation and the regulation will address that.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitowlin): The first thing I would like to say is that I appreciate the very strong intervention by my colleague from Elgin-Middlesex-London. He brings some real thoughtfulness to this debate, which comes from his municipal experience with the good folks in the St Thomas area and in Elgin county, and the very real problems small rural cemeteries in smaller communities are going to face as they try to deal with this bill.

I come from an experience that is in some ways very similar in terms of representing small-town and rural Ontario. As Mr Peters would know, mine would be even more rural than his in many ways. We have many small cemeteries that will have a great deal of difficulty meeting the regulations we see before us. As I was listening to one member speak to this, they were talking about cemeteries with only maybe two dozen interments in a year. I was trying to think of a cemetery that would have that many in my part of the world. They really don't exist.

With this bill, the essence of which is to combine cemetery and funeral home operations, on the cemetery side of this bill they're going to find it very difficult to meet the regulations at a cost-effective price. I don't believe, in many cases, that it can be done. I believe that many small volunteer cemeteries that are maintained are having difficulty even today, as the people who look after them are finding fewer and fewer people to pass the torch to, and these small community cemeteries are going to find, under this particular bill, more difficult—not less—problems with maintaining their cemeteries.

Mr Martin: I also want to commend the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London for a fine speech. I thought he laid out the concern that we have over here very clearly, among a number of concerns, around the question of creating big monopolies now in Ontario that will deliver almost everything under the heading of "bereavement services" and not contribute at all to the furthering of a very healthy small business sector that will always be needed in communities, unfortunately, competing with each other and providing opportunity for local economic development and jobs and contributing to local community economic development. That's our concern here, given the track record of the government side in moving forward very aggressively the agenda of rather large corporations and businesses to the detriment of almost everybody else, including small businesses.

I know the work that I did on trying to regulate franchising in the province gave me certainly an eye-opener for big business coming in and taking over many small, local opportunities for people to sell goods, do their business, support the local economy and how the big corporation then comes in and detracts from that by sourcing everything from outside and giving less and less control to local, small, family-owned operations and therefore taking away from that community some of the contribution that the bereavement services industry can bring. So we have concerns about that, and we'll be putting them on the record as we intervene and as the member did earlier here this afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Elgin-Middlesex-London has two minutes to respond.

Mr Peters: I want to thank the members from Nickel Belt, Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford, Algoma-Manitoulin and Sault Ste Marie for their comments. I want to just touch on some of the comments of the member for Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford.

I'm going to use the St Thomas Cemetery Co as an example. The St Thomas Cemetery Co has about 26 acres of land. There have been 22,000 interments in that cemetery since 1850, but there are thousands and thousands of vacant graves. There's never going to be a shortage in that cemetery for a vacant grave, or a need for a grave.

Let's use for an example 10 people who 10 years ago paid $100 for a plot, and now that plot today is worth $500. Those 10 people come forward to the cemetery; it's now $5,000. The cemetery company is going to have to find $4,000 to refund those individuals. Four thousand dollars in the grand scheme of things to individuals in this room may not be a lot of money, but I can tell you, having served on that St Thomas Cemetery board for probably close to 13 years, that $4,000 could be an extreme hardship for that cemetery.

That's why I think there needs to be a serious look taken at section 47 of the resale of rights and in particular this area of refund, because this could put a serious, serious financial burden on a lot of cemeteries. I could think of some rural cemeteries that were selling cemetery plots at $25 apiece. Those plots now could be worth $250 or $500. Again, this could have some serious financial repercussions on rural cemeteries, so I think we need to ensure that this bill goes to public hearings, as has been pointed out. I think we need to listen to the bereavement sector. We need to listen to others out there to ensure that this truly is a 21st-century piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Gerry Martiniuk (Cambridge): I'm pleased to be here today to speak in support of the proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, being Bill 209.

If I may, first, there has been some discussion up to now about solicitation, and the use of telephone solicitation in particular, in regard to funeral and burial services. I'd point out to the members that in section 29 of the proposed bill, subsection (1) states that "No licensee or other person shall contact, by telephone or in person, a person for the purpose of soliciting the making of, or negotiating, a contract for the sale or provision of a licensed supply or service." That's basically an absolute prohibition.

The act goes on in subsection 29(2) to deal with vulnerable persons, which we all should be concerned with. It states that "No licensee or other person shall contact, by any means, a person in a hospital, nursing home, home for the aged, hospice or such other institution as may be prescribed for the purpose of soliciting the making of, or negotiating, a contract for the sale or provision of a licensed supply or service." I believe that section does provide the protection to the public that is necessary under these most difficult of circumstances.

This proposed legislation deals with some of the most important purchases that consumers will ever make. Such purchases are often difficult for most persons because of their personal grief at the time a loved one dies. In spite of their personal grief, people want to do what is best to ensure a sense of closure for family and friends. Psychologists tell us that if we believe we have made the appropriate decisions about funeral arrangements when a loved one dies, it can begin the healing process.

Many people read the words "most expensive" into their concept of what represents an appropriate funeral. Aside from very simple funerals, bereavement care is in fact expensive. An average funeral costs more than $5,000 in Ontario.

Under the government's proposed legislation, consumers would have more information about the range of services and their prices. For example, funeral homes, transfer services and cemeteries in Ontario already offer lists of the services they provide and their costs, but the new proposed legislation would allow for regulations requiring standardized lists from all operators so that the person who is deciding which services are appropriate could better compare what is available in the marketplace. The proposed legislation would also provide for regulations allowing consumers to receive a brochure available at service suppliers across Ontario giving them a toll-free number they could call for information about bereavement services.

Given the emotional state of most people at the time they must plan a funeral and their desire to do their best for family and friends, comparing prices may appear to them crass or even unnecessary, but their decisions can greatly affect their family's financial as well as emotional well-being. The cost of a casket can range from $300 to $30,000, although most fall at the lower end of this range. Traditional funerals involve quite a number of services that most people forget about when they are making plans unless they are specifically spelled out. For example, typical funeral home services or a traditional service may include securing and recording vital statistics for death certificates and permits; a basic professional service charge; transfer of remains to the funeral home; the use of the funeral home's facilities, which might include a facility for a service, visitation, a reception area and a parking lot; embalming and cosmetic services; a casket, cremation urn or other container; pastoral and music services; funeral vehicles; arrangement for flowers and newspaper notices; and all before consumers have even considered a cemetery plot or marker.

Other decisions include whether they should opt for cremation and whether a burial plot or columbarium would be more appropriate. There is a lot to think about, and the consumer will have very little time to give close consideration before choices will have to be made.

As with all participants in the sector, a funeral home must be highly professional and well-organized to be able to deal with new clients on a moment's notice. They must meet needs that may vary considerably from one consumer to the next and deal with sensitivity to grief in an atmosphere of dignity.

Under the current regulatory regime, to be licensed in Ontario funeral establishments and transfer services must file a pre-licensing information sheet with the Board of Funeral Services, along with architectural drawings and a five-year business plan. The information sheet must be filed again every five years after licensing. In addition, the applicant must complete a number of other tasks. These include providing contracts, price lists and advertising; disclosing trust accounts held by the establishment; submitting proof of compliance with local zoning bylaws; sending copies of articles of incorporation; and undergoing a Board of Funeral Services inspection and a public health inspection.

Qualifications of funeral directors are considered to be the nation's highest in Ontario. The Board of Funeral Services may require someone wishing to enter the licensing program to take the entire funeral services program in one of two board-approved facilities, to serve an internship in Ontario and to successfully complete a written assessment of funeral service topics, depending on the applicability of the person's background.

The high calibre of Ontario funeral professionals is demonstrated by the relatively small number of investigations carried out as a result of complaints from the public or other professionals each year. On average, 20 to 30 investigations result from complaints made annually and most are resolved by an inspector working together with the parties involved. The most serious complaints are dealt with by the Board of Funeral Services discipline committee. Complaints against funeral directors are published in an industry publication, along with suggestions on how similar problems can be prevented in the future.

Licenses under the Board of Funeral Services are also required to pay into a compensation fund established to provide protection for consumers who prepay funeral expenses. More than $1.7 million is currently held in reserve through this consumer protection initiative to provide compensation in cases where, for whatever reason, the consumer is unable to receive the services or products they have purchased. A long-term commitment to providing quality services among funeral services in the province has influenced Ontario's direction in terms of improving consumer protection for all participants in the province's bereavement services sector.

Two of the major thrusts that would carry throughout the sector under the Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, are codes of ethics for practitioners and the establishment of a compensation fund for all operators. Both have been successfully applied to funeral services for some time without adverse effects on service providers. Consistency and excellence in the provision of consumer protection measures that are fair for consumers and businesses and flexible enough to support the development of new business models in a modern marketplace are the principles on which Ontario's proposed Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002, was based.

In today's marketplace, consumers' demand for the availability of simple and alternative funeral services, as well as their demand for a wider range of services to be made available without involving a number of suppliers, compel the government to act. The proposed legislation would allow for combinations of items and services to be made available by service providers. This is a trend across Canada and the United States. Most other jurisdictions in both countries already allow for the combination of funeral and cemetery services.

Apart from the benefits of harmonized legislation, the government of Ontario is determined to raise the bar for consumer protection by providing very high standards across the bereavement services sector, including marker and casket retailers, who have never before been regulated.

Regular consultations with consumers and sector participants led to the government's belief that a full review of changes in legislation was needed for consumers and practitioners in the bereavement sector. Key stakeholders from all segments of the bereavement services sector who have a full grasp of the range of consumer and service provider challenges provided invaluable information and advice to the Ontario government as it proceeded to work toward new legislation for the bereavement sector.

In 1998, the then Minister of Consumer and Business Services, the Honourable David Tsubouchi, became convinced of the need for a detailed consultation on the important issues that affect consumer groups and stakeholders in this sector. The minister asked the Red Tape Commission to meet with stakeholders and to suggest ways to ensure that Ontario's standards and regulatory framework were current and relevant to the marketplace. The Red Tape Commission developed a voluntary working group consisting of two members of the RTC, along with consumers and service providers, which met periodically from autumn 1998 through the spring of 1999 to look at the issues critical to the sector and to consumers. In February 2001, the Red Tape Commission issued a confidential report to Minister Bob Runnicman, who had then assumed the consumer portfolio.

The interests of stakeholders, who included profit as well as not-for-profit, charitable, religious and municipal organizations, and who ranged from large corporations to one-person facilities, are diverse. While most shared the government's view that the legislation should be updated to provide greater advantages to consumers and service providers, there was little consensus as to the direction that the legislation should take.

The Honourable George Adams, QC, was requested by the minister to meet with stakeholders to seek consensus among them. In February 2001, he met individually with industry and consumer representatives. A significant pre-consultative period provided background on the concerns of individual groups and a basis for establishing an agenda of the meetings. The Honourable George Adams' conclusion that an extensive two-day session to discuss central areas of interest should be scheduled was reported to the new minister, the Honourable Norm Sterling, who strongly supported the plan.

Following two days of meetings in March 2001, the Adams report was forwarded to Minister Sterling, who released it to participants in the mediation and facilitation session on May 31, 2001. Minister Sterling explained in a letter to the participants that he planned to convene a Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee and invited them to take part to advise the government on matters of interest to the sector and to consumers.

The role of the committee was to provide a forum for exchange of views, developing concrete options dealing with four areas: methods to strengthen consumer protection, measures to foster a level playing field for industry participants, options to create a single regulatory regime and clear rules setting out the conditions under which the combined ownership of funeral and cemetery operations would be permitted.

The committee's advice, achieved through consensus, was offered in these four areas in a report to the minister on November 23, 2001:

(1) Methods to strengthen consumer protection: 18 consumer protection measures were proposed ranging from the development of codes of ethics to full disclosure of the ownership of a service provider.

(2) Measures to foster a level playing field for industry participants required practitioner and facility licensing for all components of the sector with the qualifications linked directly to the services provided, and would ensure a level playing field for service providers who wished to expand on their service offerings.

(3) Options to create a single regulatory regime: participants agreed with the government that combining the two current bereavement sector statutes would create a legislative framework that would make it easier for consumers and businesses alike to understand and follow.

(4) Clear rules for setting out the conditions under which combinations would be permitted: recommendations included the introduction of education, ethics and standards programs throughout all parts of the sector to ensure consumers would be able to compare services effectively.

Where does the notion of what should be included in education ethics and standard programs come from? Much of it comes from the experience of Ontario's board of funeral services. In the case of funeral directors, a full academic program must be pursued, including a 12-month internship sponsored by a licensed funeral director and board exams.

Even to apply to become a funeral director in Ontario, a funeral director must meet quite specific admission requirements, including a grade 12 diploma or equivalent, a tax-based period of observation or training at a funeral home, pre-admission testing, a recent health certificate and a valid driver's licence.

If the proposed legislation is passed, the government believes that at the end of the day, consumers will know that despite their personal grief, they have done what is best to provide a sense of closure for friends and family and started their own healing process after suffering a loss with the help of a responsible and responsive Ontario bereavement sector.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Mr Peters: The honourable member from Cambridge used a term over and over in his speech; he talked about levelling the playing field. My concern with this legislation is that it is not levelling the playing field. The potential of this legislation to hurt funeral homes, like Cardinal Funeral Homes or Newediuk Funeral Homes here in Toronto, is there. The potential is there to hurt some of these individuals who have invested thousands of dollars in their establishments. The playing field, I'm afraid, is going to be tilted by allowing cemeteries to create monopolies for one-stop services. To me that isn't a level playing field.

The honourable member talked about consultations with the stakeholder groups. But when stakeholder groups call you up, whether it be the Central Ontario Funeral Directors Association or the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, it's obvious that there hasn't been a thorough consultation taken in the development of this legislation. I would hope, if a piece of legislation is going to be brought before us here, that there will be that good, open consultation and that the government is going to ensure that it is the best piece of legislation possible. The best legislation is not only going to meet the needs of the consumers, but it's going to ensure that those individuals who have invested in the bereavement industry are afforded some protection. I'm afraid there are individuals who are going to be hurt as a result of this legislation, and that we are going to see large operations created in cemeteries around this province. If we want to have a level playing field, why not pull that provision out of this bill? Let's keep it the way it is right now. We've got a private sector group that is prepared to look after the needs and we've got cemeteries that are prepared to look after the needs. Why mix the two?

Ms Martel: In the last rotation I talked about some of the concerns that AMO had, which really reiterated why we need some public hearings. In this round I would give some perspective from one of the faith communities that was involved in some of these consultations that still continues to believe that there are concerns that have not been dealt with, particularly concerns they have that need to be dealt with before this bill is passed.

We received some information on November 22 from Harry Huskins, who represents the Anglican Church of Canada, that said the following: "On Wednesday morning, November 20," the same day the bill was introduced, "a faith communities delegation met with the minister and the senior policy advisers before" the bill was introduced.

"We told" him "that we supported the intention" of the legislation, "but have concerns about the board of a new authority making decisions that would have inadvertent consequences for religious communities." Here are some of the concerns: "the imposition of new charges, fees or levies for our small congregations, mosques, synagogues and parishes;" second, "the imposition of new administrative burdens or personnel qualification requirements on the volunteers who are now doing the paperwork in these small places;" and third, concerns about "any provision which would lead to new property taxation."

They also raised concerns about costs, saying very clearly that whether those costs are the result of new taxation or the result of a need for a self-financing authority to raise revenues, many of the small operations they deal with that barely make their budget from year to year now would feel forced to use the abandonment provision and transfer their cemeteries to local municipalities. What is the sense of that, if we force these faith communities to abandon cemeteries because they can't afford some of the costs that will come from the new authority? I just say to the government, look, you've got concerns from municipalities, you've got serious concerns raised by faith communities; why doesn't someone from the government stand up and say, "We're going to have some public hearings to deal with these concerns"?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I'd like to commend my colleague from Cambridge for his contribution to this debate. His presentation was incredibly well researched, as it normally is with that member. The member mentioned the whole issue of door-to-door sales. That's something with which I would have a tremendous concern, that you would have folks marketing in this way. I'm pleased, as I know that members on both sides of the House, including the official opposition, will want to note that section 29(1) of the bill says, "No licensee or other person shall contact, by telephone or in person, a person for the purpose of soliciting the making of, or negotiating, a contract for the sale or provision of a licensed supply or service." For this type of really vulnerable group, for this type of sensitive issue, I certainly am supportive of that and I want to commend the member for raising that point.

I'd also like to mention that the bill does contain some pretty specific provisions with respect to a practice that is quite negatively known as ambulance chasing—and the member opposite raised this. To contact someone at a particularly vulnerable stage, whether they're in a hospital, at a nursing home or in receipt of palliative care, I think would be unconscionable. I am pleased that section 29(2) of the bill provides some really strong consumer protection. I know that is important.

I'd like to commend the member for Cambridge for his thoughtful remarks on this issue. I look forward to more debate on it. I'd like to congratulate Tim Hudak, the minister, for finally tackling what is a difficult issue. There are a lot of sensitive issues involved here and he has had the courage to do that. I'd also like to congratulate Jon Clancy for his work on this important piece of legislation.

Mr Brown: I was hoping that when a minister of the crown stood up, he would have done what the Minister of Transportation did a couple of days ago in this debate when he committed to full public hearings on this bill. That is something the opposition has hoped for. We were hoping we could deal with this in a non-partisan way so that we could understand what the various sectors of this so-called industry are saying.

I would like to remind members, as the member from Cambridge pointed out, that funeral directors in this province dealt with about 83,000 services last year. Of those, there were only consumer complaints in 13. So I think the funeral directors of this province could be fairly said to be well regulated and practising with a high degree of ethics.

In my constituency we have small rural funeral directors, we have family funeral directors. We have the Gilmartins in Wawa and Chapleau, the Beggs family in Thessalon, the Menards of Blind River and Elliot Lake, Jamie Bourcier and his family in Espanola, Gloria Dickson and her family in Little Current, and the Culgins in Gore Bay. They provide a first-class, understanding, empathetic service to those families.

I want the ministers to understand that this is about combinations. This is about big business entering in an even larger way into this industry. That is what you're permitting.

While the minister just talked about the section prohibiting solicitation, what we want to know is, are they prohibiting commission sales? Having commission sales in this industry is impossible in the protection of the public interest. It should not happen, because if there are commission sales, they will find ways to solicit, Minister.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Cambridge has two minutes to respond.

Mr Martiniuk: I'd like to thank the members for Elgin-Middlesex-London, Nickel Belt, Nepean-Carleton—the Minister of Energy—and Algoma-Manitoulin for their comments in regard to this bill.

I dealt at some length in my address with the prolonged history. This act follows a very rare commodity in this day: a consensus recommendation by the industry and consumers after what I would consider prolonged and intensive consultation of all stakeholders. I'm very pleased that a bill of this kind on a very difficult topic could result in a consensus.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Sergio: I'd like to continue with the debate on Bill 209, with respect to the so-called strengthening of the provisions of funeral homes and the services that are being provided by funeral homes. Bill 209 in itself says that this is "An Act respecting funerals, burials, cremations and related services and providing for the amendment of other statutes." There are a number of things that the bill envisages to do. How well the bill is going to do them is another story. Let me say at the outset that I don't want to be seen as ranting and raving against the bill because I'm in total opposition to it. I want to very objectively go through some or most of the content of the bill in the time I have and point out some of the concerns I have with the content of the bill.

In the way it has been presented, it envisages doing two very particular things. One is to strengthen consumer protection, and of course we are all in favour of consumer protection in the bereavement services business or the funeral services business. The other one is something else, but still it is connected to the business itself, and we call it standards, ethics. Of course, who wouldn't be supportive of providing better standards in that service, especially in this particular sector? I don't have to tell you it's not only at that time that it is very sensitive. The entire funeral services—provisions and standards and protection—is a sensitive business itself. So if the bill envisages doing exactly those things, then I think it would be in the best interest of the general public, the consumers, to make sure that the bill does exactly that.

How can we be assured of that? We have heard the minister and some other members saying this is the best in 100 years. We would like to make sure of that. If that is the case, then the minister, I'm sure, has absolutely no problem making sure we have some time allocated for public hearings so that we can go to the public, to those agencies, individuals and businesses that deal with the bereavement industry, to those that have an interest, and to the public in general. Because in that situation, it is not that we are dealing solely with a human body, a person who just passed away; we are dealing with a number of other concerns, but especially the family and those who are close to that family. We are concerned with both the person who just died and the ones who are still living who have to deal with the details and whatever that entails.

There are some issues I want to address. Quite a bit is left out of the legislation that I believe the public still has concern about. If we, as legislators, don't want it to be seen that this piece of legislation is being driven by the corporations out there, by those that are in the business in a big way, and it is a big business, then we owe it to the public to assure them that this legislation is not out there because it's been driven by those corporations with big interests and that this piece of legislation creates a very level playing field.

I believe there are areas in this legislation that do not create that level playing field. If we don't want to be seen as interfering with that idea, then again, we have another reason why we should go to the public and make sure those individuals, those agencies, those that have an interest will have their say. I'm sure that the government—the Premier, the minister, the members from the government—are interested in making sure that everyone has a good understanding of what the bill entails.

With respect to creating more solid, greater protection so that we don't create a monopoly, I think this is extremely important, and I think based on that solely, because there is some apprehension out there that the way it is now the bill eventually will create exactly that: a monopoly. But it's not then that we have to deal with this monopoly; it is now. We have to deal with it now. I see the need, and I ask the minister that this bill go to committee for public hearings. No one, the government or the opposition here, can be seen not to offer the protection this particular type of business offers to the public.

Yes, I think it is great that we license those operators. I think it's good the public knows that they are dealing with people who have some regulations, ethics and standards. As the legislation here says, those who sell caskets should be licensed, of course; the headstone people should be licensed. But at the same time as we demand more protection for the consumer, we should see that we offer protection on both ends. At the time that one of the services is required, there isn't sufficient time to really delve into every detail. But at the same time we have to be very much aware that by passing the legislation the way it is, we are not going to damage the small business industry which provides a tremendous service to the entire province as a service industry: creating jobs, maintaining the existing positions and offering a service that is competent to the general public, and, at the same time, affordable.

Are we nibbling at this particular type of business now? It may very well be that by approving the legislation the way it's been presented, we are going to readdress those services to a particular location, and eventually control that market. Why do I say that? Included in the legislation as it is now, if the legislation of course will pass, cemeteries will be allowed to get a licence as funeral homes. What does that mean? The funeral home as we now know it may be or will be bypassed and they will be going directly to a cemetery. Of course, they will have so-called visitation centres as well; of course, they may be selling the headstones; of course, they will be selling caskets—all of them.

Is this increasing protection for the general public, for consumers? Does this mean that we will see a decrease in the general cost of the funeral service itself, or the cost of those items? I have a hunch that the opposite will happen. Why do I have this hunch? Because I am not satisfied, with the content of the legislation as it has been presented, that we are being objective on both sides and we are offering the general public and the consumer that particular choice.

Why do I say that? I mentioned to the minister, I believe, when he introduced the legislation a few days ago, that back in March 2000 I introduced a very similar bill, but my bill, I have to say, was dealing mainly with some changes to the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act. Why? By the way, this went to first and second reading. When I mentioned that to the minister, he said, "You know what? I am addressing those concerns that you had expressed in your bill, Bill 54, back in March and April 2000."

Let me say this. Today I had a very nice conversation with a person who evidently is very knowledgeable and who has an interest in this general business. Whether he was representing himself totally, or some cemeteries, some organization or agency, a lobby group, I have no idea, but he came to see me and said, "Let's see what your concern is with respect to Bill 209." The main concern was with respect to holding funeral services from an unlicensed place or a so-called funeral centre.

I demanded from the minister a clarification of this particular point, because at the time of bereavement, people—the public, the consumer—should not be burdened with the problem of finding out if this is a funeral home, a funeral centre or what have you. I think we have to be clear. The legislation does not address that. I can't find it here in the legislation. If it is somewhere else, then I'll be more than happy to say that my major concern has been addressed. I'm still waiting to hear from the minister's office. They wanted to meet with me to discuss the major concern I have with this particular bill, and I have to say that I'm still waiting. I'll be very happy to meet with the minister's staff, and if they can appease me and everybody else with respect to that, I think we are going a long way to making sure that indeed the bill is much better than what it seems to be.

Why is that such an important point? When I introduced Bill 54, it stemmed from the fact that a human body was prepared in a licensed funeral home; then it was transferred. The bill here speaks of transfer operators in not very much detail. The body was transported to one of these funeral centres. This funeral centre at the same time was selling caskets. So indeed, prior to having a human body there, this was a store, if you will. It was a funeral centre selling caskets. But it originally had called itself a funeral home. Well, it was not a funeral home. It was a funeral centre, unlicensed, operating, without the facilities of a funeral home, as a funeral home. This was brought to my attention, and that's when the bill was introduced.

As I said, I cannot get a clear answer. Bill 209, the way it has been presented by the minister, will do just that: it will allow a human body to be prepared in a funeral home, then transported somewhere else for visitation, and that's where the funeral services will be taking place a day or two later. This is what I'm trying to avoid. This is what I'm trying to pinpoint to the minister, and this is the concern of a lot of people. If we allow this to happen, if this legislation will allow that, we will see residential neighbourhoods suffering horrendous traffic that at the moment is prohibited. Furthermore, we will see what we may call franchised funeral centres. Why shouldn't they? Unless I am told otherwise, this is what will be happening.

I should tell you, Mr Speaker, and perhaps you know—I shouldn't say, "I should tell you"; pardon me—that any commercial location allows for a store, a funeral centre, a funeral parlour to sell caskets, since it is a commercial venue. Isn't it nice that a particular location that may be abutting a residential community all of a sudden says, "I don't prepare the body here. I have no facilities to prepare the body here. This is strictly a visitation centre"? This is the problem, and I cannot get a straight answer from the minister or the government. This is not what they want, this is not what I want and it's not in this piece of legislation. It is a major concern. As I said at the outset: providing better support—absolutely; providing more protection—absolutely.

Another area where I have some concern—I've had some calls, and there is genuine concern—is the 30-day cooling-off period. If you don't like a particular headstone—I think we're too late for a casket at that stage. With respect to making a decision if you want an expensive casket or not, if you want it in wood, if you want it in steel, I think that is a very quick decision, and of course it is between the salespeople at the funeral centre and the family members to decide on that. That is something that will be decided very quickly.

Where we have a problem is with respect to other services. If you make a contract for a headstone, you have to decide what the amount will be, and you may come back 10, 15 or 20 days later and say, "Do you know what? I've changed my mind." But maybe the headstone is ready. What are we going to do in that respect? We may have a small operator who has been in business for a long time and never had a problem, but all of a sudden he is faced with stiff competition from a large cemetery where they are offering headstone services, funeral services and the sale of caskets. I have some concern with that as well.

I think the legislation needs to be cleaned up; it needs to be tightened. It needs to provide assurance, not only to consumers, as I said, but also to those who provide services to consumers. I think they are entitled to some clarification. They are entitled to some protection as well. We owe it to them.

I'm saying to the minister, please take a look at my bill, Bill 54, see the content and make sure this particular concern is addressed, because I don't see it being addressed in the bill as it is here. Only then, once we have sent this bill for a good public hearing, can we come back and say, "Everything has indeed been addressed. Let's send it forward," and the bill should pass.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Ms Martel: I want to thank the member for York West for the comments he made.

It's a good thing we have lots of letters today, because I can read yet one more from people who are watching this legislation and who frankly are telling the government that there are ongoing concerns that reinforce the need for some public hearings on this bill. I gather as I listen to my Liberal colleagues that the Minister of Transportation mentioned this briefly in passing, in a two-minute response two days ago, and we haven't heard from the government since. So I'm hoping that at some point during the debate today the government is going to indicate that in fact there will be some public hearings.

I talked to you about the municipal Alert and the conversations that we've had with some of the faith communities, but it's interesting that a letter also went on September 20, 2002, to Tim Hudak, the minister responsible for this legislation, from a Miss Melanie Currie, who is a policy analyst for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Lo and behold, the CFIB is also now telling the government, or maybe they're still telling the government, that they have ongoing concerns about this legislation, which I think would warrant some public hearings.

As she said in this September 20 letter to the minister, they "appreciated the opportunity to participate over the last 19 months in the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee," and they did so on behalf of members who are the independents in that sector. She also says that they have "advocated consistently in support of a framework that will enhance fair competition in the industry, including the choice of independent service providers and open, honest communications from all players." She notes that they reviewed the draft legislation on August 30 and, "Our reading of the legislation is that there are areas where it does not respect the agreement of principles" put forth by the committee to Mr Hudak's predecessor on November 23. "As a consequence, we worry [about] the future viability of independent operations in the bereavement sector...." So yet another reason why we do need some public hearings.

Hon Mr Baird: I listened with great interest to my colleague from York West and his comments on this bill, as I did when he made the response for the official opposition the day it was introduced.

As I recall, his bill—it was in June 2000, I believe—dealt with the whole issue of visitation centres with respect to the broader area of funeral services. I think the bill that we are debating today very much supports the general intent of that area which he brought forward. It provides for rites in cemeteries, provided an establishment meets some very specific licensing requirements, which I think is good news. The bill brought forward by the hard-working member for Erie-Lincoln, my colleague, puts an end to the current competition that independent-based funeral homes face from these tax-free visitation centres currently established on cemetery land.

I think there are some business people who have made investments—and when I say "investments," these are, by and large, a lot of family operations in various parts of the province, and they should be on a level playing field. I think this bill tries to get us there, some of it immediately and some of it in about five years, as I understand it. But the legislation we are debating today also requires visitation centres to be licensed as a form of funeral establishment, if you will.

Bill 54 also proposed a third category of location, where rites in cemeteries would be held four or fewer times per year. The broad definition of "funeral establishment" used in the government's bill presented by Mr Hudak allows for the creation of classes of such establishments in regulation and leaves room for addressing locations occasionally used for funerals. That's good news for consumers in the province.

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell):

I have to congratulate the member for York West for the work that he has done on this bill. He has done the research properly and he knows what he's talking about.

But at the present time, I thought we had a pretty good system in place, because those people who want to become funeral home operators or funeral directors have to take the courses. There are courses available at Humber College here in Toronto, and for francophones there is Collège Boréal in Sudbury. It's a two-year course, and after they have completed the course they have to make sure they are employed by a funeral home operator that is in operation already.

We have been talking about this for many, many years in Canada, I would say, but at the present time, in trying to defeat a system that is really working well, I really wonder what the reason is behind this. I'm anxious to see this bill go to committee. If it does go to committee, we would be able to question the government on the purpose of tabling this bill.

I have to tell you, there's a section that concerns me. The bill preserves certain provisions of the Cemeteries

Act. In my own riding at the present time, in the village of Plantagenet, there is a closed cemetery, a cemetery that used to function and be well managed. All of a sudden, it was not in operation. We called the ministry people because a bulldozer was on it. They moved the stones, and the bones also, but there was no action. I just wonder if the new bill will give us the staff, the resources necessary to follow those infractions that have been occurring.

Mr Martin: I want to also commend the member for York West for his comments here this afternoon. I think we're starting to get an interesting flavour presented as the various sides get up and speak on this bill. It's not as clear-cut and simple as one would think at first blush, particularly when we listened to the introduction of the bill by the government, who obviously want it through here quickly so they can get another piece of business done—

Mr Martin: Yes, 86 pages. Get it through here, get it done and move on.

It does, in fact, intrude into an area of public business in communities across this province that has some very real ramifications and concern. We need to look at it very carefully. That's why we, as a caucus, are very clear in our call for public hearings. We want to hear from the various groups that we have letters on behalf of in our offices these days raising concerns from some interesting sectors: the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, lots of faith groups who have concern about this and others. I'll go through just a short list. We have, as I said, the faith groups; independent funeral establishments in urban areas that have some concerns; funeral establishments in rural areas; funeral establishments in medium-sized areas—they're all different, they all have a different area of influence and raise concerns; just funeral establishments in general; the cemeteries, who have some concerns about this and I believe want to come to the table to share some of what they think would be improvements to the act; of course, consumers; casket and market retailers; and municipalities. I think it would behoove the government, as we've said here time and time again, to take the time that's necessary to do this right so that we don't have to do it again.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for York West has two minutes to respond.

Mr Sergio: I'd like to thank the members from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, Nickel Belt, Nepean-Carleton and Sault Ste Marie as well.

The comments that I made in addressing my particular bill—which the minister, the member from Nepean-Carleton, mentioned—are on unlicensed funeral homes or funeral centres, if you will. I'm glad he did read my bill, Bill 54, which addresses that particular point. It is with respect to conducting funeral services from an unlicensed place, but only in the absence of a funeral home, a funeral centre or a funeral parlour. It is mandatory to be incorporated to service those isolated areas—I don't want to say that as a slight—such as, let's say, northern Ontario, where there are sparse populations, where we don't have a funeral home every two miles. I think, and it says so here, that it's being left to the discretion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who may make an exemption to service those particular areas, but not in the city of Toronto or any other place within the boundaries of Ontario. That is strictly to give an opportunity to those underserved areas to indeed provide and conduct service from an unlicensed place, and then only by the order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. So I think it is important, again, that the minister goes back and takes a look at Bill 54 and incorporates those comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate.

Mr Martin: I look forward to the few minutes I have here this afternoon to put some thoughts on the record on behalf of our caucus re this very important piece of public business.

I'll say right off the bat that it's a piece of legislation that has in it portions that are supportable, that are improvements, that are an evolution of this activity across the province. On the other hand, there are some things that are still creating concern and are problematic for ourselves and a number of groups across the province.

We as a caucus are very clear, and have been from the beginning, in our call for public hearings. I say that because I think it's important that people understand that we've not been having a lot of these public hearings over the last few months and years under this government. Public hearings seem to be anathema to anything that this government decides it wants and needs to do on behalf of the people of the province. Oftentimes, and we've seen it time and time again here, by not going to public hearings, we find ourselves in difficulty. The government jumps through hoops and does backflips to try and change legislation or regulation. It brings bills back here that, had they taken the time to do the public hearings in the first place, had they been willing to listen to the opposition as they made their cogent and intelligent arguments, had they been willing to go out to the people who usually are impacted most directly by the decisions of this government, and had they been willing to listen to amendments and suggestions for change that would have improved the bill, they would not have made the mistakes and created the difficulty and the further work that so often has been required.

I'm saying to them in this instance, please take the time; respect and recognize the very long, thought-out, proven and contributive process of this place to bring bills forward. Listen to the very reasoned, intelligent and researched arguments of the opposition. Be willing then, because of that, to take legislation out for substantial public hearing, not just as we did here a week or so ago. I was brought in from Sault Ste Marie to sit in committee and consider hearings around a budget bill that was substantial in nature and had many parts in it that would affect very directly each and every one of us in Ontario. At that time we had 30 minutes of input, according to the time allocation motion that was brought forward here, for all three parties to make representation on our behalf, on behalf of those who spoke to us on that very elaborate and extensive piece of public business, and then at 4 o'clock we were right into clause-by-clause consideration. Even that consideration was cut down, shut down, and the clauses then were simply rammed through with a raising of arms and simple votes. Then the bill came back here for third reading, where again there was absolutely no opportunity whatsoever for further debate, simply an up-and-down vote and it was all over.

We're hoping in this instance that the government will have considered the letters and phone calls they've gotten. We have letters on record here from groups as varied as the Ontario Provincial Synod, the Anglican Church of Canada; we've had overtures to us from at least half a dozen major faith groups in the province; and we've had letters that my colleague from Nickel Belt read into the record here this afternoon, just a small sampling of them, from organizations and communities across the province and from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which has some concern with this act and this piece of business.

I would think those are a wide enough cross-section, a variety of interests and concerns, and the government should be willing to pay attention and listen to us when we call on them to have public hearings. Some of the faith groups that attended meetings we had in order to understand more fully their concerns were the Roman Catholic Church, the Anglican Church, the Lutheran Church, the Jewish community, the Hindu and Islamic faith communities and the Baptist faith community, among others—and of course the United Church and the Presbyterian Church—which are very important communities across this province, particularly in areas of faith and the support of faith and faith expression by families and individuals across the province, particularly at times when ritual is central and of tremendous essence and where things like the passing away of individuals and family members is concerned. They have some very real concerns about this bill that I'm going to put on the record this afternoon, in the hope that the government will understand that they need to take the time that's necessary to really get their heads around what they're doing here, and if they can't, then to take this bill out for public consultation, to actually travel across the province with the bill, because they will have some time.

We don't need to ram this thing through before December 12, when it's targeted that we will rise for the holiday season. They have lots of time. It was the tradition in this place for many, many years that in the intercession we would take these very important pieces of public business that would call on us to change the way we do things, to change the way we oversee operations in this province, where we try very diligently to be proactive and progressive in the ordering of public business, and go out and listen to folks who can't make it to Queen's Park for all the reasons that's not possible. This piece of legislation affects not only some of the bigger corporate interests in the bereavement industry, but medium- and small-sized communities and industries that exist and the faith groups that operate there. As well, it affects some very small and rural interests outside Toronto in eastern and western Ontario and, of course, in the far-flung north of the province, where communities are very vital and viable and want to have some control over the management of bereavement services in their communities and want to be sure they're able to provide a first-class experience and support for their constituents, and to do that in a way that's not going to cost them an arm and a leg and that speaks of respect and dignity in the middle of all this.

It's a really important piece of business, and the meetings we had with people about this were really important as well. We took the time to hear and to listen. The groups themselves took the time to write letters and make presentations to the government on this bill. I think the government, in honouring them, in honouring the effort that has been made to shed some light on some of the issues here, should be willing to sit down by way of public hearings and listen to what is being said.

As I said at the outset, there are some things in here that make some sense. It is an evolution; it is a progression, a moving forward. But there are also some fundamental pieces of this legislation that cause some great concern to some very well meaning and honourable folks out there in the business community, in the faith community and in communities themselves who have some concern and want to be heard.

Moving on from there, what is it that we're about here? What is it that we're trying to do? What does this bill purport to change as it moves its way through the process here? Funeral services and cemeteries are currently regulated under separate acts: the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act and the Cemeteries Act respectively, two pieces of the business. The two acts have been in place for years. They currently prevent cemeteries from operating a funeral home. They keep those two levels of service apart, regulated by different arms of government and in different ways.

As well, funeral service operators are prohibited from locating funeral services on cemetery sites. It keeps them separate for very reasoned, thought-out and debated reasons. This isn't the first time we've had this kind of legislation before us. In fact my colleague from Nickel Belt, who has spoken here on a number of occasions this afternoon, tells me that back in 1988 when she was here, the then Liberal government was dealing with a bill of a similar nature. In 1990 when that bill, that piece of legislation, finally passed, it was decided to keep those two pieces of this business separate—I'll go into it in a few minutes—for very legitimate and important reasons. I'm not sure those legitimate and important reasons aren't so today, so we need to be looking at that. We need to be hearing from more people about this.

The government tells us that they have consensus, that they've consulted. We heard the member from Scarborough Centre tell us this afternoon about the very extensive and intensive consultation that went on before this bill was brought forward. I have to tell you that, as we've found over and over again with this government over the last eight years, they consult with the people they see as important, the people they think have important things to say about the ordering of public business in this province, the people who bring them to the dance: the big corporate interests and the larger industrial sectors of this province, who seem to have their ear more readily than others.

I would suggest that the consultation, however intensive and extensive, wasn't as all-encompassing as I think is needed and as we would like to see. So you'll see that the bill is leaning or shifting or tilting somewhat in a direction that presents to the faith communities, to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, to the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and to other groups across the province that have some very vested interests. Some community interests, some moral and ethical interests in this act don't quite see it in the same light as the government, and they want to be able to share those thoughts.

We're looking at two very distinct pieces of a very important practice and business in this province, and I say "business" in the broader sense of that. This bill tries to strike a balance, but we suggest it's a precarious balance, among the various constituents involved in the issue. When you start messing around with something that has been under a fairly stable regulation for quite a long time, there are bound to be some very sticky and difficult issues that we need to consider.

As we've said, there need to be considerable committee hearings and public consultations to find out if the legislation we have before us in fact accomplishes what they agreed to in the consultations, as the drafting happened. They can't just ram this one through and hope it works. As I said, that which is agreed to in the consultation, that which they ignored in the consultation, that which they didn't hear in the consultation, needs to be brought to bear here, not to speak of the fact that the government tells us once again not to worry, to be happy, that a lot of what's going to happen in this area is going to be in the regulations, is going to become more obvious and clear as they develop the regulations.

They suggest they're going to consult widely and broadly there. If the consultation they have done in preparing this bill is any indication as to the kind of consultation they're going to enter into after the bill is passed and they're considering the regulation, and if their track record here in terms of consultations—I was telling you a few minutes ago of the half-hour we had with regard to the budget bill—then we're very nervous, to say the least. We're anxious about that and we want to make sure the government understands that we need these public consultations.

The government has avoided some of the bumps in the road that we think are there—they obviously haven't identified them by way of their presentations here on this bill this afternoon—that I think we need to look at, by in fact saying that they're going to shift that over and deal with those bumps when they develop the regulation. There are so many details left to the regulations that most groups involved in the process are in fact reserving judgment; they're waiting. Where we've heard from a number of groups, and a number of their concerns have been put on the record here this afternoon, there are even further groups out there who haven't yet brought forward their concerns at all. They're waiting, in fact, to see what is put out there by way of the regulations. We're saying to them that they ought to be careful because, once the bill is passed, it's much simpler and easier to move the regulation through because you don't need to bring it back here. The government can just go ahead by order in council and make the changes and decisions they want.

Given this government's propensity for pandering to big business, it wouldn't surprise us if the regulations were heavily tilted in favour of the corporate chops. As a matter of fact, my colleague Mr Kormos for Niagara Centre, responding and speaking in a CP story about this bill just a few days ago, November 21, had this to say: "Permitting funeral home operators to be involved with the private commercial cemetery operators is an entry point for large corporate operations. In our view"—that's the New Democratic caucus view—"that may pose a significant threat to the future of the family-operated funeral homes" in the province. Any of us who represent communities, and we all do, know of the very important role that family-operated funeral homes have in communities where death and bereavement is concerned. The involvement of those establishments in the overall fabric of the community is not to be underestimated. If allowing the big corporate interest in this sense, as Mr Kormos has said, a foot in the door to begin to take over more and more of those family-run funeral homes is where we're going, then I have to tell you I'm very worried, particularly when I consider the work I've done in trying to regulate the franchise industry in this province over the last couple of years.

The resistance that I got from organizations representing the franchiser, mostly the big American corporate sector that has come into Ontario, up until I got my bill passed, and the very little regulation that is now in place—they saw Ontario as the Wild West of franchising. I suggest to you that we may be opening a Pandora's box here, where bereavement services are concerned, for yet further large, mostly American, corporations to come in and take over our funeral businesses as well. I don't think that's helpful.

I'm in direct, exact agreement with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. It's interesting, because the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is not a group that always supports New Democrats in this place and across the province. We have some very opposite views on a number of issues, one of them being the importance of and contribution that the labour movement makes to the quality of life and the level of safety and good workplaces that we enjoy in this province, the contributions that unions make there. But in the instance of my effort to regulate the franchising industry in this province, they were onside with me, saying that we need to protect the small mom-and-pop local businesses across this province because of the, in one sense, very negative impact of the bigger corporate sector coming in and taking over everything and the effect that has on local economies. When you begin to source almost everything from outside the community, even bring it from outside the country, you take away opportunity for local small business folks to operate, to contribute, to participate, to take advantage of the skill and the gift and the training they've invested in themselves. You lose that, and I don't think we're well served in that.

The same thing with the funeral industry: if we begin to put everything into one box here, and by doing that we create an opening for the large corporate sector to move in and take over if they want to—they don't need any help. I say as well to the government and to you, Speaker: these big corporate interests don't need our help; they're very well able to do all this on their own. What we need to do is look at this legislation that's before us today. We should be asking, in trying to move this industry into the 21st century and having it evolve to do some of the good things that are in this bill by way of setting standards and allowing consumer choice and making that easier for them, how we can do that while at the same time protecting the interests of the small business sector in our province. How can we do that while protecting the interests of the faith groups who have for so long, by virtue of their blood, sweat and tears, their volunteer hours, the little bit of resource they have had to invest in parts of this industry? How to we protect their interests and their investment and their future involvement in this business?

That's what we should be asking. That's where we should be focusing our attention more than trying to create opportunity by way of amalgamations and bringing together disparate activity out there that has worked relatively well over a long period of time, so that these big corporate interests can come in and begin to control more and more of this activity and push more and more of these folks out to the fringes so they no longer have any real say.

We are suggesting, for example, that the overseeing board, which will make decisions regarding this industry, has on it much more than simply representation from those large vested interests but some voice from the faith community, some voice from the independent, small, family-owned funeral services etc.

Having said that, what's in this bill? Well, this bill replaces two previous pieces of legislation—I've said this before, but I think it needs to be said again, so that people understand—the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act and the Cemeteries Act after a period of transition while the two sectors are combined. The bill integrates the already regulated sectors—funerals, transfer services and cemeteries—with casket and marker retailers, which are newly regulated under this act. We have no difficulty with bringing those sectors in, establishing standards and making sure they're all above-board and living and operating in a way that has utmost integrity involved; we have no difficulty with that. After a transition period, it establishes a single regulatory body for the whole sector, replacing the Board of Funeral Services and the oversight of the cemeteries branch of the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services.

The single act and regulatory system changes an age-old prohibition on cemeteries running funeral homes and funeral homes owning cemeteries. That in itself creates all kinds of questions and concerns in people's minds, and rightfully so. It sets out new consumer protection provisions including a prohibition against false advertising, strict disclosure requirements, strict pricing regulations that force retailers to adhere to price lists for services, contract and cancellation rights and a 30-day cooling-off period to cancel a contract. You know, that's in the instance of people making plans ahead of time for what will happen to them once they pass away. There would be a 30-day cooling-off period where a person could sit back and say, "Did I make the right decision? Was that the right thing to do?" They could come back and say, "Listen, I want to make some changes," or, "I don't want to do that." Or if something untoward has gone on in the meantime and it's been discovered, in fact, that can be—we have no difficulty with that. That's a piece of this bill we can support.

But as the member for St Catharines is so often wont to say in this House, everything this government brings forward that has good things in it that we could all support also has in it what he calls—what is it? Anyway, I call it a Trojan horse, where what looks on the outside rather harmless and maybe even helpful, once you open it up and let—"hostages" is what the member for St Catharines refers to that are in these bills. There are hostages in this bill that we really need to take a look at to make sure everybody understands what they are and how they work so that we can make them less threatening and less difficult to deal with.

It sets out trust requirements as well for money paid in advance, a care and maintenance fund for cemeteries and a new compensation fund for consumers who do not receive services paid for in advance. I think that's an important piece of business, but we have to make sure the government understands just how important it really is and how they need to be there to make sure these trust funds and monies that are paid in advance are in fact going to be adequate to the need; and that if they're not, it doesn't come back then on the consumer in their senior years when they have even less money than they have when they first made their investment in this part of their life; and then that it doesn't fall back on the shoulders of the family to carry. The government needs to be very serious about this and needs to understand that this is a very important part of this bill, not simply in the regulation that they bring in all of a sudden say, "We've changed our mind. This is something that maybe we don't need to be quite so clear on and concise about."

I'll tell you why I'm concerned: when we were government, we recognized that on a regular basis there were a number of workers in this province who lost their jobs because businesses went bankrupt or closed down. They were left, having worked a week, two weeks or sometimes longer, holding the bag with no pay for that work they'd already done and no way, because they couldn't afford lawyers and the legal process that would be required, to in fact make that happen for them. We as a government decided that we would institute the wage protection act in this place. Not only did we introduce the wage protection act, which would give workers an avenue, in partnership with government, to go after some of these bad bosses or bad companies that went bankrupt or simply left town to recover some of the wages owed; we also put in place a fund that would be there as a last resort so that these workers got at least some recognition of the fact that they did that work and they were owed money because of it. It's not dissimilar to the requirement that's being put in this act where money paid in advance, a care and maintenance fund for cemeteries and a new compensation fund for consumers who do not receive the services paid for in advance are in fact there.

This government, not long after it came into power in 1995, did away with that wage protection act and did away with the fund. I would want to warn people out there who think that this is a good act simply because this piece is in it, the consumers who may be looking at this or listening tonight who think that, "This is good. We can support that," yes you can, but the track record of this government is not to be as supportive of this once it gets down there and we begin to look at regulation and how it might play itself out. We have some very real and genuine concerns here that we need to be considering and looking at.

It also allows reductions in property taxes for cemeteries in instances where there are deficiencies in a non-commercial cemetery's care and maintenance fund. Cemetery owners must apply to the registrar to determine the owner's entitlement to a reduction or cancellation of taxes.

That brings us to the concern that has been raised by many of the faith groups around smaller cemeteries, oftentimes in back of churches, that find themselves not able, because of the economy that's cyclical out there in rural and northern Ontario, to maintain and take care of their non-commercial cemeteries. This allows for a reduction in property tax. Mind you, it goes back to the municipality itself having to carry the load.

What the faith community is concerned about, and I'll speak about it here in a couple of minutes, is that the new taxes and fees the government is considering because of this bill, without considering what's being looked after in this piece of the bill, will just put those groups under anyway. What they're saying to us is if the new fees and taxes that are being considered because of this new reorganization of this public business are too onerous, it will put a whole whack of well-meaning volunteer, not-for-profit, small church groups and faith groups out there across the province in real jeopardy of not being able to continue to support their cemeteries.

Having said that, it's our feeling that the impetus for making these changes came primarily from the cemeteries and crematoria in the province. The faith groups and the family-run funeral services organizations would have been just as happy to have had things stay the way they were.

Cemeteries are feeling the squeeze as cremation becomes much more popular, resulting in declining revenues. Ontario is one of the last jurisdictions where the separated system of cemeteries and funeral systems remains. Most other places in North America have gone to an integrated—

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): That's right. That's why we're changing it.

Mr Martin: Yes, I'm saying that. All I'm saying, John, is there are parts of this bill that we think are good, but we want to get out there and hear from the public because it will have implications—

Mr O'Toole: You want to delay it. That's what you want to do.

Mr Martin: No, not delaying. You call it delaying; we call it political process, we call it democracy, we call it listening to the folks out there who are going to be affected most directly. They probably talk to you. You're a good dogan, the same as I am. You've probably heard from the church groups. They're telling you they have some concerns and they want some opportunity to come—

Mr O'Toole: Tax cuts.

Mr Martin: Yes. They're afraid that the fees and the new taxes—you guys talk about tax cuts. In this instance, you're going to apply fees and taxes that weren't there before. It's a bit of a conundrum for everybody in Ontario to understand and recognize that in many instances where you guys pride yourselves on being tax cutters, in fact you're introducing new fees and taxes almost every other day in this place. You're going to do the same thing under this bill and that's where the faith groups have some real concern, that the taxes and fees you will introduce will be unsustainable for them. They're already having a hard time keeping their small cemeteries maintained and in good shape. You add fees and taxes on top of that and you're going to put them under. That's what they're saying to me, so we need to talk to them.

There are many groups with different positions on the legislation. Faith groups are in favour of parts of the legislation, as it provides them an opportunity to generate some revenue from funeral services. This will compensate for the decline in revenue from cemeteries, particularly in those areas where cemeteries are full or the demand is declining. They also need revenues for cemeteries that are abandoned to keep them up to date.

However, they're concerned that the new regulatory board will be stacked with for-profit funeral service representatives and that their traditions and practices may be ignored in favour of market considerations. Their concerns are warranted, if you look out there and see what's happened over the last eight years. Many faith traditions and practices have been challenged and in some instances throughout in the interests of equity, which I think is problematic.

Small churches are concerned that they will not be able to afford the new fees that they will be charged under the bill. They are also concerned about property taxes that they will have to pay under this new legislation. So we have some concerns there.

Independent funeral establishments have some concerns in that they are afraid this will simply be the crack that opens the door to their businesses being taken over. They are worried that they will be crowded out by big corporate funeral services establishments who will provide one-stop services.

We have rural funeral establishments. They are happy with the legislation, as it will allow them to get into cremation in cemeteries, thus providing them with more business and potential profit, as well as serving consumers better. But we understand how that might snag or enter into conflict in some way with the faith groups, who have some very legitimate concerns.

We also have concerns from consumers who say they need to be informed of their rights in this area, and should be informed. There should be a consumer education program that accompanies these rule changes. It helps no one to give them new rights under this legislation but then not tell anyone about them. Of course, if you're in business, you are more wont to share what's helpful to you as opposed to what's not, and to share with consumers what will be in your best interests as opposed to what's in their best interests. So where some changes are being made that will be helpful to consumers, as we've agreed here, we need to make sure there are provisions in place to make sure that communication happens and education happens and people understand. We need to talk about that as we move into public hearings and consultations about this bill.

Casket and marker retailers: it's pretty hard to argue that they shouldn't be regulated, but there's no clarity about the criteria in regulating these organizations and what they will be. The bill leaves that to the regulations, and we have concern about that.

Municipalities want the provisions forcing them to assume ownership and responsibility for abandoned cemeteries removed. This is a particularly big problem in the north and in remote rural areas, and comes with all sorts of long-term costs that they can't afford, particularly with downloading pressures already in place. So they want this removed. They want to talk about that. They want the government to understand what this means for them. Municipalities would also have preferred that the old regime remain in place.

So we have two groups now, the faith groups and the municipalities, who are saying to the government, "If this is what you're going to do, it would actually be better if you didn't do it at all. Just leave it the way it is, because there's too much in here that causes us concern and poses a threat."

In wrapping up, I want to speak very briefly to this so-called consensus that has been built around this bill and that has been presented by the members of the government this afternoon as a good thing.

"This legislation," in our view, "is based on discussion and consultation conducted by Justice Adams, which produced a document outlining the current course of action. While the government calls it a consensus, it most certainly was not.

"Many of the groups were unhappy with the results, but there are so many competing interests in the sector that it would be very difficult to produce a balance. The monument and casket retailers are unhappy, small independent funeral directors are unhappy, municipalities are unhappy, and some of the faith groups are unhappy." These are very important groups, and a goodly number of them.

"The government is definitely telling a story when they describe the current situation as a consensus. It is rather a situation in which they needed to move forward and have chosen to charge ahead despite the criticism."

So we are here today. I would guess that within a couple of days, the member for Nickel Belt and myself will be standing here talking about a time allocation motion where this piece of business is concerned, and public consultation or public hearings will be a very small part of that: maybe a day, maybe an hour; who knows? We're saying it needs to be much more substantial if you are actually going to hear from the people, understand their concerns, and do the right thing in this instance.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

The member for Sault Ste Marie has two minutes to respond. No?

It being almost 6 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 6:45.

The House adjourned at 1755.

The House met at 1845.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Orders of the day.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): Can I ask for unanimous consent that maybe we could take a three-minute pause?

The Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed? OK.

The House recessed from 1846 to 1848.

ELECTRICITY PRICING, CONSERVATION AND SUPPLY ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR L'ÉTABLISSEMENT DU PRIX DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ, LA CONSERVATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ ET L'APPROVISIONNEMENT EN ÉLECTRICITÉ

Mr Baird moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 210, An Act to amend various acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity / Projet de loi 210, Loi modifiant diverses lois en ce qui concerne l'établissement du prix de l'électricité, la conservation de l'électricité et l'approvisionnement en électricité et traitant d'autres questions liées à l'électricité.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): We will commence with debate. I'm looking to my right. The Chair recognizes the Minister of Energy from Nepean-Carleton.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): Thank you very much, Speaker. If you're looking to your right, that's me.

Applause.

Hon Mr Baird: I would like to thank my colleague from Scarborough.

I'd like to indicate at the beginning that I'll be sharing my time with the hard-working Minister of Finance, Janet Ecker.

I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to rise to speak to a very important piece of legislation—an important piece of legislation for working families in Ontario, for small business people in Ontario and for a lot of farm operators right around the province. We set out about six or seven years ago as a provincial government to address a really significant problem. In Ontario, our electricity system, the former Ontario Hydro, had run up about a $38-billion debt. It was the Titanic of utilities and an iceberg was in sight. We brought in a whole host of reforms to try to really turn that around. While other governments would have preferred to straddle the fence, we took some really definitive action.

I know the member for Windsor West was a big pro-competition Liberal and she must be disappointed with Dalton McGuinty's change.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: I just want to point out, particularly to my left, that I don't want to set a record today.

Hon Mr Baird: I want to welcome the member for Windsor West back. I haven't seen her for a while, but I'm pleased she's back and can participate in these debates. I look forward to her speech because we'll learn a lot when she speaks, as we always do. Sometimes it's things we don't really want to learn.

Anyway, we set about dealing with a $38-billion legacy from the former Ontario Hydro. People say, "$38 billion—put that into context for me." Let me do that for you. That's the equivalent of $10,000 for every family in the province, whether they're in Richmond, Woodstock, Cumberland, Petrolia, Halton Hills, Milton or Cambridge. That's a lot of money. It's $3,000 for every man, woman and child in the province. For the young child in Don Mills, in Windsor, in York West or in Vankleek Hill, when they're born today, that means they owe $3,000. That's not the kind of legacy we want to leave our children.

We realized the problem was not going to be fixed overnight. We rejected the notion to bring about change too quickly. We said we should take the time to get it right. So we undertook a whole host of reforms, including the Macdonald commission, including Bill 35, the select committee that was composed of members of this place back in the late 1990s, and we had a market design committee establish rules for the market opening and took the decision to open the market earlier this year.

What we saw in the first few months was quite encouraging. We saw electricity rates go from 4.3 cents to 3.1 cents in the month of May, and we saw electricity go from 4.3 cents to 3.8 cents in June. That was certainly assisted by the supply of a lot of water in the province. The hydroelectric facilities were able to run at really peak capacity. That was good news for a lot of families in Ingersoll and in Oxford county. It was good news for people in Burritt's Rapids and in Barrhaven and in Vernon. But what we saw in the summer months was really an incredible anomaly.

Perhaps I could welcome back the government House leader. The team, the member for Etobicoke Centre and the member for Windsor West, are now back, so don't adjust your TV set; you might be able to see them both.

I got a letter from—

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): From the House leader?

Hon Mr Baird: I say to the member from Toronto, it's not a letter from the House leader. I'd be pleased to read it.

It says, "Mr Speaker, please let Minister Stockwell back in the Legislature. He is truly sorry for how he acted today and promises he will try to control himself in the future. Sincerely, Mrs Stockwell."

That's from the government House leader's mother.

I had visions of grandeur, because I was calling myself the acting—I wasn't the deputy House leader this afternoon; I was the acting government House leader. But alas, when the clock struck 6, I'm now back acting as the deputy to my intellectual mentor and spiritual leader, Chris Stockwell.

I'm pleased as well that the Attorney General is here. The Attorney General and the member for Windsor West had a very colourful exchange.

Someone asked me, "What happened at Queen's Park this afternoon?" I said the Attorney General gave a strong answer and made a comment about another member—I know what that comment was. The member for Windsor West said something and we realized that Dalton McGuinty must be deaf because all the press gallery could hear what she was saying, but Dalton McGuinty couldn't hear it and he was sitting right next to her.

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): Read my lips.

Hon Mr Baird: Well, we'll watch your record; we won't read your lips. The last politician to say that was George Bush.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: What have you.

These two get into a big fight, she gets kicked out, and rather than the Attorney General getting kicked out, my poor friend Stockwell gets kicked out.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: He had it coming to him, though, if you ask me. Anyway, we're pleased to have the member for Windsor West and the government House leader back, forcefully representing their constituents.

I was talking about the debt at the former Ontario Hydro. I would be remiss if I didn't say what a great answer the Attorney General had in question period today. It was spirited and it was full of facts. There is nothing that bothers Liberals more than the facts, and the Attorney General was very forceful at presenting them today.

Anyway, we're talking about the old debt of Ontario Hydro: $10,000 per family, $3,000 for every man, woman and child in Ontario. We couldn't continue to pursue the course that Ontario had followed, so the overwhelming number of MPPs, both on the Liberal and Conservative sides, gave their thumbs up when we debated Bill 35 for the agreement in principle. That's where we decided whether we like the direction. The overwhelming number of MPPs—80% or 85%—agreed to support an open market and competition, saying that was the very best way to tackle the big problem, which was bringing new generation on-line in the province of Ontario. That bill was passed at second reading. It went out to committee. We had hearings right across the province. The Liberals voted for it on second reading, but they changed their mind on third reading. That's before they came in favour of it again, only to, on November 18, change their minds again—as long as you weren't reading fundraising letters, in which case they were still in favour of it—

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): As Liberals are prone to do.

Hon Mr Baird: "As Liberals are prone to do," the Attorney General said.

The market opened and prices went down in May and June. The price of electricity, though, with the hottest summer in almost 50 years, indeed went up and the system was stretched to the max. I think there were seven days where we had a record demand for electricity. The Premier saw a problem and he appointed me to be the Minister of Energy to replace Stockwell on August 22. That was a good first step, I think most people acknowledge, I say to my friend from Etobicoke Centre. No, I'm just kidding. He did a phenomenal job as the Minister of Energy, as he has done in all the cabinet positions he has been given.

The system was stretched to the max on seven different days in the summer. We realized a peak demand in the province of Ontario. I looked to the member for Nickel Belt. I offered her the opportunity to get a shorter speech from the Minister of Energy and she rejected it. For the entire 40 minutes, she'll enjoy every word of this speech because it's brought to you sponsored by the member for Nickel Belt.

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): Where is Hydrozilla when you need it?

Hon Mr Baird: Hydrozilla's not allowed in the chamber.

We had the hottest summer on record in 50 years, and right across the province families tried to escape the sweltering heat waves. They went inside and turned on the air conditioner, and on seven different days we realized record temperatures in the province of Ontario and record demands for electricity, as much as 25,900 megawatts of power.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: I'm looking forward to hearing the member for Etobicoke Centre speak later.

We had a huge increase in the demand for electricity, and that had an accompanying reaction to the cost. In September, once this system had run to the max and delivered, there were no brownouts or blackouts in the province of Ontario, thanks to the leadership of the former minister, Chris Stockwell. The system was stretched to the max, but it worked. I should pay credit to all the folks who made it work, whether they were the power producers, the workers at Ontario Power Generation, Bruce Power or any number of these small numbers of people right across the province of Ontario.

Ms Martel: The British government. Thank you for supporting British Power.

Hon Mr Baird: Tony Blair is a very good Conservative, I say to the member for Nickel Belt.

In September, after the system had been strained to the max, some of the plants had to come off-line for maintenance and we saw the price even go up more, which was a real concern. When the people of Ontario began to get billed, they were tremendously concerned. They were concerned for two principal reasons: about how they'd pay for the high bill on their kitchen table and they were concerned for their future and their family's future and for electricity. Ernie Eves was concerned, our cabinet, our caucus and our entire team, in fact all members of this Legislature, were concerned. Philip De Souza was concerned about this, I'm sure.

We set about to look at what type of relief we could provide. The first area we used was built right into this system long before the market opened, the market power mitigation agreement that was there to provide some protection for consumers from the market power of the former Ontario Hydro, now Ontario Power Generation. We looked to that fund that was building up across the street on University Avenue and to how we would provide some relief to consumers.

Providing relief retroactive to May 1 was only part of the concern. I mentioned there were two fundamental concerns: one was the high hydro bill on the kitchen table, and the second was their concern and fear for the future. We set about looking at a mechanism where we could provide some relief to consumers retroactive to May 1. On November 11, Ernie Eves presented a really comprehensive plan to try to deal with some of these bumps along the road. He committed that we would go back and rebate the difference between 4.3 cents and what was paid.

We also came forward with a plan to help ease into this open, competitive market that would provide a price cap, not to generators but rather to the price that consumers pay, of 4.3 cents. That will provide some certainty and will allow us the opportunity to do a number of things.

One is to bring new generation on-line. We hope in Ontario to have some 3,200 megawatts of new power on-line this coming year that we didn't have on-line last summer. That would include 800 megawatts at the Bruce B facility, which was not operational for most of, if not all of, last summer. It would include two reactors at Bruce A, adding up to an accumulative amount of about 1,500 megawatts. We hope to get reactor 4 of Pickering

A on-line, in addition to 400 megawatts at the TransAlta facility outside Sarnia. So this is good news.

We also see a lot of investment in hydroelectric power. That's good for a number of reasons: (1) we need the power; (2) it helps the market; (3) it's good for the environment, it's non-emission. We see across Ontario about $200 million of investments in hydroelectric power, including, for example, in Ottawa. There are a number of plants that have not operated at full capacity. Hydro Ottawa is making some investments to go from 15 to 27 megawatts on the Ottawa River. That's good news because it's all non-emission, green power that's needed by families and the growing Ontario economy. We've seen about $200 million in investments right around the province.

We've also seen something that's quite exciting. On Friday, in Bruce county we'll open the first commercial wind farm in the province of Ontario, a company called Huron Wind. I think there are five windmills that have been constructed and will begin to generate electricity. This is a very exciting opportunity. We've seen a number of windmills in Ontario to date, but this is the first commercial wind farm. We hope it's the first of many in the province.

So we're providing relief to customers dating back to May 1 and providing some certainty over the next 40 to 41 months. That's what Bill 210 does, and that's good news.

This plan will pay for itself in a number of ways. We'll be able to pay into the fund in those months when electricity is less than 4.3 cents. For example, I mentioned May and June. In fact the day before the announcement was made, electricity went to 2.8 cents. So on those days where it's below 4.3 cents we'll pay into this consumer fund, and on those days where it's more expensive, we'll draw from it. But that's not enough.

We'll have the funding stream from the market power mitigation agreement, which today has approximately $700 million. Rather than it sitting across the street on University Avenue at the old Ontario Hydro building, we'll be able to put that to work for consumers in Ontario, and that's good news.

In addition, over the next 41 months we'll probably have a more stable weather forecast, which will be productive. We'll also have, as I mentioned, about 3,200 megawatts as early as next year of new power on-line. That's just a start, because in 2004 we should have additional power coming on from Pickering A, we should have the Brighton Beach facility up and running in Windsor, which will be good news for southwestern Ontario's power needs. We'll also have a number of other investments that will come on-line.

More supply will definitely have an effect on price, and that's good news because when we have more supply, we'll have winners and losers as people bid into the market. When we saw record demands for electricity in Ontario this past summer, we needed every single electron we could get our hands on. So that will be important.

As well, perhaps we'll move on from a difficult 18 months in the energy sector. Whether it's through Enron or other firms south of the border and in the North American market, we've seen approximately 50,000 megawatts of electricity either cancelled or put on hold. That's had a huge effect on the investment climate right across North America and particularly in Ontario, and that will be helpful.

We look forward to coming forward with some additional announcements in the coming months.

The government, as part of our action plan, will like to see the third tunnel at the Sir Adam Beck facility come on-line. That would achieve much greater efficiency at Beck 1 and 2 and help produce about 1.5 additional terawatt hours a year, which will be good news for the province. That's all non-emission, which is good.

Second, we'd like to see the port lands facility, the old Hearn generating station in downtown, brought on-line. The facility proposed would be a natural gas facility, and we'd like to see what opportunities there are for public-private partnerships for these two projects.

We're working very hard—the folks at Ontario Power Generation. People like Ron Osborne and Bill Farlinger and their team are working hard on that initiative because that electricity is needed, not just for supply but in terms of the downtown Toronto facility to help keep downtown Toronto the heart of business in the country. So that's good news.

Some people have talked about the financing of this issue, and I look to a number of sources. I look to Standard and Poor's Rating Services. They had a bulletin on November 13, and the headline was, "Announced Provincial Electricity Rate Cap Will Have No Material Impact on Ontario's Financial Performance." Good news. The Dominion Bond Rating Service in a news release on November 14 said, "Dominion Bond Rating Service expects the net impact of this initiative on the province's fiscal balance to be manageable." More good news. On November 13, in a news release Standard and Poor's said, "Standard and Poor's Rating Services today said that the Ontario government's proposed legislation to freeze electricity rates to consumers for the next four years does not affect the credit rating of the province." That was good news because paying for it is important.

One person who, when we made the announcement, was not convinced, said that it couldn't pay for itself, it wouldn't work and it would lead to increased debt, which is a bad thing—does anyone know who that was? I say to the member for Nickel Belt, who didn't agree with this plan on November 11 and November 12? Does she know?

Ms Martel: I didn't, but I still don't.

Hon Mr Baird: But who did?

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: Dalton McGuinty said the province would have to borrow hundreds of millions of dollars. That was wrong. He would have no part of it and he was against it.

Mrs Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): Say it ain't so.

Hon Mr Baird: That was on November 11. This is the same guy who voted for Bill 35 on second reading, against Bill 35 on third reading. He's against it in Ottawa, for it in Toronto.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: I'll tell you, Claudette Boyer has always been very consistent on this. She's here today and she has always been very consistent. She was too good for Dalton McGuinty's Liberal Party, and I'm glad she's here today.

Hon Mr Baird: She is. We would love to see Claudette Boyer back in the Legislature after the next election campaign.

The plan—we have a number of bond-rating service agencies, respected individuals, who say it's manageable, say it doesn't affect the credit rating of the province, say it's not a bad plan. The one person we couldn't convince—or the two people: Howard Hampton, who has always had the same position, and Dalton McGuinty, who doesn't agree with it. I call Dalton McGuinty a Howard-come-lately on this issue because he is adopting the plan of both John Baird and Howard Hampton at various times. Of course, Howard Hampton has always been consistently against this issue. We provided some really meaningful relief to consumers, which we think is incredibly important in the province of Ontario. Before I go on, I'd like to talk about some other things.

One of the real concerns we had wasn't just the plight of working families, and they're concerned about their electricity bills, but it was the effect on small business in the province. We know that small business is big business and it's tremendously important. Here's what Judith Andrew, vice-president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which represents small and medium enterprises, had to say about our legislation in a letter dated November 12:

"I write to acknowledge your government's positive action plan to deal with soaring electricity rates and other electricity charges affecting small and medium-sized enterprises since market opening."

That was one of the primary motivations of the legislation, to provide relief to small business, because in Ontario, where we are the capital of job creation, we know that small business plays an important role.

We also know that it's important for farm operators. If you have a dairy operation in North Gower, if you have a dairy operation outside of Vernon or in Richmond or south Nepean, you use a lot of electricity—in Petrolia, in Halton, in Milton, in Lambton county, a lot of dairy operations there. And there are a lot of farmers who are concerned about the viability of their operations. We looked at that and that was one of the reasons that we came forward with this plan. You can see the reaction the plan has got.

On November 11, when I looked at the newscasts, on CBC they talked to a deli owner in Oakville and he said, "This is going to help a lot. I think it's great what they did." He's a job creator. A coffee shop owner in Toronto said on Global Television that evening, "This is going to help us. I think it's going to help me a lot." On CITY-TV, on November 11, a restaurant owner said, "Hopefully we'll go down on the average rate, like last year. Then I'm very happy about it, good news." An owner of another restaurant, in St Catharines, was quoted in the St Catharines Standard, "I am ecstatic. It's unbelievable; it's light at the end of the tunnel for sure."

We're pleased that we took some really significant action to provide support for folks on pricing. I know within my own constituency there are a lot of farm operators, a lot of small business people and a lot of families in Manordale, in Linwood village, in Fallowfield, in Manotick, in Stittsville who were tremendously concerned about this issue, and we will be able to provide that relief.

I attended some Remembrance Day services over the weekend on the November 11 in Vernon, at the Legion there, the Osgoode Legion puts one on there, and they put one on in Kenmore and in Osgoode village. I attended those Remembrance Day services, as I did in Nepean and in Manotick on the morning of November 11, and I went to the airport to fly back for the announcement.

Does anyone want to know who I met at the Ottawa airport? I met my friend, Dalton McGuinty. He was flying back to Toronto to presumably comment on it and I said to my friend, Dalton, "I hope you're coming to support one of your colleagues from a neighbouring riding in his announcement." And he smiled and almost laughed, meaning Dalton wasn't going to support me, wasn't going to support the plan. I said, "All I ask is that you read it and consider it. You don't have to come out right up to the gate in the first five minutes. Would you consider our plan to help small business and working families and farmers in Ontario?"

Well, he came out against it like you wouldn't believe. He didn't support it. He thought it was wrong, he thought it was crazy and he would have none of it. He actually criticized this party for changing his mind. On November 18, the Ontario Liberal fund sent out a letter to business people in Toronto, presumably in the energy sector. What are they saying? This letter, on Ontario Liberal fund letterhead, says:

"We've seen flip-flops, knee-jerk solutions and apparent disregard for the grim consequences their actions will have on our economy. Higher taxes are predicted to cover the $800-million shortfall in energy costs. Someone has to pay for this blatant election promise."

But then Dalton McGuinty came and said he supports our plan. So presumably, in his financial plan for the next election, they will have $800 million to pay for this in their financial numbers, and I know all the members will want to be watching that. So he said it was a flip-flop and a knee-jerk reaction and was not giving regard for the consequences on our economy.

But then the author, the chair of the Ontario Liberal fund, said, "With Dalton McGuinty's Liberals, we'll get the plan Ontario needs and"—this is the part I like—"the leadership to stick to the plan." People say, "Was this dated two years ago?" No, it was dated on November 18, but on November 18, Dalton McGuinty went out and said he would keep the plan: he would keep the Ernie Eves plan to lower electricity for working families and small business people in the province of Ontario.

Now, earlier that day they had said they would have the courage to stick to his plan. They would have the courage to stick to his plan, is what the Ontario Liberal fund letter said, but then they changed their minds for the fifth time. We all work hard, and we get to know people. I felt badly for Dalton McGuinty on that day in his scrum. One journalist told me it was the worst scrum of his life. It was bad. And I thought, "Well, you know what? We'll see Dalton tomorrow, and we'll see what type of questions he asks in the House."

But he didn't show up the next day, or the next day, or the next day, or the next day, or the next day. The only way we got Dalton McGuinty back in this Legislature was Peter Kormos had to stand up and shame him into coming back to this Legislature; put in the bill that would fine Dalton McGuinty for not showing up. Within five minutes of Peter Kormos sitting down from presenting that NDP bill, guess who showed up. Dalton McGuinty. So thank goodness we have Peter Kormos pointing out Dalton McGuinty's shortcoming. I am pleased that I have Dalton McGuinty's support, that Ernie Eves has his support on this issue; if you can't lead, follow, and get out of the way. That's exactly what Dalton McGuinty has done, which is good news.

I'm also excited about the plan, because it recognizes two other important public policy initiatives. It recognizes we have to have more supply, and it recognizes we have to have more conservation. On the supply side, we believe, as a government, we can do more on the green, clean and alternative fuel.

I know all members, particularly the member for St Catharines, were pleased to see Steve Gilchrist appointed as the alternative fuels commissioner. The member for St Catharines says he's delighted. I know he became quite good friends with the member for Scarborough East on the select committee on alternative fuels.

Steve Gilchrist will become the first alternative fuels commissioner in Ontario, and we've already seen the benefits. That happened on a Monday, and on Tuesday there were some really comprehensive initiatives announced to promote green energy, clean energy and alternative fuels. We announced those in Niagara Falls. I was pleased that the member for St Catharines could come and participate in the announcement, perhaps not in the best way that I might have anticipated his participation. But we were glad—

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): You didn't invite me.

Hon Mr Baird: He wasn't invited, but he knows he's always welcome, and he showed up, and we were pleased to see him. Every time that I go to Niagara region, the member for St Catharines welcomes me, personally, which we appreciate.

But what do these measures do to try to encourage new supply in electricity? Let me go over them: provide a comprehensive tax holiday to help create more electricity from cleaner alternative and renewable fuel sources, including natural gas, hydroelectric, solar and wind power. In the legislation we'd even gone further, and talked about biomass, which is important. We want to allow the Beck tunnel project at Niagara Falls to expand and to proceed, and the proposed tax reductions would help support this important project—

Mr Bradley: You were denouncing it last month.

Hon Mr Baird: I know. We were denouncing it the month before, because it wasn't viable. We needed these tax measures, and thank goodness Janet Ecker, our Minister of Finance, was there with the tax relief to make this project work. It couldn't be done, but it could be done with Janet Ecker's support, and the Ministry of Finance is changing them, so thank goodness for that.

And I should acknowledge the hard work of the member for Niagara Falls, who has been a tiger on this issue. He has been a fierce proponent of this project, not just for the environmental benefits but for the huge economic impact it will have on not just Niagara Falls but, indeed, Niagara region. So we're excited about that project and the opportunity for some private sector involvement in it. We want to conduct a study of the Beck 3 generating project at Niagara Falls, and get an independent review: is it feasible to accomplish? Many people believe it is; others have had more caution. We should address this in a really fundamental way, and that independent study on feasibility we hope will be able to do that.

We want to introduce measures to provide property tax relief to newly created assets that generate alternative electricity. The Ontario water power industry has already benefited from that; we've seen $200 million in investment, so it's been quite positive.

We want to direct OPG to accelerate its assessment of the new 500-megawatt generating project on Toronto's port lands, at the site of the old Hearn generating station. This is important for a number of reasons, particularly because the transmission capacity in downtown Toronto is in need of additional strength. This would be positive for that, and this legislation helps make that a reality.

It would allow a 100% corporate tax write-off for the cost of assets used to generate electricity from alternative and renewable sources. It would bring forward capital tax exemption for assets used to generate electricity from renewable sources. It would provide a sales tax rebate for building materials used to construct alternative energy facilities. It would create a corporate and income tax holiday for revenues derived from the sale of new supply of electricity generated from alternative sources.

It would introduce a requirement for net metering and connection arrangements between distributors, self-generators and small-scale distributed generation to help remove barriers to self-generation and small-scale generation using renewable energy technology.

The member for Scarborough Centre has an exciting project she's aware of that she's been telling me about: how a farm operator could put a windmill on their property and generate electricity. This announcement directly supports that kind of initiative, because the problem with wind is that you don't get it all the time. If there's an excess capacity of wind, they could put electricity on to the grid and use it themselves when their needs suggest. That would make it more economically feasible for a small business person to do.

We also want to raise the threshold for environmental approvals exemptions for clean generation. It was a hodgepodge and a bunch of environmental red tape where some required more extensive generation than others.

It also established a centre of excellence for electricity jointly at Hamilton's McMaster University and the University of Waterloo. This is something that David McFadden and the Stakeholder Alliance for Competition said was incredibly important if we were to have more research into electricity. I know some people, namely someone named Will Stewart, wanted that to be at Laurier, but the University of Waterloo got it in the Kitchener-Waterloo area.

Those were some good measures to promote green energy.

A lot of this flows out of the work of the alternative fuels select committee. Doug Galt, the chair of that, who has since gone on to bigger and better things, is here. The members of that committee, from all parties, deserve a big pat on the back because they've certainly put these issues, as has Commissioner Gilchrist, on to the agenda here at Queen's Park. We hope these announcements are the first of many in the coming years.

We also made some important announcements with respect to conservation. In Oakville, the next day, on November 13, we announced some initiatives which I'd like to go over. We want to get the government to reduce electricity in its own operations by 10%, which is leadership by example. We want also to make a commitment that the government will purchase 20% of its electricity from renewable sources. We want to commit to the goal of ensuring that every newly constructed government and other institutional building is energy self-sufficient, using alternative or clean sources of energy.

We want to establish a centre of excellence of alternative energy jointly at Queen's University and at the University of Toronto. Queen's University is of course an important institution in the province, where there's a lot of excellence and research takes place. That's good news, not just for Queen's but for eastern Ontario.

The Minister of Energy will also launch a public awareness campaign. People had spoken to us during the consultations we all take on as MPPs about the "Conserve it, preserve it" campaign that ran many years ago. Perhaps we could see something similar to that.

We want to support measures that allow residential and small commercial customers to take initiatives to conserve energy and achieve more efficient use of the energy supply. We want to encourage large consumers to take advantage of electricity cost savings, such as retrofitting commercial buildings. We want to encourage the conservation of our valuable resources. The government proposes to enhance the corporate income tax treatment of expenditures made by businesses to conserve energy.

We want to propose allowing individuals to claim to get some tax relief with respect to solar energy, and we're following through in this legislation on the PST. I look Rosalyn Lawrence, who's here today, who's one of the people who does a great job at the Ministry of Energy.

We believe that every new home should have the opportunity to take advantage of interval meters; that's something important. If people, perhaps a retired couple in Richmond or in Munster hamlet, could see that the cost of electricity is 8 cents and perhaps not turn on the dishwasher and get a benefit for that, rather than just going into the collective pot, that would have a lot of benefits to conservation, which is also good for the environment.

We'd like to propose that the Ontario Energy Board be given an additional mandate to ensure local electricity distributors reward and encourage consumers who preserve power.

We plan to support the marketing of green power by creating an electronic information system so that people have a better sense of it.

We've proposed that the threshold for the environmental assessment exemption for clean generation be raised to 100 megawatts, and we will be directing the Red Tape Commission to work with the relevant ministries to help reduce red tape in this area. This is where Steve Gilchrist, our alternative energy commissioner, will be able to provide a lot of assistance. I look at the member for Oxford and he certainly agrees with that.

We have proposed to work toward using wind power to provide electricity in First Nations fly-in communities, where they have to fly in diesel power, which is tremendously expensive. If we could work with the federal government, as we have very successfully in a number of areas with First Nations, to make that a reality, that would be good. That's something which we think will be positive in the province of Ontario.

With these initiatives on electricity price and on generation and on supply and on conservation, we think this package collectively will be very good for the province of Ontario, for working families, for the economy. The answer to the concerns that a lot of families and a lot of small businesses had in calling and talking to their MPPs is that the message has been heard, and this action plan goes a long way to helping make it so successful.

I would be remiss in not recognizing all of the hard-working and fantastic people at the Ministry of Energy and the Ministry of Finance, in the Cabinet Office, in the Premier's office and the stakeholders who helped with the plan and the legislation. A lot of people worked tremendously hard and we wouldn't have been able to arrive at such a successful initiative without that. I would like to, without naming them all, underline their hard work and their efforts in this regard. Their work has made a huge difference. A lot of people are able to sleep more easily at night, given that this problem is being addressed in such a substantial way.

I'd like to thank you for the opportunity to participate in this debate. Marcel Beaubien particularly was concerned, in Lambton county and Petrolia, about this, and I'd like to underline that, as was my colleague Ernie Hardeman in Oxford county.

With that, I'll put my comments to rest. I look forward to hearing from my hard-working colleague the Minister of Finance, the member for Pickering-Ajax-Uxbridge.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): It is, I suspect, a bit of a dubious honour to have to speak in the Legislature tonight after my colleague the Minister of Energy has entertained us so well, has spoken so articulately about our comprehensive strategy to try and assist consumers, assist business to deal with the hydro prices, the electricity prices they were confronted with earlier this year.

I must say that the Minister of Energy has distinguished himself. He has not been in the portfolio all that long, but the day after he was sworn in as a minister, the Friday morning, he was out on site in my riding visiting the Pickering nuclear plant. He was going through there—this is a minister who takes a hands-on approach—to see what could be done about getting that plant back on track, back into producing the energy it can produce to make sure it can be part of a plan to give consumers the kind of energy guarantees, energy security, that they and the business community need in this province.

I hope the honourable members across the way, our colleagues on the opposition benches, after many, many weeks of standing up and saying there was a problem and that the government needed to act, that consumers needed protection—after many, many weeks of that, I am sure they will be moved by their concern for small business, their concern for consumers, to support the legislation we're bringing forward here in the House this evening. We think this bill, if passed, is going to be very helpful in implementing the very comprehensive strategy that Premier Eves and my colleague the Minister of Energy announced some days ago to lower hydro bills for consumers and businesses across the province.

It would have been very easy for the Premier not to take steps. It would have been much simpler to stand up and say, "No, everything will be fine." But no, this particular Premier took the time, did the due diligence, worked around the clock with staff, the energy and the finance folks, to try and come up with a strategy that would do a couple of very important things. Those objectives you can see in the Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act.

Hon Mrs Ecker: The honourable member across the way, the member for Don Valley East, seems to think that taking steps to protect consumers is somehow a laughing matter. That just goes to show where the Liberal Party is coming from on this. As my colleague the Minister of Energy showed so clearly, it's a little hard to distinguish exactly where the Liberal Party is coming from on this issue. On the one hand they like to criticize us for having an open marketplace, trying to do what other jurisdictions have done, to have a competitive marketplace, to have consumers and businesses with an electricity supply—they like to criticize us for the steps we took to do that—and then they like to go out and say to the business community, "Give us money, because we believe business is terrific. Give us money and we will work with you to provide a stable environment." This from the party that is also saying to business, "We want to help you be prosperous, and do you know how we're going to do that?" They're going to not give business any tax breaks. They're going to cancel tax breaks. They're going to increase taxes, and that is their plan for helping small business, for helping consumers, families, for helping our business community to succeed. On this side of the House, not only do we recognize the importance of competitive taxes, we have the track record that shows that bringing down taxes for individuals, for families, actually works in this province.

The legislation is very clear about the objectives we're setting out: to encourage investment in alternative or renewable sources of electricity generation. We think that's very important. Again, we hear our colleagues across the way—both parties having spent some time in government—saying they're very much in favour of alternative energy, green energy etc. But, you know, they didn't do much about it. They talked about it, they said they believed in it, but not much happened. This legislation is actually putting in place a plan which will help make that happen, encouraging investment in alternative or renewable sources of electricity generation.

Encouraging energy conservation: again extremely important, because we want to make sure that all of us are taking steps. The Minister of Energy outlined some of the things we in government are prepared to do to reduce our energy demands. Most consumers, when I talk to people in my riding, also say that they turn down the thermostat, take steps to try to conserve energy. They want to do that, and I think the government should support that, both for the business community and for individuals. So this strategy laid out in the legislation will encourage energy conservation as well.

The measures included in the bill are going to provide a variety of tax incentives, because we know that using our tax system to reward hard work, to reward people who want to invest, take the risk of investing, put their capital into a venture, to take a small business and try and make it grow so they can employ more people in a community—we understand how using the tax system can encourage that, can support that. This legislation will have a variety of tax incentives, including property, business, income, capital and retail sales tax incentives, in support of these objectives.

This is also in keeping with our tax record, which shows that the economic activity generated by tax cuts results in strong economic growth. We have over a million net new jobs in this province, and the majority of those are full-time jobs. That is because here in Ontario, through competitive taxes, balanced budgets, making decisions to remove barriers for the growth of jobs and prosperity in this province, we are seeing growth record in Ontario. We're setting records among the provinces in this country and our competing jurisdictions, beating out many of the OECD countries, in terms of our growth and job creation.

One of the key reasons for that is because we have a competitive tax structure that's going to get even more competitive with the legislation before the House this month, with part of the budget initiatives in June. Let me talk about some of the changes that are going to be in that legislation to help with competitive taxes here in Ontario.

More low-income individuals, another 50,000 low-income individuals, are not going to have to pay any Ontario income tax at all. When you are a modest-income Ontarian, the last thing you need is the government's hand in your pocket. So another 50,000 are going to join the over 700,000 modest-income Ontarians who do not have to pay any Ontario income tax. They still have to pay federal income tax, but we had another 50,000 in this budget.

We brought down the tax rate on small business. The greatest job generator in this province is our small business community. One of the ways we help them to do that is to bring down the small business tax rate. So the budget did that as well.

We reduced the mining tax rate as well. This afternoon, I was with my colleague the Minister of Northern Development and Mines, who was talking about how competitive and successful our mining sector is starting to be with the favourable tax structure they have.

We're bringing down the retail sales tax on the rates for automobile insurance premiums and repairs and replacements made under warranty—another important support for consumers, to cut the RST on automobile insurance premiums.

Interjection.

Hon Mrs Ecker: The honourable member for St Catharines makes a comment about auto insurance rates. Perhaps he would enjoy supporting the proposals we have before this House that are working to help protect consumers of auto insurance. That is another important initiative of this government, to protect consumers not only in the auto insurance area but also to protect consumers who are investors, holders of mutual funds and investors in our securities sector; other legislative proposals before the House will do that. And of course, to come back to the subject of this debate, there is protection for consumers in the Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act, 2002, that we are talking about today.

We're keeping with our tax record in this bill, and an increased supply of affordable electricity will support continuing growth in the economy. That's what this government believes in: growth, prosperity and more jobs. It is important for that growth and prosperity to occur because that's what generates the investment income we can have for schools, hospitals and the environment. It has to be done together; you can't do one without the other. I know the Liberals across the way some days have difficulty understanding that close relationship that we on this side of the House appreciate, that the way to have continued growth, new investments for schools, hospitals and the environment, is to continue to have growth in the economy and in the revenues that come from that to pay for priority areas in Ontario.

The overall supply of electricity will also help to stabilize prices for the benefit of all Ontarians. We have a twofold aim: to bring additional supply on stream as rapidly as possible, and to increase reserve levels from current levels to ensure that there is sufficient supply to meet forecast demand at all times, so if we have the kind of heat wave we had earlier this year, we can ensure that consumers can be comfortable with the fact that there will be supply there.

A comprehensive tax package is one component of our action plan to increase the electricity supply. We are proposing to support the creation of additional electricity from cleaner energy technologies, including natural gas, hydroelectric, solar and wind power, and to promote conservation, as I said. Again, I would be remiss if I did not recognize that in my riding, in Pickering, we have a new windmill, a new model that is there to try out new technology in windmills. The Pickering nuclear plant, sponsored by OPG, has that project. It's actually becoming quite a local landmark. People remark on it. People are rather proud, I would say, of the fact that we have a new windmill trying out new alternative energy technology right there in the beautiful city of Pickering in my riding.

The proposed tax measures that are in this legislation support increased electricity supply and green power. We do that through a couple of initiatives. There is to be a 10-year business income tax holiday for income from sales of new supplies of electricity, so a way to encourage that. There's a 100% income tax write-off and a capital tax exemption for the assets that are used to generate new electricity from alternative or renewable sources, including natural gas. And should this legislation pass, we'll be introducing regulations to provide clearer direction to define the assets qualifying for the write-off and the capital tax exemption.

We also propose to allow corporations, businesses here in Ontario, the flexibility to decide when they can start claiming that corporate income tax holiday, an important measure for business, provided they begin generating electricity from alternative or renewable sources by the end of 2007. We've taken great care in terms of setting the calendar years that these tax holidays are available through to make sure that we are doing what we can to encourage that investment, to encourage businesses to make the investments to have further supply.

There will be a sales tax rebate for eligible businesses for building materials used to construct alternative or renewable electricity generation facilities and also the materials used to construct deep-lake water cooling systems, another important project that we're seeing here in Ontario that again helps to reduce the demand for energy and is better for the environment.

There will be a 10-year property tax holiday for new facilities that generate electricity from alternative or renewable sources by the end of 2007; again, another initiative that will help make some of the potential projects that we're seeing in Ontario more viable and help bring more of them on stream.

Aside from creating alternative or renewable fuel sources, as part of the comprehensive strategy we have the action plan to promote conservation. The primary intention of the conservation measures in the legislation is to reduce electricity use by businesses and individuals. So we are introducing the following tax measures to help make that happen.

There will be an immediate 100% income tax write-off for those businesses for investments in qualifying energy-efficient equipment. The write-off would be available for those businesses that purchase eligible assets after November 25 and before January 1, 2008; before the end of 2007.

Consumers are also very much a part of this. Consumers have, through this legislation, the knowledge that with the 4.3 cents that they are paying for energy, they have some ability to plan, to know that will be the price that is set until the end of this transition period, until 2006. We're also offering a tax rebate for consumers who purchase new energy-efficient household appliances after November 25 of this year and running for a year, to November 26, 2003, to encourage consumers to purchase those major appliances which have an Energy Star rating. There is a process through the federal government—it's something, actually, that is done here in North America—where they set an energy efficiency rating for major appliances. We would like to encourage and support consumers who take the time to do the shopping well, to comparison shop, to make intelligent choices on behalf of the environment.

So the appliances that would be included in this are: refrigerators, clothes washers, dishwashers—the most energy-efficient appliances available.

We're also going to have a five-year retail sales tax rebate for qualifying solar energy systems, which promote clean energy use and are installed in residential premises. There are consumers who have done this or are contemplating doing this. It is another way to use alternative energy. We want to make sure that through our tax structure we are supporting that as well.

All of those are important initiatives. As I said, we believe that tax initiatives are very much one of the things that help promote growth and prosperity in the province. The record is clear that with those kinds of steps on competitive taxes, whether we're talking energy, whether we're talking personal income tax, whether we're talking our small business community, for example, we are seeing the facts, the data that show that this strategy is working, both in terms of our job growth—as I said, we've created more than one million net new jobs in this province since we delivered our first throne speech in 1995. The majority of those are full-time jobs. They're good jobs. They're important jobs. They're helping families to succeed in this province, helping young people get a good start, helping individuals and families get off social assistance. That's a very important statistic. That's the equivalent of almost 400 new jobs a day. Just imagine, 400 new jobs a day created in this province.

Those one million net new jobs account for more than 45% of the total job growth in Canada since 1995. Some 45% of the total job growth in this country has been here in this province. In fact, the job growth in Ontario was more than double the job growth seen in the United States during that same time period. I know the opposition and the member for St Catharines and his colleagues like to say, "Oh, pooh-pooh," that the economic growth in Ontario is only because we're on the coattails of American growth. Well, if that were the case, we would not have the kind of job growth in Ontario that was more than double the job growth seen in the United States during that same time period. We're not on anybody's coattails; we're leading in that job growth. If we continue to have the right economic fundamentals in place, we will continue to do that. That is what families would like us to do here in this province.

I understand that the members across the way from the Liberal Party who are heckling me here this evening—obviously some of them have just come in from dinner. We can understand their discomfort. We can understand their discomfort when their leader, who we know is a very nice guy, is not up to the job of making those difficult decisions, of making the tough choices that help to keep our province prosperous.

The Liberal leader says, "I am in favour of privatization." This is the same opposition leader who stands up and criticizes steps we have taken to make our electricity sector more competitive. Then he stands up and says, "I am in favour of privatization." Do you know what? Actually one of the great things is to have been able to see that the NDP leader, Howard Hampton, is putting out press releases making sure that the Dalton McGuinty record, the Dalton McGuinty flip-flops, are clearly there for taxpayers to see. Yet at the same time that he's sitting here talking about how we need to go out with privatization, he criticizes the government for taking those same steps that will help lead to a more competitive marketplace. That's what that kind of inconsistency, that kind of knee-jerk policy positioning is clearly showing.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Windsor-St Clair.

Hon Mrs Ecker: The leadership of Premier Eves on this side of the House, the leadership of this government, is what will help make sure this province remains prosperous in the future.

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell on a point of order.

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): J'aimerais souhaiter la bienvenue à André et Micheline Pomminville du village d'Alfred. Mr Pomminville is a retired agronomist who has worked for the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture. Bienvenue, Micheline et André, et bon séjour à Toronto.

The Deputy Speaker: Welcome.

Now the Chair recognizes the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell for two minutes.

Mr Lalonde: I will be giving my speech in French at this time.

Au tout début du discours du ministre de l'Énergie, il a fait référence à la dette de l'Hydro, qui se situe dans les environs de 38 $ milliards. Cette dette, comme il l'a mentionnée, représente vraiment environ 10 000 $ par famille ontarienne. Aussi, il a mentionné que chaque nouveau-né en Ontario est responsable d'une dette de 3 000 $ à la naissance.

Lorsque je regarde que nous accumulons cette dette de 38 $ milliards depuis 50 ans, l'Hydro Ontario était sous la gérance d'un gouvernement conservateur pendant 82 % du temps.

Interjection: Shame.

Mr Lalonde: Shame on the Conservative Party.

N'edt été la position du Parti libéral de l'Ontario avec son chef Dalton McGuinty, jamais nous n'aurions pu annoncer au public le fiasco ou vraiment la méchante administration qui régnait au niveau de l'Hydro Ontario. C'est nous, le Parti libéral avec Sean Conway, le député de Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, ainsi que Dalton McGuinty, qui avons fait sortir à travers la loi sur l'accès à l'information publique le fiasco qui existait chez M<sup>me</sup> Clitheroe, qui était payée à 2,2 $ millions par année, ses 300 000 $ pour sa limousine, ses 330 000 $ pour son bateau, ses 174 000 $ pour son auto, ses 172 000 $ pour les dépenses qu'elle encourait ça, c'est une bonne administration ? C'est pour ça qu'aujourd'hui nous devons payer cette dette et que nous essayons de rembourser cette dette dans 10 ans.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Ms Martel: It's a pleasure for me to participate in this debate tonight. Are the words "We told you so" ever appropriate this evening. We told the Conservatives so, we told the Ontario Liberal Party so, that energy deregulation and privatization wouldn't work, and all along the Conservatives and the Ontario Liberals supported privatization and deregulation. Look at the fiasco that we are here now trying to deal with.

You see, Speaker, it's not just a question of incompetence, because the Liberals have tried to hide their support for privatization and deregulation behind the code words, "This government is just incompetent. If only the Liberals had been in power, there wouldn't be such a fiasco."

The fact is, it's not just a question of incompetence; it's a question of deregulation and hydro privatization not working—not working here in Ontario, not working in the UK, not working in Montana, not working in California, not working in Alberta. Are you surprised that we're here tonight dealing with this mess? Because that's what you're trying to do. Now you've got to bring a bill in to massively intervene in the economy because of the fiasco created by your policy, which was supported by the Liberal Party as well. That's what we're doing here tonight. All this blah, blah, blah about trying to protect the consumer—look, Minister; look, I say to the members of the Liberal Party: if hydro deregulation and privatization was really working, we wouldn't be here tonight trying to put in price caps and rebates and trying to fix the mess. We wouldn't have to be doing any of that because it would be working so well.

There is only one thing to do: kill the hydro privatization beast. Kill the dirty deal now. Get back to accountable public power.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: I think if it's all right, we'll just take a minute and you can get all those yelps and squeals and howls and everything out so that the next word I hear that isn't from somebody who has the floor, I can ask you to leave.

The Chair recognizes the member for Northumberland.

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): Thank you very much. I recognize the terms that you use to refer to the noise, and it's obvious that you are from a farm. I appreciate your getting that kind of control before I speak.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm naming the member for Windsor-St Clair, Mr Duncan.

Mr Duncan was escorted from the chamber.

Hon Mr Galt: I want to compliment the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Finance for two excellent presentations that we heard here this evening.

First, the Minister of Energy and his comments about the alternate fuels and what they're going to be able to do to bring forward green energy and some of the steps that he has taken to bring those aboard following the select committee's report—a committee report that was supported by all three parties. That has to be a first here at this Legislature. The enthusiastic members on that committee brought through a lot of good recommendations that the Minister of Energy is bringing in.

Also, listening to the Minister of Finance talking about the jobs: 1.8 million net new job in the last seven years. Just think about it. Of five people with jobs walking down the street, one of those jobs has been created during the last seven years. What happened in the five years before we took office? Some 20,000 net lost jobs in the province of Ontario. That's a record this province of Ontario had. In the last seven years, 1.8 million net new jobs. That's over a million people who came home and said, "Guess what. I just got the job."

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): It's so difficult to keep quiet when you hear the waffling going on over there. I heard the NDP—it's rather surprising, and I don't really want to attack the NDP. Their record speaks for itself, because they have gotten us in a worse mess.

The Minister of Energy and the Minister of Finance are bragging about things here. What does it say here? They'll promised us lower rates; they gave us a higher rate. They promised less debt; now we have bigger debts. They promised better service. Where are we today? We have brownouts and worse service now. Then they promised that they were going to get more supply and they didn't know where they were going. We have less supply and the Minister of Energy's ignorance is going up in the matter, not the supply. And then they said what was happening today—they want to make sure that we pollute the place regardless of any sort of a concern about the pollution.

Where are they going with all this? They don't know where they're going; they're waffling all over the place. The Minister of Energy was flipping here and flipping all over the place. Have you ever seen a live fish on shore? You're flopping all over the place.

The NDP, when they got hold of hydro, decided to buy a rain forest in Costa Rica, and the rates went up 40%. The people in Scarborough-Rouge River are just in shock. The small businesses there are going out of business because of the mismanagement and what both of these groups have done.

I want to tell you, when the Liberal Party gets into power, what we promise is to make sure that we're going to have some supply.

Of course, they had to go on and flip and change their position now, and they are bragging about what they have done. You should be ashamed of yourself for putting us in the terrible position that we are in today.

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Energy has two minutes to respond.

Hon Mr Baird: I want to thank the member from Scarborough-Agincourt for voting for this bill and I appreciate Dalton McGuinty's support of this bill. I didn't think we'd initially get it because he said it was wrong, he said it would add to debt, he said it was a knee-jerk reaction and on the same day as he changed his mind the Ontario Liberal fund said, "He had the courage to make his decision and stick to it." And then he went out and changed his mind again on the same day.

I thank the member from Scarborough-Rouge River. I want to thank the member from Northumberland, who did a heck of a good job on the alternative fuels committee. I only wish I could have joined that committee. I would have become friends with the member from Northumberland and my friend from St Catharines.

I want to thank the member for Nickel Belt. She said we wouldn't be here debating this bill had we done things the old way. We wouldn't be here debating this bill; we'd be out selling bonds—$3-billion in new debt. I know for the member for Nickel Belt that's a drop in the bucket, because she borrowed $50 billion or $60 billion when she was a member of the executive council. So $3 billion was nothing; that was chump change for the NDP. We intend to deal with the problem and we have the courage to follow through on our commitment to the open market.

I want to thank mon cher collègue le député de Glengarry-Prescott-Russell pour ses remarques. He says the PCs are responsible for the Hydro debt. My mother wasn't even born when the PCs came to power in 1942, and we've been criticized for going back to the 1980s. The PCs came into power in 1942. So when he goes back to this debt of 50 years, not only was I not born; my mother wasn't even born.

I want to also thank some people who are here—Cynthia Brandon, from the ministry, who has worked hard; Paula Day; Suzanne Bezuk; and I also want to thank all the good ushers, like Yvonne Palkowski, for their hard work.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Bradley: I'd like to ask for the consent of the House, first of all, to stand down our lead.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there consent? It is agreed.

Mr Bradley: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

I'm going to try to bring some rationality to this particular debate this evening, but first of all—

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll not warn the member for Don Valley East again.

Mr Bradley: First of all, I must make some comment on what I've already heard. It is amusing beyond belief to listen to the Minister of Energy talk about flipping and flopping, when there was a major government turnaround, a 180-degree, or maybe 360-degree, turnaround on this issue.

I listened during the leadership campaign, because I'm interested in those things, to all the candidates. When my friend Mrs Witmer made some suggestion that perhaps they should step back from privatization and from deregulation, everybody jumped on her over that issue, including the present Premier today. In fact on the road, not the road to Damascus but the road to Mississauga, there was a major change in government policy which certainly—someone from the NDP described the government as socialists on that particular day. So I now know why the Minister of Energy was flipping waffles one day during the campaign: to describe the present Premier. They had to buy a trampoline for him so he would do the complete flip that took place.

What is interesting, however: I thought there was a good column in the Toronto Star today by Ian Urquhart—sometimes I agree with Mr Urquhart; sometimes I don't—talking about one party changing a position, and the government seems to want to fade into the background on doing that. The NDP is sitting there waiting to say, "I told you so." They had some problems when they were in power as well, I must say. I remember when they were on that select committee and they were leaning in this direction.

By the way I objected, I must say, now that I mention the NDP, to trying to blame Floyd Laughren, as the chair of the Ontario Energy Board, somehow for these prices going up. I think what everybody in the province should know is that the rules for the energy board are set by the government. The amount of resources they have, the toughness that they can demonstrate, is really under the control of the government of Ontario. So I didn't mind when the Premier accepted my suggestion. I wrote him a letter and said, "Why don't you strengthen the Ontario Energy Board, give them more resources." I didn't mind when he said, "OK, I agree with that suggestion," just as he has now agreed with a number of other suggestions that we have made. Although he denounced them initially and said they were unrealistic, the Premier is nice enough now to adopt almost on a daily basis some of the suggestions that have come from the Liberal Party and even from the New Democratic Party. That's nice to see.

I remember the great fanfare with which this government announced its policy. The then Minister of Energy, my friend Mr Wilson, was extolling the virtues of deregulation and extolling the virtues of privatization and telling us, of course, that the rates were going to go down and that we'd have more supply and that everything would be fine for the province. Then, when that didn't work out, the blame game started. Just as over Walkerton the Premier, first of all, then Premier Harris, blamed the NDP, then he blamed the local municipality and then he blamed three of four other people before he started to understand that the blame was largely on his desk.

Well, to start out as well with the blame game: first of all it was the local utilities' fault; they were the people really gouging the people of the province of Ontario. Then, as I say, it was the Ontario Energy Board which was not doing its job, according to the government. Then they blamed the weather; then they blamed old Ontario Hydro—they were looking for somebody to blame—they blamed the farmers; they blamed people for complaining, when in fact it was the policy and the way in which the government implemented its policy that brought about the disaster that took place in July, August, September and October, until the Premier went to Mississauga and did the major flip-flop on this particular issue.

I just wanted to put on the record that I don't accept any lectures on flip-flopping from a government that did a 180 degree—I'm going to say a 360 degree—turn on its issue. I don't, as you know in this House, spend a lot of time criticizing previous governments and the NDP. I'm not the one who mentioned that the rates went up 40% when the NDP was in power, because that's in the past; or that the Manitoba contract, that was signed by the Liberal government, which would bring relatively cheap and clean power into Ontario, was cancelled by the New Democrats. That's in the past. I don't want to dwell in that particular aspect of it.

I do want to look at where we are going to be going, however—and how we got there. The real change in policy really came about—and I am pleased to say it shows that democracy from time to time can work—when people were phoning the constituency offices of everybody except the member for Etobicoke Centre, complaining about high rates. There were some genuinely sad stories out there: people who were on disability, people who are low-income or on fixed incomes, who saw their bills going through the ceiling, and they were calling all of us.

It wasn't just the opposition; they were calling the government members and so on, saying, "What on earth has happened? What can we do to stop this?" I had not seen such a barrage of telephone calls as I saw on that issue, in some period of time, and letters, and now of course we can get e-mail. There are a number of ways they can communicate with us. People you'd stop at the grocery store or something like that, the first thing they would want to talk about was their hydro rates. What was happening, I think it was particularly interesting: it wasn't simply hydro rates that were going up; they would tell you about their car insurance rates going up or their house insurance rates going up. They would talk about natural gas going up, particularly the people who were being served by Union Gas in this province. They would tell you that when they went to the pump to buy gasoline, more often than not the price was way up. It does go up and down, but more often than not it was way up. They looked at the municipal taxes and municipal user fees and said, "By gosh, they've all gone up as well, and it's pretty tough because we're talking about basics."

So I think the government saw that it could not sustain this politically. I was I guess one of the few people who—I was talking to a number of people the week before the Premier made his announcement in Mississauga and I said, "You will see this government do a 360 degree turn." They wouldn't believe me. They said, "No, no, they will tinker with it; they will tamper with it." My prediction was that it would be a complete turnaround on the issue. I think it was a political judgment that was made. Certainly, we're in the political milieu, I must say that, and it was a political judgment that was made at that time.

It will be difficult, quite obviously, to implement a lot of the provisions in this bill, but some of the provisions are in fact what some of us have recommended for some period of time. I think one thing has not been emphasized enough in years gone by—since the latter years of the Liberal government and the NDP government, where there was some effort being made even by Ontario Hydro, at the direction of government, to get involved in serious energy conservation. That's one thing we have to do. North Americans have not been easily turned on to energy conservation, though you will recall, Mr Speaker, back during the oil crisis I think of 1973, when the oil taps were turned off in the Middle East, we decided at that point in time, as a society that we would produce vehicles that would consume much less gasoline, and we looked at a lot of ways of improving our efficiency.

There has to be a major effort made in that direction. The government has nodded to that in its bill. I don't think the government has gone nearly far enough, but I think they recognize at long last that energy conservation—that is, trying to deal with the issue of demand—is going to be important.

Every one of us who sat on the select committee on alternative fuels commented on that. We had lots of alternative fuels being proposed and alternative forms of energy, and that was good. But one of the things we all recognized was the importance of getting involved in true energy conservation: individuals in their homes, their places of work, their personal habits trying to find ways to conserve energy. That's going to be important because we have to try to manage the increasing demand.

Second, we're going to have to bring on some alternative ways of producing electricity. One of the reasons I was attracted to having some new companies in the business was that in fact I saw that as an opportunity for what I call the green groups, the co-operatives and other small companies that could come on the grid and bring on green electricity. I don't think that's something Ontario Hydro or, as it's called now, Ontario Power Generation does particularly well. I know they have their one big windmill. It's more of a symbol than anything else.

But I must say there were a lot of small companies out there, people who are really concerned about energy conservation and alternative fuels, who had some good ideas. I would like to have seen them on the grid in addition to the major public power which would be Ontario Power Generation, be it a number of public power companies or Ontario Power Generation as it was.

We in St Catharines, for instance, have a generator that generates a small amount of electricity for our community. That's not Ontario Hydro, but it is allowed on our grid. There are what we call non-utility generators. I think a number of them came on stream when the NDP was in power. They were very expensive, but they did come on stream at that time.

We have cogeneration that can take place where large corporations, for instance, that are involved in an industrial field may use energy for themselves and when they're not using so much of it can put it back in the grid, and that makes all kinds of good sense.

Are there incentives that should be provided to try to get people interested in these things? Yes, I think those kinds of tax incentives and financial incentives can be useful. I may quarrel with the individual ones that are chosen by the government, but I think there is some merit in those.

It's very important, however, to keep Hydro One, which is the electricity grid—if you think of it like the 400-series highways—in public hands. I have a fear that the government, which will want to go into the election telling us they have a balanced budget, will in fact want to have a fire sale and sell, as they say now, 49%. At one time, they were going to sell the whole thing. Now it's 49%, and I worry about that. I think that's one that even people who like somewhat of an open market would like to see remain in public hands.

If they're going to sell it, one of the suggestions that has come to me—and some of my colleagues may have seen the same thing—was, I've had smaller utilities say to me, "If they're going to sell Hydro One, sell it to us. We think the main transmission lines should remain with Hydro One," say these people in the smaller utilities, "but if you're going to do any selling, don't sell it to the private sector. Make sure we get a chance to purchase some of those transmission lines, the smaller ones that are out there." That's a possibility that you would have.

The only game in town now, practically speaking, is going to be Ontario Power Generation. Because of what has happened, government is now going to have to order Ontario Power Generation to do a lot of things they wouldn't do before. That's unfortunate because over the years—and some of my friends who have sat in government in the NDP, the Liberals and the Conservatives will remember—they were not always easy to deal with, Ontario Power Generation or the predecessor, Ontario Hydro. Many times I thought the information—let me put it, as we do, diplomatically in this House, Mr Speaker—they provided to governments was not always as accurate as we would like it to be, even to legislative committees. I can recall information which I could classify as factually incorrect that was provided to each of the governments. It's going to take a lot more direct control of this particular corporation to get the capacity on-line.

One was the announcement of Beck 3. What was interesting was that my leader, Dalton McGuinty, and I were down in the Niagara Falls area, and we were talking about this, looking over the Beck generating station that exists, and we said, "You know, we should proceed with the Beck project." Do you know what the answer was at that time? There were a lot of people who were making rather unkind remarks about that suggestion. Then I see, large as life, the fellow who was flipping the waffles during the campaign along with the Honourable Tim Hudak, the Minister of Consumer and Business Services—I think he was part of that—

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): I don't remember.

Mr Bradley: He doesn't remember that. They have bad memories of those times. There he was announcing it. The local media asked me about it. Instead of being critical, I said, "Well, I'm quite happy to see them implementing Liberal policy, proceeding with a hydroelectric dam"—in this case, a tunnel, perhaps a new station, because there's going to be a study of whether the project can be enhanced from what is now projected. It's a project that was announced in 1998 by this government and cancelled after the election in 1999. I'm sure the timing was coincidental. But it's a good kind of project we have to proceed with. All the environmental assessments are done on it. It's a great thing. The planning and the engineering are done; they simply have to proceed with it. I was glad to see that after the new czar of alternative energy, the member for Scarborough East, denounced Dalton McGuinty and me for making this announcement—and even my friend from Niagara Falls, who I know in his heart of hearts was really a supporter of this, said it was impractical—well, a month or six weeks or so later, they're down announcing it. I have to be happy.

Whenever I see the government adopting suggestions we have made, I have to say I'm not one who gets angry with that or is perturbed by it; I say it's good. When I see the government taking good ideas from the opposition and implementing them, even though they don't want to do it, even though they've been forced to do it, I think that's good; I'm happy about that. I'm not a person who is angered by that.

I think we had a lot of good suggestions in our select committee. The Chair is here this evening. He did a good job, I thought, as chair of that committee. We came up with a lot of good suggestions that, frankly, I want to tell members of the government caucus, would go a long way to meeting the Kyoto commitments. If you implemented all of the recommendations—I'm not saying it's easy to do that—in that report, you could easily, in my view, meet whatever targets we would set for Kyoto, because there were a lot of good suggestions in there. The Chair, who had a chance to speak for a couple of minutes in response a while ago, mentioned that in fact there were a lot of good suggestions, there was unanimity. Sure, we may have quarrelled about details, and we may still quarrel about some of the details. Nevertheless, there were a lot of good suggestions in there that, if implemented, would be very helpful.

I saw a situation where there was an obvious need for rebates for people who had really been hit hard by this: small business people, individuals on disability, people of low income, really, everybody out there who is having unprecedented high bills. That's why we in the opposition get up daily to urge the government to do so.

The cap is going to be on now. That will help people until the year 2006. I think we know that's going to be a cost, because it's not going to be power at cost; it's going to be power below cost. So that will build into the debt, but the debt may be able to be managed in that regard.

I think we recognize that people were looking for that kind of stability. The government did not want to move in that direction; I understand that. It was very resistant, initially, to move in that direction, but it found itself in an untenable position. Again, I commend the public who voiced their concerns to all of us who are members of the Legislature about this and forced the government to take action.

I know that the local commissions are not very happy today, because they were given a set of rules to work under, and those rules have changed substantially at this time. A lot of them, of course, have to buy their electricity up front, and then they have to get it from their customers in the billing process. So a lot of them have incurred some considerable debt simply by having to purchase electricity at very, very high rates.

There's the issue of capacity out there, of generation, that's going to be important. Where do I think that can come from? Well, I think we can try to get a contract with the province of Manitoba again. I think we're obviously going to have to use some of Quebec's power as part of it. We're going to have to generate some of our own power. I'm excited about projects that involve windmills, which will produce a lot more electricity than people think.

Solar power: another member of the committee is with us now and would remember that we saw examples of solar power where there were panels on major public buildings. I think the goal for governments is to ensure the electricity they use is green electricity, to the largest extent possible, setting up a renewable portfolio standard. All of these are areas in which we should move.

I guess we've had our fun, and we still have to have a little more fun, I think, because the NDP will want to be "holier than thou" on this, with perhaps a little bit of justification, they will say. But I think we have to move on from this now and say, "So how are we going to solve our problems?" Generating that capacity is going to be important. We're going to have essentially one option at this time, except for the green power, and that's going to be to order Ontario Power Generation to undertake certain projects. For instance, natural gas is going to play a role, not in the longest term; in the medium term. I think there's a recognition out there that coal is, as The Economist said—and The Economist is no paper if it's not a Conservative business magazine. In the July edition it said that coal was enemy number one of the environment. So we're going to have to get that coal phased out. I think we can do it by the year 2007. Others say it cannot be done, but I know the new czar of alternative energy will be working hard toward that goal because he was, on the committee—you're not supposed to tell secrets on the committee, but he was quite aggressive in the stance he took, and I was pleasantly surprised by that.

That's my contribution this evening. I hope others have a positive contribution to make to this issue tonight.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Ms Martel: I'm going to try and make a positive contribution. I like the member from St Catharines. He has been here for a long time, and for a lot of those years he had to deal with the former member from Sudbury East, and anyone who can deal with the former member from Sudbury East for a number of years deserves some credit.

I listened really carefully—I did, Jim—to what you were saying, and I have to tell you I still don't know what the Liberal position is on this issue and I'm trying hard. I don't think the green energy, which we do need, is going to deal with the supply problem. I think our supply problem is a whole lot bigger than that, and I'm not convinced that Pickering is going to be on-line in time to deal with this situation.

I also listened to you say very clearly, "Let's move on from here." That's what we've said, and our idea of moving on from here is to kill the dirty deal. Admit once and for all that hydro privatization and deregulation have been a colossal failure, an absolute failure. It has been a fiasco. It is only because rates went out of control and people were gouged so much that this government was finally forced to respond. I think this government should go the next obvious, clear step, which is to say, "Do you know what? This experiment didn't work in California, it didn't work in Alberta, it didn't work in Montana or in the UK and it didn't work very well in Ontario either." Instead of using this bill tonight to try and cover up that fiasco, to try and cover up how people got gouged and would continue to be gouged under hydro privatization and deregulation, the obvious thing to do next, to move on from here, is to end hydro privatization and deregulation and return to a system of public power, where we know that supply will be stable, where we know that prices will be affordable and where we know that Ontarians will get electricity when they need it at a price they can afford.

Hon Mr Galt: I never imagined in my wildest dreams that there would come a day when I would actually agree with the member from Nickel Belt, but it's here this evening. She was referring to the member from St Catharines and his speech of some 20 minutes, and trying to figure out what the position of the Liberal Party is on energy. I listened as well, and I've watched. Even their Web site last Monday said, "Events coming soon," or "Position or policy soon to be announced." Well, the next day they bounced in a great big position. I don't know if they consulted or if they just dreamed something up, or if it was the one that was in fact on the Web site a week before. But again, and I hate to admit it, here is a party, the socialist party of this province, that actually had a position, and they had a bus and they really worked. The Liberal Party, I still don't know what their—they're flip-flopping faster than a bass on a hot dock in the middle of the summer. Dalton McGuinty changes his mind. You know what the position is while he's saying it, but you have no idea what it will be in another five minutes, in fact they'll have one.

I thought the member from St Catharines described the grid quite well, comparing it with a 400-series highway. I thought that was kind of neat. I thought he would have spent more time on alternative fuels. He was a pretty enthusiastic supporter of them. I know why he steered away from talking about what happened to the hydrogen institute back in 1986, when the Liberals came to power in Ontario. They dismantled it and all our scientists went to Vancouver. As a result, the hydrogen institute out there has taken off and hydrogen fuel for the future is certainly going to be a big issue. I do agree with the concern he expressed about coal. Certainly coal-burning plants are a big concern.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I have no idea if it's the arguments of the evening or if it's the hour of the night, but I'll tell you, after listening to my colleague from St Catharines, Mr Bradley, my throat feels much better. He has made such a wonderful, diplomatic summation of why we are here.

In a sense, what Mr Bradley said is that it has taken seven years of blindness of this government to bring them to their senses. In only a few months, the hydro issue has been sensitized to the point where the people have said, "Enough is enough." What Mr Bradley has said to the government is that they had no choice. That is why we are here debating this bill today. The government has been cornered by the people of Ontario, from family members, family workers, farmers, small and medium businesses to seniors. Everyone in the province of Ontario has said to this government, "We've had enough. You've bungled this issue so badly that you've got to do something." Do you know why? What my friend Mr Bradley from St Catharines has been saying to the government tonight is, "Hey, you guys, you have no time. You have to do something."

So don't come here with this bill tonight and say, "We are ready to go. Give us your approval for second and third reading." Where have they been? You've been here for seven years, and now that the people have finally said, "Oh, my God, what are they doing to us?" you say, "Give us your approval, because the holidays are coming, spring is coming and maybe we will have an election. Then we may have another very hot summer; we're going to have a serious problem." I think you do, and the people of Ontario know it.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I want to comment on the speech by the member for St Catharines. I always enjoy following on his interventions in the House. He rightly pointed out that this is a very challenging undertaking, this whole question of what we do about Ontario Hydro and hydro in general in the province, and he made the comment that we would be "holier than thou." I want to suggest to him that that's really not what we're about here in this caucus. We know that it's a big challenge. When we were the government, we struggled with it.

We had Maurice Strong working with a good friend of mine, a neighbour and colleague, Bud Wildman, trying to come to terms with Ontario Hydro. We never for a second, though, considered anything other than public power delivered by the public sector. Even though at the time we responded to a different set of circumstances, an economy that was slowing down significantly, and made decisions that reflected that, we did on the other hand have a plan in place that would have seen the working down of the debt of Ontario Hydro over a period of time, because we believed that Ontario Hydro had the capacity and the ability to do that, given the opportunity, in a good economy, if we were focused and disciplined in that. We still think that that can be done; we think there are opportunities out there to generate more electricity using some of the potential across the province. It doesn't have to be nuclear. As a matter of fact, we'd prefer that we move away from nuclear altogether, and coal-generated. We think Ontario has the capacity to do that, publicly run, though, and in the public interest.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for St Catharines has two minutes to respond.

Mr Bradley: I appreciate the moderate response of the member for Sault Ste Marie, who is always a very reasonable individual in this House in his response. I thought I was very clear in outlining all the good suggestions that we had to deal with the electricity situation in the province of Ontario. I know that members who felt that perhaps it wasn't there will consult Hansard and will certainly see that.

I'm not going to read all of the things I'm supposed to say about the NDP in here because the member for Sudbury is speaking next and I don't want to provoke her too much. Her father and I probably both sat on committees that looked at Ontario Hydro over the years, and I'll tell you there were a lot of problems with that particular company that all of us identified and were critical of. We hope that that will change substantially as we move forward.

It's clear that we have to have more supply. As the members think, each of the interventions has been very helpful, if not always agreeable. We have to move forward and we are going to have to instruct Ontario Power Generation to move forward. There's some hope that some of the local utilities that we have in Ontario will continue to get involved in generation projects as well. We hope that, again, we can bring some power in from Manitoba. I know the NDP didn't mean to cut off that power from Manitoba and cancel that contract. It was because, I think, there wasn't a demand at the time that it happened, but that's something we can renew. I think in Quebec we can bring some of that in.

I'm very excited about the potential for alternative fuel. I think conservation has to be foremost in our minds in terms of reducing demand in the province. We obviously can't make ourselves uncompetitive by having rates that are way out of control. I think the rebate should be there and the rebate should be generous to the people who have been hard hit by this.

So I think we have to move forward from here. I am prepared to do that and make as many helpful suggestions as I can. I hope we have a select committee on hydro affairs once again to deal with matters of this kind.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate. The Chair recognizes the member for Nickel Belt.

Ms Martel: I request unanimous consent to stand down the lead for our party.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt would like unanimous consent to stand down the lead debate. In there consent? Agreed? It is agreed. The Chair recognizes the member for Nickel Belt.

Ms Martel: Thank you, Speaker. I'm sure some people had to think twice about that, so I appreciate that.

I hope the Minister of Energy is going to come back in here and listen to what I have to say because I had to suffer through about a half an hour of his remarks, and I'm sure he'd be very happy to suffer through mine because there are a few things that I'm going to say and I'm going to quote him a little bit here this evening.

But, you know, here we are; I have to say, "We told you so, we told you so, we told you so." How many times did we tell you, folks, Liberals and Tories, that Hydro privatization and deregulation wasn't going to work? We told this government all the way through the public hearings on Bill 35 through second reading, which we voted against, and through third reading, which we voted against. In the last two years in particular, as we've been on our public power campaign, we have said it again and again and again, and I remember so many members of this government, the government House leader in particular, mocking us. Remember, Mr Martin? Remember Mr Stockwell mocking us, laughing at the prospect that energy prices would go oh-so-sky-high and people would be gouged oh-so-badly that this government would be forced to intervene in the way they have been?

Well, here we are, Speaker; here we are. We told you so. Because hydro privatization and deregulation hasn't worked in other jurisdictions. It has been tried. There was no reason that it was going to work in Ontario, and it hasn't worked. And here we are this evening, dealing with a bill that should be better called the "Failure of Hydro Deregulation and Privatization But We Don't Want to Admit It Yet Bill," or a bill that could be called the "Bribe People with Their Own Money Bill," or better yet, the "Dole Out the Dough Fast Enough to Take Us to the Next Election Bill," because what we're doing here tonight is proving, with this bill and its provisions, that hydro deregulation and privatization hasn't worked in Ontario.

The clearest indication we have of that comes from the announcement the government had to make on November 11 and comes in the form of Bill 210, which we are dealing with tonight. It's not the fault of Floyd Laughren that prices went up, as I heard the Premier of this province try and say a couple of weeks ago. It's not the fault of the weather that we've got high hydro prices. It's not an anomaly that we had a few really hot days and that's what drove the system out of control. It's not the fault of local utilities that we're in the mess that we are. It's the fault of this government for their philosophical bent which led us to the privatization and the deregulation of electricity—joined by my friends in the Liberal Party. I just had to say that. That's whose fault it is.

From our view and our perspective, it's not a question of incompetence. It's not a question of bringing it in badly. The issue is, it doesn't work and we should be here tonight with a bill that brings back public power that is accountable so that Ontarians, whether they're consumers, work in a hospital, work in a school, are farmers, work in big business, can be assured of a stable supply of electricity at cost. That's the bill we should be debating tonight.

The debate reminds me of the debate we had when the government deferred its tax cuts. You remember that, Speaker, in the budget of 2002. There was the Minister of Finance—and this goes back to the budget speech—saying on page 6 of the budget document, "Our government has pursued an aggressive tax cut plan for one very simple reason: tax cuts work." Then you go down three paragraphs and the Minister of Finance said the following, "In the meantime, because of our short-term fiscal situation, I will introduce legislation to delay, for one year only, the current planned reductions in personal and corporate income tax and the next step of the equity in education tax credit ... We will also delay by one year planned reductions in education property tax rates."

The question then was, if tax cuts work so well, why was the government pursuing the deferral? If tax cuts work so well, the government in the budget should have been in here in June 2002 accelerating the tax cuts even further to get the economy working even further.

The debate we're having here tonight is the very same, because if hydro privatization and deregulation really worked, as the government says it does, we wouldn't be here tonight dealing with a bill that proposes massive intervention into the marketplace to bring prices down in order to stop consumers from being gouged. That's the fact.

If hydro privatization and deregulation really did work, we wouldn't be dealing with price caps; we wouldn't be dealing with rebates; we'd be dealing with a situation where the government was just going on its merry way, the competitive market was going on its merry way and everything would be hunky-dory. But the fact of the matter is, we're here tonight dealing with provisions to intervene because deregulation and privatization don't work.

I remember the hearings on Bill 35 because I participated in a couple of those. I remember the government saying—Helen Johns, the Minister of Agriculture, was the PA at the time—again and again in every community, "This government is firmly convinced that competition in the marketplace is going to bring hydro rates down." In fact, at every one of those stops our critic at the time moved a motion calling on the government to put that into the legislation. We said to the government, "If you're so convinced that competition in the marketplace is going to bring hydro rates down, put it in the bill. Guarantee that hydro rates will go down." Every single time we raised that, the government members voted it down.

The government members were long on rhetoric during that debate and very short on delivery because the fact of the matter is, since the market opened in May to where we were on November 11, it has been painfully clear and painfully obvious that competition didn't and hasn't brought down rates, wasn't going to bring down rates and the only thing that was happening was that people were being gouged left, right and centre.

We said it wouldn't work. The evidence is very clear that it hasn't worked. We are here tonight dealing with all of those provisions to try and deal with this fiasco when in fact we should be dealing with a bill that brings back public power.

It is sad, sad, sad to see the minister, who is a true believer if there ever was one, it is painful to me to see the Minister of Energy, a true believer, be in the position he is, to have to defend this mess and have to bring in the kinds of provisions he has to bring in to cover up the mess, to cover up the fiasco.

I listened to some of his responses during question period, when he said, in terms of our questioning about what he was doing, on November 18, "The government proposed a plan this past week to try to address the real concerns that a lot of working families in the province of Ontario had, not just with the heavy weight of the bill on their kitchen table—that's their hydro bill—"but with their real concerns and fears for the future as we approach the Christmas holidays and indeed next summer."

No wonder people are afraid. They started getting bills that were completely out of control, they had no idea how to pay for it, and all the time they were thinking in the back of their mind, "But this government promised me lower rates. That's what competition was all about. The government said my rates were going to go down." They're not only worried about the bill that was on the table. The minister was right: they were worried about the future, and they still are because all this bill does is try and cover up the mess and get the government through the next election. It doesn't deal with the root cause of the problem, which is that this scheme isn't working and is not going to work. So they're not only worried about the hydro bill, which this government now pretends it's going to deal with, but they are worried about the future. People know that we need to deal with the real problem, which is hydro privatization. As much as the government wants to cover it up and hide the fiasco, that problem isn't going to go away.

What else did the minister say? The minister said on the same day, "We're providing substantial assistance to the people in the province of Ontario." It must be painful for him to say that, because as a true believer he was one of those people who got up and said that people's hydro rates were going to go down, that competition was going to be oh, so wonderful. Now he's in the position of having to bring in legislation to provide substantial financial assistance to people because this scheme hasn't worked, the government plan hasn't worked, and now the public in Ontario, through their taxes, are going to have to pick up the pieces. That's how this works.

The government, after dealing with the rebates, has a lot of other problems they've got to deal with. They've got a huge supply problem. I don't think Pickering is going to come on-line on time. The government's got a real problem facing it this winter, I think. We saw the problem of six brownouts last summer on the very hot days. We're going to see another problem this winter on the very cold days, especially in the part of the province I come from. We don't have the supply of energy to deal with that problem. We're going to have brownouts again this winter, but it's going to be that much more detrimental to people because in northern Ontario at 30 below, if you don't have heat, you've got a serious problem.

But this government's also got a problem because one of its big friends in the private sector, British Energy, which is leasing the nuclear plant, is on financial life support. If it wasn't for the government of the UK now supporting them financially, they would be in a situation of bankruptcy. Isn't it wonderful how the private sector works? Don't you like that private sector investment? It's a good thing the UK government is supporting them right now or we'd have a serious problem in terms of the supply of power from that nuclear plant, wouldn't we?

The government also has a problem with market manipulation, because that's not going away either. That was one of the overwhelming problems we saw in California, which led to brownouts and blackouts because some of those private sector operators decided to have the plant down just a little bit longer, maybe a few days or a few weeks longer, so they could drive those prices up, so people got gouged even further. We still have that problem in Ontario under a privatized, deregulated market. We've already got companies that some of the hydro offshoot companies this government set up under deregulation are still investigating. That problem is not going away as long as we have a deregulated privatized market.

The stench of Enron hasn't gone anywhere. While the minister said we've had a problem in the last 18 months because the private sector hasn't wanted to invest and banks haven't wanted to invest because of the Enron scandal, that's not gone away either, and that's not going away. In a deregulated energy market, Enron-like manipulation occurs, and that's not going to go away under this bill. It's not going to go away until we get rid of deregulated power.

So the government's got all kinds of problems—in terms of supply, in terms of trying to attract new investment, in terms of market manipulation—and all of those things aren't dealt with under this bill.

What is clear is that we have before us a bill that really tries to bribe people with their own money. That's a real shame. I guess the government thinks they're going to be able to get away with that. I guess the government thinks that people are going to be so happy to receive their little $75 rebate cheque—hopefully before Christmas, if this government has anything to say about it—that they're going to forget how much they were gouged and are going to forget that the $75 doesn't even go halfway to dealing with the big bills they got in September, October and November.

While the government likes to think they're going to get away with it, I've got to tell about an experience I had in my own community. Just after the announcement was made on November 11—we were all home for constituency week and I was in my riding—I went to three of the post offices in my riding and handed out our new hydro leaflet, which says again that we need public power in the province of Ontario. I met two of the three people whose cases I had raised in this House. Cindy Bond, whose case I raised in this House, had seen her family's September hydro bill rise 62% in comparison to last September's bill. I said to Cindy Bond outside of the Capreol post office, "What do you think about the government's scheme? What do you think about your rebate?" She said, "I'm going to pay for that rebate one way or the other. It's going to come out of my taxes or come out of my property taxes. That's my money to pay for this mess." She's absolutely right.

Then I was up in Levack and I ran into Bill Henderson. I raised his case in this Legislature. Bill Henderson of Levack had seen his September hydro bill rise 36.3% in comparison to his hydro bill last September. I asked Bill Henderson what he thought about the government's plan to have a rebate and he said to me, "Keep on pushing public power. That rebate's my money. I've got to use my money to pay for this mess. What we need is public power."

The only person I didn't see as I was at the post offices, and I bet his reaction would have been the same, was Mr St Amour of Val Therese, who last year paid $75.05 for his hydro bill and whose October bill this year was $408.13, a 543% increase. I don't think a $75 rebate cheque is going to take Mr St Amour of Val Therese too far.

But you know what was interesting? At least in my community, in very different parts of my riding, three different communities, people hadn't bought in and they haven't been bought off. They recognize that the money the government is going to need to do the rebate scheme is their money, their tax money, or it's going to be money that comes out of municipal coffers in the form of higher property taxes as municipal utilities try to cope with this situation as well.

What I think is interesting is that the government has yet to tell the public just how much it is going to cost to do the rebate scheme to try and cover up this mess, try and cover up this fiasco. I think it was interesting that on November 18, our leader, Howard Hampton, raised this question in the Legislature with the Minister of Energy. He asked him very directly, "How much of the people's money will it cost you to hide the cost until after the next election in Ontario?" The Minister of Energy said, "To very directly answer the leader of the third party's question, our plan fully balances itself over the next 41 months." Well, I want to know what the cost is: $1 billion? $2 billion? $3 billion? If you want to give me a direct answer, tell me exactly how much this government thinks it's going to cost to keep the price caps in place for the next four years and to keep the rebates flowing. How much moolah? How much money?

What we do know from Alberta is that in Alberta it cost Ralph Klein $2.3 billion for rebates before that Alberta election to try to bribe people with their own money; $2.3 billion in Alberta with a population that's not quite as large as ours, but with the same deregulated and privatized scheme of energy. How much do you think it's going to cost here? I heard the Minister of Energy talking about $3 billion, saying that we just thought it was small change. Do you know what? Before we're finished, it's going to be a whole lot more of $3 billion of the people's money being spent dealing with rebates, dealing with the price caps, instead of this government doing the right thing and ending hydro privatization and deregulation now, because that's what this government should be doing.

Do you know the other interesting thing? It's a small thing, a very small thing. On that same day our leader asked the Minister of Energy if he would tell us how much money the government was now spending on their television advertising campaign to tell people how the government is going to fix this fiasco. It was interesting that just last spring the government spent $2.3 million trying to tell people how good energy privatization and deregulation was going to be for them, trying to tell them that prices were going to go down, that a competitive, open market was going to mean a reduction in their hydro rates. That was $2.3 million spent just last spring by this government trying to convince people how good hydro privatization and deregulation is going to be.

Do you know what? The Minister of Energy refused to answer the question. I wonder why. I still wonder how much of the public's money, because it's public money again, is now being used so this government can flood the airwaves and try to pretend for people that they have somehow fixed this mess. People are going to pay through the nose for this rebate scheme and for the price caps. They're going to pay billions of dollars before this is all over, unless—and I think this is what the government might do, just like they did in Alberta—they pay the rebate, get some money into people's pockets and call an election. Then, if you get in again, you just cancel the price caps, you cancel the rebate and you let those prices rise again and you gouge people some more. That's what they did in Alberta. I'm really worried that's what this government is going to try to do here.

We should be here tonight debating one bill and one bill alone: the bill to return electricity to public hands, not-for-profit hands, so that we have public power once again in Ontario. That is the only way we can ensure that in Ontario we have a stable supply of energy, provided at cost, for Ontario business, for Ontario farmers, for hospitals, for schools, for colleges and universities and for Ontario consumers. That's what we should be doing here tonight. Kill deregulation; bring on public power.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): In comment to the member for Nickel Belt, she raised a number of points this evening, but I want to go on the record and make one comment. It's extremely interesting to listen—it's almost like a pinball game in this Legislature: the ball is bouncing around, and the Tories are blaming the Liberals, the NDP are blaming the Liberals and blaming the Tories, and it bounces all around.

I think one of the problems we have and one of the things the public is sick and tired of, quite frankly, is the fact that governments of all stripes have let Hydro One or Ontario Hydro, as we know it, run rampant. We haven't reined Hydro in. That's a really disappointing thing that has happened in this province. The NDP can stand up and knock the Conservatives and knock the Liberals, but we had an opportunity with the NDP when they were in power to look to Manitoba to help meet some of our needs. But what did the NDP government go and do? They cancelled those contracts. That's a shame.

We've seen the Conservatives just totally bungle this whole issue of hydro deregulation. It's interesting the spin they're putting on it, trying to twist it to blame our leader and talking about our leader's flip-flop. I've never seen a government flip-flop so much in their lives as this Conservative government has. We're not the ones who brought in deregulation; you did. You try and twist it that we're the biggest flip-floppers in the world, but it's you.

The one thing I really agree with the honourable member on is this whole question of advertising, because we've wasted thousands and thousands of dollars again. Do the right thing, government: let's call an election on this issue.

Mr Martin: I want to commend the member for Nickel Belt on an excellent speech, very focused, to the point and informative on this issue. Her insistence that the bill we should be debating here tonight is the bill to return power to public hands is absolutely right on.

I want to talk just for a couple of minutes in support of that, about, as she suggested, the cost to the consumer of this whole fiasco. She mentions higher rates, and she's absolutely right. It's not just the higher cost of electricity; it's all the other costs that are built in now for transmission, distribution and on and on and all the different pieces that are added to that.

The price of the rebate: we don't know what that's going to be. It's going to be millions of dollars—billions of dollars, actually, before it's over. Then she mentioned very briefly the advertising campaign we all watched. Anybody who was watching the Super Bowl this weekend couldn't help but watch. Every 10 minutes there was a huge ad explaining away the new initiative—

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): Don't you mean the Grey Cup?

Mr Martin: The Grey Cup. What did I say?

Ms Mushinski: You said "the Super Bowl."

Mr Martin: Oh, sorry, the Grey Cup.

Interjection: A Freudian slip there.

Mr Martin: Yes, the Grey Cup on the weekend. Oh, man, I got caught, eh.

Anyway, the Grey Cup and the advertising they were running about every five or 10 minutes—I couldn't even focus on the Grey Cup; that's why I probably forgot what it was. All I was watching were these damn ads that were just driving me crazy, knowing I was paying for them, that everybody across this province was paying for them. How long are those ads going to run? They're still running out there. How much is it going to take for you to convince the people that they should be feeling really good about you having your hands in both of their pockets right now because of this fiasco?

Talk to the people in Wawa. Talk to the guys I'm going to meet with on Friday morning from Searchmont resort just north of Wawa, ask them how they feel about this and they'll tell you in a hurry. They said they're not going to pay their bills.

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): The member opposite would like us to talk about a different bill. Unfortunately, constrained as we are by the rules, we're talking about the bill that's before us here today, Bill 210.

She conveniently leaves out of her discussion the fact that the inspiration for this bill is not some last-minute reaction to the issues that took place this summer. In fact, the substance and the bulk of this bill relates to an initiative that actually started over a year ago, back in the summer of 2001, when the government commissioned the select committee on alternative fuel sources, an all-party committee I hasten to say, on which were representatives of all three parties. That committee scoured the world for the most up-to-date information on what other jurisdictions had done to promote the use of green power, wind power, solar, biomass, geothermal, as well as to promote energy conservation. It tabled a report in June this year with 141 recommendations that covered 20 different topics.

The government had 120 days to respond and I'm pleased to say that within that time frame we did respond. The Premier, the Minister of Energy and the Minister of the Environment made it very clear that we were following the recommendations in that report. We have already turned around, in a scant few weeks, those pronouncements and turned them into the very specific piece of legislation that's before us here today, legislation that promotes the use of green power by offering the most comprehensive, the most aggressive package of consumer and business incentives and tough new product standards in any jurisdiction anywhere in North America.

In Europe, wind power is de rigueur. In Texas and California they're moving forward with green power initiatives. Ontario will catch them, we'll beat them, and this bill facilitates that. It's going to lead us a greener energy future.

Mr Bradley: I'm extremely pleased that the member raised one of my favourite issues, and that is the issue of government advertising. What we have to recognize is that it is taxpayers' dollars being used for essentially, I think most independent people would say, a partisan message. If you look at the tricky wording of it, the clever wording that the whiz kids around the government try to develop, you will see that it's essentially a political message, a feel-good message, a message that tries to convey the impression that the government is on the side of the people.

We have to recognize that this party has more money in its war chest than any political party in Canada, federally or provincially. It has more money, millions upon millions of dollars, in the war chest. How did they get that money? They got it by appealing to the wealthiest people, the most powerful people in the province with their policies. They've been rewarded with that money coming into their coffers.

But does this government use that money, which is the money of the Conservative Party? No. It uses the tax dollars of individuals in our community, many of whom disagree with government policy. But that's not really point. It's using taxpayers' hard-earned dollars to advertise on such things as the Grey Cup. You will see it on other programs where they think there's a large viewership. That's very expensive advertising, and that money is coming out of the pockets of consumers. This comes from a government that decimated the Ministry of the Environment, that made huge cuts to government departments which were trying to do good work on behalf of the people of this province. They have spent over a quarter of a billion dollars on self-serving government advertising.

I'm glad the member included that as part of her speech. I thought, in fact, that was the best part of her speech this evening. I commend her and the member for Sault Ste Marie for raising that issue of government advertising. I hope she continues to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt has two minutes to respond.

Ms Martel: I want to thank the members for Elgin-Middlesex-London, Sault Ste Marie, Scarborough East and St Catharines for their participation.

I just have to say, with respect to the comments made by the member for Scarborough East, who tried to say that work on this bill began a year ago with the work by the select committee on alternative fuels, please. He has to be the only one in this entire world who believes that.

We are here tonight because this government is facing a crisis. That's why we're here tonight. In the last couple of months, people started to open their electricity bills, and people were blown away because they had very huge and significant increases in their hydro bills at a time when this government had just finished using our taxpayers' dollars to have ads on TV telling them that the competitive market, the open market, was going to be oh, so good and result in oh, so reduced electricity bills. That hasn't happened. In fact, this government was facing a crisis in the last number of months, and this bill is a result of this government trying to respond to the crisis.

I disagree fundamentally with the response, because what it does is keep private electricity, deregulated hydro, in place. That is the root of the problem. Deregulated hydro and privatized hydro haven't worked in other jurisdictions. We should have learned from the experience in other jurisdictions. We should have learned about the rebates that Ralph Klein had to hand out in order to buy the election. Instead, this government is going to use billions and billions of taxpayers' dollars to try to cover up the mess, to try to cover up the fiasco instead of recognizing that hydro deregulation doesn't work and instead of bringing in a bill that would bring us public power again.

Our party, the New Democratic Party, has been consistent. We oppose hydro deregulation and privatization; we support public power. That's what we need in the province of Ontario again.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate.

Mr Sergio: I'd like to join the debate on Bill 210, an act that amends a number of other acts which deal with the pricing, conservation and supply of energy.

Let me say at the outset that if there is one issue out there that the people of Ontario, from young to old, from rich to poor, from working families to business people to seniors to farmers—everyone understands very clearly the particular situation we have with so-called hydro.

We are here dealing with this particular situation, and people are saying, "You know what? We are tired. We know where we are because we pay the bills." And who knows better than the ones who ultimately pay the bills? I don't have to tell you, because perhaps you yourself have received a number of calls or letters asking, "How come my bill is so high?" Small business people call and say, "Look, unless you guys do something, we won't be able to continue to pay these bills and continue to stay in business." Everyone has been affected and they are saying, "Do something." So perhaps, instead of going on and on, because people are saying, "We have had it with this issue ad nauseum. We want to see some stabilization of the situation, stabilization of the market, if you will. We want to be appeased. We want this particular situation alleviated that has been created, and we are still paying"—they don't want to know. The bottom line is, they're getting extravagant bills and they want something done. Maybe, instead of calling it the hydro bill which amends a number of acts with respect to conserving energy, we should call it the stabilization of the debt of deregulation, and get on with it.

What we have in this bill only tends to make people happy for a little while, and then we'll see, because it's full of uncertainties. I guess the questions that we also have to ask ourselves are, "What is it? How did we get here? Why, and where are we going from here?"

I don't think that the measures that have been suggested by the Premier in a very hasty way will alleviate the long-term fear of the people. We must be able to solve the situation that has been created and give the people the assurance that, yes, we can get through this winter and that, yes, summer is going to come, and I hope it's going to be a good, hot summer. After all, our people are looking for a good, hot summer so they can enjoy it. They're looking at our government to make sure they have enough provision, enough supply of that particular material that should be so rich here in province. So we don't have this long-term stability. We can't provide you with the content of this bill, that, "Yes, we will be assuring you that we will have a stable, long-term power generation in the province of Ontario."

We are here because this government for the past seven years has been too busy concentrating on privatization, selling and making sure that the big corporations get what they want. We have been creating more red tape than they took out. We are here because they fell asleep at the switch. They were thinking that by doing what they were proposing—selling, privatizing, splitting, selling Hydro One—they would solve the situation, they would keep the big corporations and their friends happy and they would provide on a continuous basis the amount of electricity to meet the needs of the people of Ontario: the residential, the commercial and the businesses, all together.

This is not new. This goes back to 1995, to the former Premier, Mike Harris, and then Minister Eves, and now to the Minister of Energy, and look where we are. This is a direct effect of the bungling, of the neglect of this government when it came to dealing with hydro. They were too busy. They spent too much time concentrating on whom they were going to sell it to, how it will be split, how much we will sell, how we are going to privatize it. That was their main aim: deregulation. We knew it wouldn't work. We knew that, not because we had a magic wand, but because experience showed us it wouldn't work. And it didn't work. That's why we are here today, and that's why these hastily produced measures to appease the people of Ontario because of timing. And timing, I don't have to tell you, is of the essence.

What did they do since 1995? My goodness, we had five years or more when the former Premier said, "Strictly privatization." It failed. It didn't go anywhere. We have a new Premier. They didn't know which way to go with the new ministers. How much time did they waste? Months. "It's on the table." "It's off the table." "We're going to sell 49%." "We're going to create a trust fund." "It's no longer for sale." "Yes, it is." "Maybe we'll join the private sector." "Maybe not." In the meantime, people were getting their bills and the pressure went on.

I have to tell you, we can rant and rave as much as we want, we can throw accusations from left to right and from right to left, but in the end, I think the people out there, the people of Ontario, are totally fed up with the way this government has handled a lot of things, but especially the hydro situation. We don't have to tell them anything any more. They are well aware of where they are and who's responsible.

Who changed their mind one more time is really immaterial. The question is, we have a government and we have a problem, and the problem was created by the government. Who introduced it? The government. Who told them it wouldn't work? Mr McGuinty, the Liberals, the NDP, the people of Ontario. But they kept marching on with deregulation. Finally, they realized they had nowhere else to go but to stop, take a second look, turn around, switch position, change their mind—that's OK. If compromise is the art of politics, then flexibility must be the art of listening to the people and of responsible government, for goodness' sake. So that's OK. Even the government is allowed to change their mind, as long as it is in the best interests of the people of Ontario. We are not saying this will solve the problem and that the people of Ontario are totally happy, but at least it's some measures.

I was appalled to listen to the minister say, "We've been fighting, we've been working, we've been listening to the working families, the farmers, the small business people, the seniors." Baloney. In the last seven years—and I promised myself that I would try not to raise my voice and lose it completely. I don't want to get upset, because I would upset the government side, and then we'd get into a brouhaha, and here's no need for that.

The people of Ontario know. They are saying, "When was the last time you spoke for the poor guy, the seniors, the working family, the small business people?" You kept on going for seven years minding your own business. No one could make sense of you people. Now that the revolution is gone and the common sense is merely a blur in the past, they're saying, "We've been thinking of doing something for the people of Ontario." Baloney.

It is the situation. It is the timing. It is, if you will, the time we are in. They have no place to hide, no more time to run. The noose is getting tighter and tighter. So we may say, "OK. At least they are being responsible and listening to the people of Ontario." They've been paying through the nose, so now you're going to give them some of their own money back. You're going to keep them quiet. Well, it may be so. Some people out there may think so. I tend to agree with those people who say, "First you took it with two hands, and now you're going to give it back to us with one."

But that's OK; at least they are doing something. They are freezing the rates until 2006. That's OK too, no problem—anything that's good for the people of Ontario. Freezing the rates to 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour is OK. Not everybody is going to be happy with that, I can tell you, because a lot of people won't be getting anything. Not everybody is going to be getting that. People think, "Oh, everybody's going to get maybe $75 and who knows what in the future." No, not everybody, because some people only paid 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour.

The problem is that there were so many other charges in there that affected the bottom line of their bill and, of course, there is no recourse on that unless the government goes after those companies and says, "You have managed to keep the hydro rate at 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour, but look at all the high charges here. What are we going to do about that?" No, the government is not going to do anything about that.

So, here we are. We are here today, but where are we going? Where are we going? Is the government proposing a solution where they are saying, "Well, we have created a mess, because now the generation stations are idle—they're not producing energy—and we're going to be using this for four years, until 2006, to create our own energy."

I think we have to send a message out there. I urge the government to send a message out and say, "Deregulation is dead; privatizing is dead; we are going to increase the generational capacity of our stations; we are going to produce more power publicly, with our funds, so we can have more power generation provided by us and in the domain of the people of Ontario."

I think we have to assure. I think it's important that the people of Ontario put their minds at peace and say, "Do you know what? It was a bad idea, but they are still flirting with deregulation or privatization. I hope, for God's sake, that they put an end to that and we get on with it, even if it's going to cost us some more money." It is going to cost us more money, $300 million—the first batch, if you will. It's going to cost us $300 million, let alone the damage that will follow, because we have no idea what the fallout is going to be.

But do you know what one major fallout is? Those partners, the ones in the private sector, in and out of the country, who were hoping to come into Ontario and build new generation, have seen the inaction of this government, the ineptness. They have lost confidence, and, let me tell you, they are gone. They are gone.

Unless this government picks up the ball and runs with it and says, "Mea culpa, we made a mistake, but let's go on from here. I think we owe it to our business community, we owe it to our people to produce our own energy and enough of it because we have the capacity. Let's get on with it"—let's proceed with that. I think we owe it to the people of Ontario and to the business community.

We could go on and on exchanging "Who blew it?" or "Who did what?" and running to damage control. We know that; I think the people of Ontario know. But we've got to get on with it, and the people of Ontario are saying, "We have the means. Let's do it." We had the means to build a wonderful highway, the 407, paid for by now, probably. With the value of that highway, we could have built another three highways. Can you imagine the wonderful things we could have done to improve this transportation mess in and out of Toronto, the GTA and many parts of Ontario with a few billion dollars?

Before it gets worse, let me say to the government: you are where you are because of your own doing. It is something you cannot blame on the weather, on the opposition, on the market, on September 11. Let's get serious. It's something they had seven years to worry about, and they did nothing, so let's not blame it on that.

Let's get on with it and say that the best thing we can do is to produce enough of our energy at a cost that is acceptable to the people of Ontario. Let's get on with it. It is and it has been our position, as our leader, Dalton McGuinty, has been saying for a long time to this government, "No to the sale of Hydro One. Deregulation isn't going to work." Now that both of them are dead, he was right.

A long time ago, Mr McGuinty had the vision of telling this government how it would be possible to solve the situation without selling Hydro One. We came up with a policy. We told Mr Eves—we told Mr Harris—take it and run with it as long as you implement it without selling either one. There was no need to sell Hydro One. There was no need or intent to try to go that route. We have a policy. Mr McGuinty has expressed publicly what we would do with respect to—let alone the other issues of health care, education, all the other major issues. With respect to hydro, it is a major issue. I don't think, we on this side don't think—the government may think—this is an issue that is going to be gone tomorrow once we approve Bill 210.

I think the Premier and the government are making another big mistake. This is not going to go away unless it is addressed on a professional basis, with the people of Ontario in mind, by this government. Otherwise it's going to be here in the spring at, maybe, election time, or in the fall at election time or in spring 2004 at election time. It's going to be here unless they take the bull by the horns and say, "Folks, it was a mistake. We were following a certain path that was not our own, but was the intent of others, and it was wrong. We understand that."

And that's OK. The people of Ontario are so benign that often enough they are willing to forgive and forget. I will leave it with this message, as I am getting short of speaking time. The people of Ontario are very benign, very understanding and very patient people. If the government were to come up with a reasonable proposal, a long-term solution where the people of Ontario could see the genuine intent of the government—come election time, maybe. Otherwise this issue is going to be here.

Dalton McGuinty, our leader, has said publicly and in this House what we would do as Liberals. We would do the right thing. Our position has been public. It's straightforward. It is solid. We would not go into debt with respect to hydro. We would produce our energy. We had the best environmental plan issued by any government. This will be our position as we move forward and as we deal with this particular issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Ms Mushinski: It's always interesting to listen to my colleague from the other side of the House. He and I used to sit on Metro council together and we shared a lot of common interests in terms of transportation issues. It doesn't really surprise me that he is trying to sort of avoid the inconsistency or, I guess, the other side of the coin as far as Mr McGuinty is concerned. It's interesting, and it bears repeating, that the last 30 seconds of my colleague's comments related to Mr McGuinty and what he believes in. It's difficult to know from one day to the next exactly what he does believe in.

For example, Mr Bryant on October 28, 2002, said, "Our position has not changed since 1997." But you look at the comments Dalton has made about the open market. The question was asked by the media, "What would you do?" Mr McGuinty said, "I think it's important that we move ahead with competition both in terms of generation and in terms of the transmission."

When you look at privatization, at private sector involvement in generation, "The only way we're going to get more made-in-Ontario electricity is to permit the private sector to come in and build made-in-Ontario electricity." Who said that? Michael Bryant on October 8, 2002. Exactly where do they stand?

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): I was listening very carefully to my friend from York West, and certainly to my friend from Scarborough Centre. In the past she always made sense, except now she's attacking Dalton McGuinty.

Let's look at the facts very quickly: the Common Sense Revolution woke up one day and they said, "You know what? There's a debt of over $30 billion. Let's fix it." We said, "Yes, that's great. Let's have a look at it. Let's agree with it. Let's fix it."

The next thing they came up with was, "Let's sell Highway 407 because that is the way we're going to try to fix the hydro mess." What happened? Within one year that quadrupled. They should be ashamed of themselves for selling the 407 down the drain. The member for Scarborough Centre would know that so well. You sold the 407 down the drain. You could have made twice—no, three times—no, four times more money and you didn't. Is that good business? Is that a question of trust? No. If that is the way you're going to handle the hydro mess, then I say the member from York West is absolutely correct, that you can't be trusted.

You're pointing the finger over here. You're saying it's Dalton McGuinty who's changing his mind. You have made a big mess of hydro because you're going to go exactly the same way you did with Highway 407. But let's look at this. The first time you said, "We're going to make a refund."

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Scarborough Centre, come to order.

Mr Ruprecht: Why are you going to make a refund? Why are you giving us a refund? You know why? Because we pushed you into it. That's the reason you're giving people a refund. Your first adjustment was—it's going to cost us how much, the province of Ontario?

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Scarborough Centre, I'll not warn you again.

Mr Ruprecht: "It's going to cost us about $700 million." Wow, way off. The next estimate that came in was over $1 billion. The next estimate was $1.8 billion. You tell us right now what the real cost of the refund money is you're giving to people. You give us the facts right now. You can't because you haven't even analyzed what it's going to cost us. This government can't be trusted—

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Martin: It's the second time today I've been able to speak following the member for York West, who comes to this House regularly to put on the record the concerns of his constituents, and so he should because the constituents of every one of us across this province are very concerned right now about what's happening in the hydro sector, in the energy sector.

They've seen their natural gas prices go up due to deregulation and privatization. They know what's happening in the gasoline sector because that's totally market-driven. Every time there's a long weekend, the prices go up. Every time George Bush talks about attacking Iraq, the prices go up.

Now in electricity many people are surprised that when you turn the system over to the private sector and deregulate it, you get fluctuation and mostly it's fluctuation up. It's increased prices for the commodity itself. You've now got people looking at their bills as the new bills come out, and they're realizing it's not just a commodity they're paying increased prices for but, as our leader, Howard Hampton, has said on so many occasions, you're paying an increased price because there's now a for-profit portion of all of this on the cost of transmission, the cost of production, the cost of delivery, and on and on and on. The prices just go up.

This government, instead of spending money on some of the transportation issues the member for York West spoke of in his jurisdiction, is spending it on advertising now to sell something, again, that is in complete contradiction to what they were marketing just a few months ago. The member for Nickel Belt spoke of that very eloquently here a few minutes ago.

The consumer is tired. You've got your hands in both of their pockets.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions.

Hon Mr Galt: I certainly appreciated some of the comments that have been made here this evening. I heard the member for Davenport rant and rage. I never did hear what the member for Sault Ste Marie had to say, he spoke so softly and so low. I think he's ashamed of some of the policies and positions their leader has taken, although I do have to admit that his leader has taken a position. This is something the leader of the Liberals has not done. There has been no position.

All you have to do is look at their Web site. Last Monday, there was no position.

Laughter.

Hon Mr Galt: They can sit over there and laugh—

Mr Peters: I am laughing at you.

Hon Mr Galt: —but what they should laugh at is the position Dalton takes now, and then the position he takes 10 minutes later.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. You may laugh, but you can't talk. If you do it again, you're out.

Hon Mr Galt: I was just explaining when I had that bit of an interruption there about how the reporter the other day was asking Dalton about his position on power. He went away and came back 10 minutes later and asked him if he still had the same position.

On another occasion a reporter asked him, and this is pre-November 11, "What would be the right amount for a rebate?" Dalton said, "I don't know." Then the reporter said, "Well, you must have some idea. What do you think? What do you really think?" Dalton said, "I really don't know." What a position to take. He was very firm, he was very determined that he really didn't know. That was pretty obvious when you looked at their Web site a week ago Monday. It said something to the effect that the decisions or policy were soon to be on their Web site. Lo and behold, the next day they did have something there. I guess they instantly consulted overnight and did put one on there.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for York West has two minutes to respond.

Mr Sergio: My thanks to the members who have contributed remarks, especially the member from Northumberland—he's always on his feet answering and making comments, and that's OK; we accept them all—and my good colleague from Davenport and the members for Scarborough Centre and Sault Ste Marie.

As I said, we can go leader to leader all we want, but let me say that there are times in the life of every government when it has to face the music. If they don't have an issue, they will try to fabricate one. If they don't have an issue, they will try to cause some crisis.

This is an issue which this government has not fabricated to go to the people of Ontario with. This is not a time when this government has created this particular crisis so they could go to the polls with it; it is not. It is an issue that perhaps even they themselves don't know how they happened to stick their nose into it. But they are there. It's the government. We have been trying to be helpful with how to get them out of it for the benefit of the people of Ontario. They are still very adamant, and let me use the word "arrogant," a bit arrogant, as well, in failing to understand that we are in a situation—when I say "we," I mean the people of Ontario—and they don't care who says what, who did this, who did that. The only thing they know is that they are paying a very high price. We have seniors who don't know whether to pay their utility bills, buy drugs or buy food.

So let's get on with it. Let's do it right for the people of Ontario; I mean all the members.

The Deputy Speaker: It being well past 9:30, this House stands adjourned until 10 am tomorrow morning.

The House adjourned at 2135.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

EDUCATION

Mr Gerard Kennedy (Parkdale-High Park): I move that in the opinion of this House, the Ontario government should endorse a program based on Excellence for All, the Ontario Liberal plan for education, to reduce dropout rates and to assist the record numbers of struggling students that would include the following:

- Better support and better curriculum for the record numbers of students failing subjects in the new secondary curriculum.

- Special assistance for students who have not passed the Ontario secondary literacy test, with the goal of reducing failure rates by 50%.

- Raising the official school leaving age from 16 until 18, or until graduation from school or an equivalent learning program.

- Expanding co-op programs, vocational facilities, pre-apprenticeship and apprenticeship programs.

- A meaningful high school diploma that combines academic achievement and workplace experience.

- Establish a standing committee on education for the Legislature to annually review the funding formula's ability to meet the needs of Ontario students.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Mr Kennedy has moved private member's notice of motion number 20. The member for Parkdale-High Park has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Kennedy: It is my privilege to rise in the House today to draw attention to a little-understood problem in the education system. This is group of students, a significant body, who stand the risk, as we speak here today, of being left behind. The students we're talking about are, not exclusively but largely, those in the applied program, in other words, the program that is meant today to prepare students for college or for work experience after high school.

This is a group of students who in the past have always had some level of difficulty with the academic program but who were supposed to be considered and provided for very explicitly by the new program put forward by the government in 1999. All of the high school was taken as a piece. The five-year program was made into a four-year program. Very explicitly this group of students, those who were struggling, were meant to do better, to benefit from this initiative.

So the provincial government and the provincial education authorities have created a new circumstance, and we stand here four years later to reckon with where that circumstance has taken these particular students. Unfortunately, we're not able to report an increased amount of success. The basis of the resolution today is asking for the House to recognize that in fact these particular groups of students have more difficulty now than they did under the old program, and they have for reasons we can understand, for measures we can actually respond to.

We are putting this forward in the spirit of recognition. It is a resolution calling on the Minister of Education to do some specific constructive things to recognize these particular groups of students. These are potentially 100,000 students who exist in applied programs currently today. We know from a report that was done, a substantial report commissioned by the government, delivered to the government in August—it only became leaked in October. It's by Professor Alan King at Queen's University. He speaks very explicitly about the increased risk, that students today who take applied courses are at a 50% higher risk of failing or dropping out than under the old program. What that means is that 64% of the students are not acquiring credits at a rate that would allow them to graduate. Under the old program, it was 43%.

I would say that this group of students, that represents about 21% of the kids in school today, should command our extra attention, and I have asked for the indulgence of the House to give them that attention this morning and to also support the endeavour on their behalf. We look at about 30,000 students who are taking applied courses in a single year, and about 122,000 from grades 9 to 12. If we take the approximately 30,000 in grade 9 today in total, 25% are going to drop out before they graduate.

Our objective here is twofold. As to the ones who are still struggling in school, we want to make sure they can be genuinely successful. Second, we want to make sure we can reduce the dropout rate. We have other indicators. We know that the literacy test that was put in place told us that 25% of the kids writing it weren't able to pass, weren't able to attain the standard put forward in that grade 10 literacy test. There currently are no special efforts underway to help those kids succeed. I would say to the people in this House who agree with the idea of a literacy test or the idea of knowing where kids stand, what would possibly be the point of subjecting kids, young adults, to a test, some kind of measure of where they're at, unless we're going to do something about it? So the resolution today is about just that, is about the action that this Legislature needs to get behind in order for these kids not to simply spin off and be lost somewhere in the system.

We have in the House today one of 60 community co-sponsors of this bill. We went around the province and enlisted professional educators for their professional opinion: what do we need to do? Earlier this year in the House I talked about this Bailey bridges report, which a principal in Niagara did, and I'll quote from it a little bit later on. The title of that report is kind of the spirit of this resolution. We need to have what they called in the Second World War the Bailey bridge. When there weren't proper bridges in place, they built whatever there could be, and they called these Bailey bridges. That's the recommendation coming from educators. They're saying that where there aren't bridges standing, we need to put some in place. We need, I would propose to this House, to do that this year. These are kids who not only won't graduate; these are kids who could drop out, whose education and really their fundamental future could be compromised unless we act right now.

Now, there are members across who can perhaps give us chapter and verse about efforts that are being made. What I'm saying to the members of the House is, we must do better. What Mr Richard Christie, who came here this morning all the way from Fenelon Falls to support this effort, says is that as an educator, he is tired of seeing these students being treated as second-class citizens in the classroom. I think that, members of the House, if we're being honest, we often attribute academic struggle as a personal failure. I think that's the inclination, that's the bias we have in society.

Yet there are educators from every part of this province, and I recommend to the members of this House if they'd like to obtain a copy of the 60 co-sponsors we have from about 25 different communities around the province, to contact them—their phone numbers are here—to find out. These 50 teachers have told us about more than 2,500 students that would benefit directly.

There are about 100,000 students struggling, most of them in the applied stream, but not exclusively. What we're asking is for this House to do what needs to be done. How did they get in this state? We're not here in private members' hour to point fingers exclusively at the government.

Let's look at two things. Certainly there is a curriculum that isn't working for these students. It's what the Bailey bridges report has said, it's what the Queen's University report has said, it's what the literacy test results are telling us, it's what the math results are telling us—where 55% of the kids taking applied math are failing grade 9.

I would say that there's also the fact that circumstances have changed. Yes, we want the government to be responsible for the curriculum that it brought in, but also we can't afford any more to have a circumstance where kids drop out, where they don't reach their academic potential. So much of their future, so much of our economy, depends on them doing the best they can do.

One of the things we're proposing is that we take these kids much more seriously; that the kids who are going on to college, or maybe not going on to college or university, have a viable third option, and that option be started and accelerated within the publicly funded school system; and that we look for an expansion in co-op programs, in apprenticeships, and so on, and that we tell the public school system that's a serious endeavour that they need to be just as good at as preparation for university. We need to be doing that if we're going to have the success that is available out there in the changed conditions.

Fifty years ago, it was OK perhaps to have a school leaving age of 16. The real graduation age, as Mr Christie and others will tell you, becomes about 14. We need to be more ambitious than that; we need to be more intentional than that. We need to see that age being increased to 18 to allow kids not to be in the same classrooms they're in today, but to be in a learning experience that will benefit them. That's what we're asking the members of this House to endorse, is that further ambition—that what was good 50 years ago isn't the standard that we can aspire to today. We need to send a very strong signal that the young adults of today need to have those kinds of competing programs.

What do we propose that to be? We believe that for most kids it still means doing as well as they can academically, but we want them to develop as citizens. We want them to have an opportunity, the same one they get in many other countries, to find out what they're good at. That kind of learning can be done at the school in conjunction with apprenticeships, with workplaces, with an expanded co-op program. Many other countries use apprenticeships across a range of professions, not just the trades. We have an economic need to expand trades, but we also have opportunities in a number of other professions which could benefit those professions by preparing students by getting them to be in touch with their competencies.

Our current strategy is to leave these kids as an afterthought. This is an opportunity, today, for this House to do much better than that: to join with the aspirations of parents all around the province, to do something that is not just to the benefit of those parents and their kids to see those kids do as well as they can do, but which will benefit all the rest of the kids in school because, I can tell you, especially as the double cohort year is underway, teachers, principals and administrators are trying to find the resources to help these kids. They're giving attention to them, and that struggle is affecting everyone in the school. Conversely, they may be giving up or there may be just not enough resources to do it.

I can tell you again that this is an issue for all of society. Who do we think is going to become eligible for the community college courses that we so badly need, for the technicians, for industry, and so on, if 55% of the applied students that are supposed to be qualifying for that are failing their math courses?

There has been a 300% increase in tutors. There has been a burden on the private interest. We here represent the public interest, and we need to say strongly today that we will let no students be left behind.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I want to leave the bulk of the time to Mr Marchese, our education critic on this issue—

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (Vaughan-King-Aurora): And a good one he is.

Mr Bisson: —and a very good one he is. I want to put on the record a group of people who I think are forgotten altogether in this debate, and that is First Nations children. I represent, as my leader Howard Hampton represents, a large part of the province where First Nations communities are a very important part of our ridings.

I listen to this debate, and I can agree with the direction the member is trying to take on the motion. I don't want to go against what he's trying to say but I have to find some way to put on the record what is happening inside those communities. I just want to give you one example, and I want to bring to the attention of the members of the House the dismal state of education for many First Nations communities when it comes to kids in those communities.

I represent a community called Attawapiskat. The J.R. Nakogee school is a school that is situated in that community that has had to be abandoned because of diesel contamination underneath the school. The federal government has refused, for the last number of years, to address what to do with the school now that the school has been abandoned, and the children have been forced into portables, as you have never seen before. We have large overcrowding problems inside these portables.

We've got a situation where the federal government, who is responsible for education in the province of Ontario of First Nations' people because of the Indian Act, is basically not taking its responsibility seriously and, as a result, those kids are left to be out on their own, along with the rest of the members of that community when it comes to trying to find a way to provide education to those kids.

I received a letter by way of fax just recently from concerned citizens in the community of Attawapiskat with regard to this particular school. I don't have enough time in the debate to raise everything in this letter, but I can say that there is a hue and cry. There is a hue and cry from a number of First Nations communities like Attawapiskat that are saying, "The federal government has forgotten us altogether and they have made things worse by not giving our kids the opportunity to get good education by their lack of participation in trying to find solutions to the problems in the education system in First Nations communities."

This particular school can't be allowed to be left like that. I just wonder, when we have a debate here in the Legislature, what role we can find as a province to try to respond to the many needs of the First Nations communities, in particular the one having to do with education.

I have had discussions with the Minister of Education for the province and she has told me that the province of Manitoba and the province of Saskatchewan are both at wits' end with the federal government when it comes to their lack of trying to find a solution to what are very serious problems in the domain of education for First Nations communities. So I just want to put on the record this morning, in a very quick way, that we need to find a way as a province to respond to the children of Ontario who happen to live on reserves.

It is not good enough for us as fellow citizens of these people to say, "Well, it's federal responsibility and there's nothing we can do as a province." They are teaching the curriculum of the province of Ontario in those schools and, as such, I believe we have a responsibility. I will be calling on the provincial government and the Minister of Education to work with the community and myself to try to find a solution to what is a very pressing, real problem in communities like Attawapiskat that quite frankly, if not addressed soon, could turn out to be quite disastrous.

I just want to put that on record in the House, because we'll be hearing about that a little bit later, but I know my good friend Mr Marchese is going speak at length on this particular motion itself.

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak to this issue this morning in private members' hour. I want to respond to the comments made by the member for Parkdale-High Park, who is critic for the Liberal Party in the area of education. He has chosen with his private member's opportunity to highlight some of the plans the Liberal Party is putting forward in the Legislature and in the province in the area of education.

The Liberal Party has put forward a number of suggestions, and it is our understanding from preliminary study that we have done as a government that it would cost approximately $3 billion to implement all of the Liberal education plans. What we heard this morning has not indicated to us how you pay for that kind of spending. Maybe that's going to be forthcoming later on this morning.

The Liberal plan simply does not measure up to the high standards that we have set for education in the province of Ontario. I think it's important to point out that the Liberals, in their Excellence for All education plan, say that they will invest $1.6 billion over four years. That averages about $400 million per year. This year alone we have invested as a government over $560 million into the education system in Ontario. Let me provide the House with some examples based on the des-scription of the member for Parkdale-High Park's resolution.

First of all, he has mentioned the issue of curriculum. The government has responded to parents' concerns by providing a more challenging curriculum with specific, clear, consistent standards to enable students to get the skills that they need for success. This government is committed to providing students and teachers with the support and direction they need to meet the challenges of this new rigorous and relevant curriculum. We have committed $370 million over five years to give teachers and students the support they need to implement the new curriculum. Over the same period, we have dedicated another $80 million to provide other professional support and resources.

Boards and schools have a wide range of strategies and program options to support students who are struggling. For example, there are programs to assist in upgrading—credit-based upgrading courses; learning strategies courses; and literacy courses. For the year 2002-03 we have allocated almost $500 million to help students achieve these higher standards.

Funding for students who need extra help includes almost $3 million through the learning opportunities grant for such things as remedial reading programs, early literacy programs, which are programs targeted toward grades JK to 3, literacy and math programs in grades 7 to 10, summer school programs, and reduced class size for students at risk.

In May to June 2002, the government announced $30 million to expand the early reading strategy to grade 6 and introduce the early math strategy.

There are a number of members of our caucus who also wish to speak to this issue, so I'm going to leave my comments at that. We certainly look forward to the debate that will take place over the next 45 minutes and certainly look forward to hearing what other members have to say on this important issue.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I want to thank, first of all, and commend the member for Parkdale-High Park for bringing what I consider to be a very important resolution before this House identifying a specific group in the education system that is presented with a genuine challenge which, with some work by this Legislature, some work through the system, I think can be overcome, can be met. We can have some good degree of success following the recommendations the member has made.

I guess where I first saw the problem that existed—and we all knew it was in society and had been for some time—was when I was first elected. I was the critic for the field of correctional services. Gordon Walker was the minister of the day, and he brought the two opposition critics along. He was well ahead of his time for this government, of course. He was one of the real right-wingers in those days. Today, he would be a moderate. But I want to say that one of the things that I noted in touring some of the provincial correctional institutions was, in fact, that so many of the people who were there obviously did not have the tools that an education system could provide for them to be successful in society. Many were completely illiterate; others had only the very basic skills available to be able to succeed.

Now, this is not to say that everyone who is in that circumstance is going to end up in a correctional institution, but I think it's safe to say that there's going to be a larger proportion of people in correctional institutions who are people who haven't had the advantages that an education system can provide or has the potential to provide.

We remember as well, some of us, that when you went to secondary school there were people who were in a stream called "10 terminal," and that meant that after grade 10 they were sent out the door into the world of work, often without the kind of education that would give them access to the good jobs in society. The member has identified many of the problems that are there.

The District School Board of Niagara is the school board which I am familiar with; it's in the Niagara Peninsula. The Bailey bridges Report was an excellent report that dealt with the study of the new curriculum, and the following finding was made in the report. I thought this was very telling. "What has become very apparent is that the new curriculum, while itself a necessary change, was hurriedly put together, poorly planned, implemented in an unworkable fashion and grossly underfunded. The results show ... that students are frustrated beyond belief, parents have disengaged, teachers are overworked and continue to feel unappreciated, books are scarce and resources are few." That was in April 2002.

That's obviously a frustration with the circumstance that confronts people who aren't necessarily going to either a community college or on to university but they're going to go into the workforce at some point in time.

The suggestions that are made in the resolution lend themselves to support by all of us in this House. Obviously we do need better support and curriculum for the record number of students who are failing subjects in the new secondary school curriculum. We have to be able to help those people out.

"Special assistance for students who have not passed the Ontario secondary literacy test, with the goal of reducing failure rates by 50%": literacy is so very, very important. It grows in importance as our society advances, as the years go on.

"Raising the official school leaving age from 16 until 18, or until graduation from school or an equivalent learning program": obviously the member is not talking about having all students in what you would call a regular classroom setting. There are special settings for students who work well outside of that traditional classroom setting and who can advance themselves and receive special assistance. It's a matter of allowing them that educational experience, either until they graduate from school or, as we say, an equivalent learning program or until they reach the age of 18. That will equip these students far better than is the circumstance today as they head out into the world of work and out into society.

"Expanding co-op programs, vocational facilities, apprenticeship and apprenticeship programs": the people who will lecture us on this, I think with some validity, are people who come from some of the European experiences, where this is routine, where they recognize the importance of apprenticeships and getting people ready for the apprenticeship programs, where they understand the importance of vocational facilities and where co-op programs are routine. I must say I'm pleased to see those who will co-operate with the co-op programs; that is, those in business. Our business education council in the Niagara region, for instance, works with employers, works with the school systems and brings people together from all the boards of education so that these students have that kind of experience. We see it at the post-secondary level, but it's going to be important at the secondary school level in an increasing manner in the years to come.

"A meaningful high school diploma that combines academic achievement and workplace experience": I think people want to see that workplace experience given credit in terms of a diploma, that it isn't only the academic experience but also the workplace experience which is often so very valuable to those students.

"Establish a standing committee on education for the Legislature to annually review the funding formula's ability to meet the needs of Ontario students": I like the idea of a specific committee—we often call them a select committee, but in this case a standing committee—that will look at that funding formula. Many, many years ago, in one of my roles in the House I was the education critic. I sat down with Dr Bette Stephenson, and she was kind enough to provide a briefing to us. After that briefing on the funding formula in education, I can't say that I was still cognizant of all the intricacies of that formula. I don't know any Minister of Education who understood the formula. There must have been someone in the Ministry of Education who understood it, but that might even be questionable. So I think it would be good for a standing committee of the Legislature to assess the funding formula to see how it might be modified, to see if there's a need for an increase in funding or if there's a need to shift funding from one area to another in terms of the emphasis.

I want to say today that I believe this resolution, if it is concurred in by this House, would go a substantial way to improving the lot of students who are often forgotten in our education system. They have the same right as anybody else. They have a disadvantage in many cases because they don't have access to the top-paying jobs in our society. It is important that they be given a hand up, as people like to use that terminology, and I think the provisions of this resolution will do that.

What we need, of course, is a school system that has vibrancy, where you have teachers who are excited about going to work instead of being constantly criticized, almost tormented by criticism from this government.

I look forward to this resolution passing, hopefully getting some considerable support from all members of the House.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): I've got to say I agree with pretty well everything the member for St Catharines has said and pretty well agree with much of what the critic from Parkdale-High Park has said.

Mr Marchese: I disagree with two basic things, and I'll get to that, because I've got 11 minutes, mercifully, thank you. Two of the things I disagree with, Dominic Agostino, are, one, raising the official school-leaving age from 16 "to" 18, I'm assuming, and the other is funding.

The member for Waterloo-Wellington mentioned that. I disagree with 99% of everything else the member from Waterloo said, because he read the script. They wrote it for him and they told him, "This is what you've got to say." They can't leave those notes. They can't just throw them away and say what they feel. They write him a speech saying, "Oh, we put more money into the education system." It's laughable. No one in the province believes what these people have done. Everyone knows $2.2 billion has been taken out of the education system—

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): Is that what it is?

Mr Marchese: You've got my buddy, who I think is a buddy from time to time. Where are you from, my friend?

Mr Dunlop: Simcoe North.

Mr Marchese: Simcoe North. He was saying something about my facts.

Mr Dunlop: Your facts are way out of whack.

Mr Marchese: My facts are way out of whack. Some $2.2 billion has been taken about of the education system. Everyone knows about it, but the member over there, including the rest of the caucus who are sleep-walking through this entire political process, says I'm out of whack with the numbers. We've been cutting education assistants, special ed, ESL, music teachers and librarians. We're short $1 billion in terms of teacher negotiations because the money's not flowing through and he says my facts are out of whack. You've got to wake up. You and your other buddies have got to wake up to the problem.

I know you put up Rozanski, to come up with somebody to help you out so you could cherry-pick a couple of ideas and say, "Ernie's got a couple of good ideas." I know you've done that. You know it too. Stop the game. Everybody knows—

Mr Dunlop: What do you have to say today other than nothing?

Mr Marchese: I know the bright lights are coming on soon. The member from Simcoe will be speaking very shortly. I'm looking forward to those remarks.

This curriculum has been introduced in haste. Everyone knows it except them. This is why it's so laughable. They don't understand educational curriculum. That's why they blah, blah throughout this whole process. Education reform has been introduced at such a speed that every teacher in this province has criticized it, including the 25% to 30% of those teachers who voted for them, including those members.

Yes, the curriculum has been made tougher. No doubt about that. We agree with that. Yes, I've got some disagreement about how they did it, first in haste, and secondly, they started at the secondary level instead of starting at the primary grades, the earlier grades, as a way of logically building it up. They started it the other way around. How dumb these people are, and they don't even realize it.

They create two streams, the academic and the applied, and yes, the people in the academic stream will survive the rigour of the new curriculum, but the young people in the applied stream are not doing very well. What are they doing for them? Nothing. We know that, the teachers know that, the parents know that, and the Tories still blah, blah, blah about how much money they're putting into the education system and how much they're helping those poor kids.

I've got to tell you, Speaker, that those poor kids in the applied stream are not rich babies. They're not rich adolescents. They don't come from wealthy homes. They come from the working class. They come from poverty. They come from homes where there is a great deal of stress—financial, psychological and social problems that these people are doing nothing to help with.

Please, the next time you read your speech, throw it away and say what you feel. Don't read the garbage they give you, because it doesn't mean anything.

Mr Dunlop: The $1-million-an-hour deficit you left us with. You don't want to talk about that, do you?

Mr Marchese: The $1-million-an-hour deficit we left as a government. Here you have a government, with a good economy, throwing out $10 billion every year for income tax cuts, and he doesn't speak about the deficit he's leaving in our health care system, the deficit he's leaving in our education system, the deficit he has caused to our water and the death that has happened as a result of the money they've taken out of the system. There's $10 billion going out every year. You think nothing has suffered? They're blind to the problems. Everyone in Ontario knows the problems that have been caused by the deficit they have caused.

He laughs. He laughs at the Walkerton disaster. He laughs at the thousands and thousands of active parents involved in education who are not laughing about the cuts they're enduring. They're not laughing at that, but he laughs at it. In a good economy they have devastated all the things for which we, as a government, are responsible, including water, education, health and our senior citizens who are suffering from lack of funds in home care. And he laughs so heartily. I wouldn't laugh.

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: I know you're not laughing. I know you know you are in trouble politically, and it's good; it feels good. I laugh at that. I take pleasure in that.

Mr Dunlop: You should worry about yourself.

Mr Marchese: No, I don't worry about myself. I worry for the people. I don't worry for me; I worry for the people you have attacked. I worry for the vulnerable you have attacked, in a good economy. Imagine what you would have done if you had been faced with our recession in 1990. If you could devastate services in a good economy, imagine what you would have done in a bad economy. He laughs so heartily, the member from—

Mr Dunlop: Simcoe North.

Mr Marchese:—Simcoe North, my good friend from Simcoe North, Mr Dunlop, God bless his little soul.

Coming back to the Liberal resolution: I agree with much of what is said there; no disagreement. If you look at our plan, much of what they're talking about is in here.

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): Have you guys released that yet?

Mr Marchese: We released it before the Liberal plan, for Dominic Agostino, in case he didn't know.

Mr Agostino: Did anybody notice? What if you release a platform and nobody comes?

Mr Marchese: Well, we're doing our best, Dominic.

I disagree profoundly with the Liberal position that says students should stay till age 18.

Mr Sorbara: You disagree?

Mr Marchese: Gregorio, it's a dumb idea, I've got to tell you. It's a dumb idea, boys. Keeping students till age 18 is not smart.

Mr Bradley: I'm telling Earl Manners.

Mr Marchese: Member for St Catharines, I know Earl Manners has taken that position, but it's not a smart one, I'm telling you.

Mr Sorbara: But 50 years ago they said that about high school: "Let them go after grade 8."

Mr Marchese: Gregory, let me explain. Give me a break. I've only got three minutes. Let me tell you the problem with this, all right? After age 16, if a student has a problem, a behavioural problem, a learning problem, other social problems he may have, intellectual or emotional, you're saying to him, "You're going to have to stay."

Mr Sorbara: No. Read the resolution. That's not what we're saying.

Mr Marchese: Oh. Oh? The resolution says yes.

Mr Sorbara: The resolution says there will be programs.

Mr Marchese: The resolution says, "Raising the official school leaving age from 16 until 18," although it should read "to 18," I'm assuming.

But your little Liberal book that you guys got says you're going to keep them there till age 18. I think it's wrong. If students have a problem and they need to leave or want to leave, you can't hold them back. I tell you, teachers are not going to be happy holding on to students who desperately want to leave or need to leave.

Mr Sorbara: You're misrepresenting the program.

Mr Marchese: No, siree. Maybe you need to refudge it somehow as you re-present your program. But I've got to tell you, if there is a problem, the way to deal with it is in the early years, not to try to hold them at age 16. The expenditure of effort to hold them until age 16 is just a difficult thing to do. You are endangering the classroom when you're holding students who can't, ought not to be, do not want to be in that classroom.

In our plan, we propose—

Mr Agostino: You just want to give up on them.

Mr Marchese: No, Dominico Agostino, listen carefully. I have two minutes. The NDP guarantees “a training seat, academic upgrading opportunity, apprenticeship position or job placement assistance for every unemployed Ontarian, aged 16-18.” We say that in our plan. That's what you've got to do.

1040

We're not abandoning those kids. We're saying that you've got to give those opportunities. But to hold them in school, you're not doing students a favour—those who are leaving, those who are staying—and the teachers who need to teach them.

Here's my second problem with your plan. In your little Liberal book, you say you're going to spend 1.6 billion bucks. You say that you're not going to raise income taxes to get the money.

Mr Agostino: That's right.

Mr Marchese: Dominic Agostino says, “That's right.” He says they're going to get it from the $2.2-billion corporate tax cuts you guys introduced last year. Here's the problem for the Liberals. The Tories have only cut $700 million of that corporate tax; the rest has been deferred. So the Liberals are playing with 700 million bucks plus the tax credit that they say is $500 million, and only a couple of million has been spent so far. They've got $700 million for health, education, environment, social services, home care—whatever you can think of. They just don't have the money to keep their promises, I'm telling you.

Applause.

Mr Marchese: Please don't clap for me, member from Wellington, because I already disagreed with what you said.

I'm telling you, citizens out there, without reinvesting in education, we can't do what the Liberals are saying. It's a matter of trust. It's a matter of reinvesting. For that, you've got to say to the public, if you've got to reinvest, “We've got to go after somebody for the money.” Without that, you can't have the good programs the Liberals are talking about.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): It's my pleasure to join in this debate on this Liberal private member's resolution today. I'd like to start by talking—

Mr Marchese: Don't read the speech. Throw it out.

Mr Miller: Thank you very much, Rosario.

I'd like to begin by talking about the strike that's going on partly in my riding right now, the Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board strike. We just this week passed legislation to end the secondary part of that strike. Although the third party did not on the first day, on Monday, give unanimous consent, I was happy to see that they did on Tuesday. It was really important that those secondary students get back to school because they were looking at the possibility of losing their school year. So I was very pleased that all three parties agreed to the legislation and legislated an end to the strike as recommended by the Education Relations Commission, which had ruled that those kids' year might be in jeopardy.

There still is, though, the elementary strike which is going on in the riding. I'm hopeful that both parties will get together and bring an end to that strike. Whether they agree to mediation or agree to arbitration, I would certainly like to see an end to that strike for the benefit of all the students in my riding and the surrounding ridings that are covered by the Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board. I certainly hope the parties get together and end that strike, because in a strike, really, nobody wins and certainly the students are the losers.

I would like to talk about some of the programs the government is doing in terms of expanding school/work opportunities. I would also like to mention that I do have four children in the education system: my son Winston in grade 8; Stuart in grade 10; our daughter Renée, who is in the double cohort year, grade 12; and our daughter Abigale, who is in her second year at McGill. So I am actively interested in what's going on in the education system. I have to say that they're getting a great education and are working hard at doing so.

This government has increased funding for the Ontario youth apprenticeship program, which I think is certainly a program that works. It provides very useful skills for those who try to get into a trade.

Ontario's tough new curriculum requires all school boards to provide co-op education, work experience and school/work transition programs. Through the Passport to Prosperity, a joint initiative of the Ministries of Education and Training, Colleges and Universities, and 26 business education councils, the government is seeking to expand opportunities for students to participate in programs such as co-op education, school/work transitions, job shadowing and the Ontario youth apprenticeship program, and increasing employer involvement in these programs. I think that's really important.

It's nice to hear that the Liberals would like to see a meaningful high school diploma that combines academic achievement and workplace experience. In fact, the new high school program does include both academic and workplace preparation.

Students currently earn credits toward the Ontario secondary school diploma through a combination of school and workplace-based learning experiences. Some choose co-op programs to test out specific career options, some choose school/work transitions to prepare for entry into workplace opportunities or specific college programs, and others choose the Ontario youth apprenticeship program to get a head start on their apprenticeship career.

The ministry provides two certificates for students who leave school before earning their Ontario secondary school diploma. I think that's important. The grade 10 literacy test is not a requirement for either of these certificates.

In addition, the ministry is piloting the Ontario Skills Passport, which provides clear descriptions of skill requirements for entry-level work in today's labour market. The skills students demonstrate in work placements are documented by employers using the Ontario Skills Passport. I think that's important, and we're working with employers to provide real jobs and find occupations that people enjoy and find fulfilling and worthwhile.

I'd also like to talk about our standing committee on education. Our government has listened to the concerns of Ontarians about the student-focused funding formula. We have worked consistently with our partners in education on working groups and committees to refine the funding formula. We have implemented many of the recommendations of these working groups and committees. For example, this year we implemented the recommendations of two working groups: the working group on the learning opportunities grant and the working group on declining enrolment.

This year, Dr Mordechai Rozanski, president of the University of Guelph, is leading the Education Equality Task Force in a review of the student-focused funding formula. Dr Rozanski's recommendations will ensure that student-focused funding continues to promote the principles of fairness, responsiveness to student needs, and accountability; that the stability of the education system improves; that the constitutional and statutory framework for education in Ontario is respected; and that the fiscal situation of the province is taken into account. I think that's an important point, because that's something the Liberals usually do not take into account as they promise more and more different programs that they don't really figure out how they're going to fund.

I think the funding formula makes sense in this province, and of course across the country many different areas use the funding formula. I speak coming from the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, where if you're in some of the rural areas they don't necessarily have a huge tax base. I think it's a wonderful thing that no matter whether you're from a poor area of the province, you still get a set amount of money going to you, the student, to provide equal opportunity in education. I think that's very important, that you don't have to live in a rich neighbourhood to get a rich education.

The Education Equality Task Force has listened carefully to our education partners to help us identify the best way to fund school boards. The task force has met with more than 900 presenters. There were 25 days of presentations and approximately 775 submissions.

I'm using up most of my time, and I know the member from Simcoe North would like to speak, so at this time I will allow time for him.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): I'm certainly here in full support of the resolution by my colleague from Parkdale-High Park. He has a profound and deep interest in helping students in this province, who have been in a whirlwind of upheaval as a result of this government's reckless education policies, which were a formal part of their political agenda. We know they were proud to say that they were going to put education into a crisis. The original minister was true to his word, and the ministers who have followed are still following that path of crisis. We've got this latest minister now who has torn the Ottawa, Toronto and Hamilton schools into total upheaval with these appointed so-called supervisors.

Frankly, parents are totally fed up with this government's callous, reckless approach to education. They've gone through this not for one year, two years, three years; they've gone through this for almost eight years.

In my riding of Eglinton-Lawrence I've got some of the finest schools in Canada, I think. They've been made into these excellent educational institutions because of the hard work of the whole community, including the parents, the janitorial staff, the neighbourhood, the local elected trustees, all the volunteers. They've made these schools, like John Ross Robertson, Allenby school, John Wanless, Lawrence Park, Blessed Sacrament, Ledbury, Regina Mundi—these are superb schools, but they have had a heck of a time coping with the upheaval. This ludicrous funding formula, which from day one was not workable, this one-size-fits-all formula was something this government imposed without ever looking at the impact. It's taken three years to come up with some kind of task force that's basically going to finally say what everybody said three years ago, that the formula was a farce, that it didn't pay attention to the individual needs of schools in urban centres, rural areas or special-needs schools.

I think it's time to support an attempt to get rid of the education deficit in this province, because our educational institutions, whether they be at the elementary or the high school level, are resources we should feed, not starve. We shouldn't be using them as political footballs, as they've been used for seven or eight years. They have kicked around the teachers, and now they're kicking around the elected trustees. Then they kick around the janitorial staff, and then it's the parents' fault, and then it's the students who are at fault.

Frankly, everybody's fed up with this confrontational conflict, this bulldozer approach to education. That's why I support this resolution that talks about the fact that parents, teachers and students have a lot to offer in making our education system work so that we produce good citizens, well-trained people for the workforce, people who contribute to society, whether they be doctors, artists, musicians. This is what people like Ryerson wanted to do with public education. This government has been almost hell-bent on destroying that.

I look at a perfect example of what we can achieve by supporting students in our schools. There's a school in the west end of Toronto where my brother teaches. It's called Archbishop Romero high school, in one of the most challenging areas in Canada. The parents of the children, the high school students in that school, come from every part of the world. They speak every language conceivable. Many of the parents of these students have two or three jobs. The students themselves have two or three jobs, but they come to this high school in great harmony and with a great sort of vigour to learn.

I'll give you an example of one of the things they're doing in that school. Archbishop Romero is near a very polluted creek called Lavender Creek, which is adjacent to Black Creek. They've been in that creek. These are so-called teenagers we always like to beat up on. They're in there with their rubber boots pulling out shopping carts, steel drums and mounds of garbage. They're testing the water. They're writing letters to the Ministry of the Environment asking for the water to be tested. They're begging the Ministry of Transportation to clean up the garbage because a lot of the property adjacent to Lavender Creek belongs to the Ministry of Transportation. They have left garbage on the banks of Lavender Creek for the last 10 years and refuse to clean it up.

These students are using global positioning devices. They're mapping the area. They're bringing in heritage experts. Again, these are young boys and girls, 13 and 14 years of age. They're doing phenomenal things, trying to clean up a creek. They're totally engaged, totally involved. They feel strongly about this because it is in their backyard. They're making their community better. They're learning things. You should see them mapping on the computers. You should see them going through the analysis of the water pollution that's taking place. They've been marking the outlet areas for pollution.

Yet this government does nothing to help those students at all. In fact, do you know what it does? It imposes on those students that literacy test they all have to take in grade 10. Do you know what happens when they write that literacy test? There's a very high rate of failure in that school. Every time they get the results, the whole student body is demoralized because they do poorly on the literacy test. So this government is blaming them. Do you know why they do poorly on the literacy test? It's because 90% of them do not have English as their first language.

This government punishes these students, demoralizes them with this test that's a one-size-fits-all, that doesn't take into account that maybe the students who live in one part of the province or the city have a different cultural background, language background, linguistic background than students who may live in Leaside or Windsor.

This is the type of callous attitude this government has. Rather than giving students a pat on the back, rather than saying, "We're here to help you. We're here to appreciate you. We're here to get you through the rough spots"—no, they're there to be punitive. They're there to basically say, "Listen, kid. You didn't make it. You're going to have to drop out. You don't count." That's what the kids say: "The government doesn't think I count, and I think I'm going to drop out, sir."

Let's stop this recklessness. Let's start looking upon these students as human beings who deserve our help rather than our attacks.

Mr Dunlop: It's a pleasure to rise this morning to say a few words about the resolution of the member from Parkdale-High Park. I want to leave about a minute and a half for Mr Barrett to put something on the record as well.

I guess the people in the province of Ontario are going to have some tough decisions to make in the future as we start talking about the platforms of these political parties. The first thing I'd like to say is that we've been following very closely the Liberal promises and the flip-flopping and the dodging of questions here, there and everywhere across the province. The fact of the matter is that right now people in the province of Ontario are looking at about $14 billion in extra expenditures promised by the Leader of the Opposition. That works out to be about $1,250 or $1,300 for every man, woman and child in the province. I guess their explanation will have to be, "Where are we going to find $1,300 for every man, woman and child in this province to make up for our promises? Do we go into huge deficits again?" We had our buddy over here who doesn't care about deficits. "Are we going to raise taxes?" We know you voted against every tax cut that was ever made here. Or are you going to cut programs? Or are you just not going to deliver on your promises? That's what I would expect to happen.

Interjection.

Mr Dunlop: The member over here from wherever he's from, chirping away as usual, has always made a few comments. But the fact is that I expect it'll be something like what we're probably going to hear this afternoon under the Romanow report. The Romanow report has come out—

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): It came out an hour ago.

Mr Dunlop: Yes, and I understand they're asking for $7 billion. Everyone knew we were being shorted by the federal government, and already they're saying, "We'll phase it in" over how many years. That's what will happen, because we know that's the type of promise they carry on with.

Second of all, I want to say something about our school boards. Since I've been a member elected here in 1999, spending in the province of Ontario's education system, the money that has been transferred to the 72 school boards, has gone from $13.16 billion to $14.25 billion.

Interjection.

Mr Dunlop: You know that's not true. To stand there and say that, you have no idea what you're talking about. The fact is, education spending has increased. My two major school boards in the county of Simcoe have now passed half a billion dollars in spending for the first time in history by those two boards, the Simcoe-Muskoka board and the Simcoe Catholic board, and we're pleased with that.

As a former parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Education, I've visited a number of schools throughout this province. What bothers me is the fearmongering I hear from the other side, both parties. If you've ever been in a school, you'd see the spirit that's in the school; you'd see the discipline that the teachers have; you'd see how well the students coordinate and how well they perform. It's very, very disappointing to hear this fear-mongering continue.

Mr Dunlop: I'd like to turn over the last little while—I know I'm getting under their skin because they can't stand the truth—to my colleague the member for Haldimand-Norfolk.

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I appreciate my neighbour making mention of the work we've been doing with respect to finding solutions to closing rural high schools. I've been fighting these high school closures with a number of communities for a number of years. Burford, for example: we lost that school. It did not open this spring. I worked with high schools in Port Dover, Valley Heights and more recently with Delhi. There have been very heated discussions of late in the community of Delhi. A citizens' group has established a petition to ask for a moratorium on school closures, and I have also created a petition to that effect, which members will recall I tabled several weeks ago, and most recently tabled both petitions yet again yesterday. Despite what people may hear or read in the media, I was the first one to call for a moratorium on high school closures. I did that on February 8, 2000, well before any member opposite—

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member for Parkdale-High Park has two minutes to respond.

Mr Kennedy: I appreciate the participation of all members of the House. I regret a little bit the limitations of this format. I hear from the government members and they want to say everything is OK. I appreciate that, except this is a little bit too important. We stand as members of this House, at a certain, particular point in time; these kids are trying to graduate this year. This House, whatever its strengths and weaknesses, was the source of a lot of their extra difficulty. We're not saying that the government of the day invented struggling kids. But it is obvious, on the evidence that this government itself pays a lot of money to collect through literacy tests and so on, that these kids are struggling. Why spend $31 million to find that out if you're not going to do something about it?

We need a signal, a message from this House to those kids. Their parents do everything they can. There's been a 300% increase in private tutoring in this province in the last five years, and they're paying it out of pocket: people like Lee Franzak, who has two kids and pays $300 a month to tutor them. Most families can't do that. Publicly funded education needs to pick up the slack. The students are there. I want to reference Richard Roy, who's in grade 11, and he had the courage to tell us his marks have dropped from 69% to 54%; the concepts are too complicated, the curriculum is moving too fast, he doesn't have a textbook and they're giving him photocopied stuff. Mr Roy has the courage to stand up. He needs our assistance here today.

We have dropout rates that we simply can't afford. We can't have, from this House, a message of condemnation for kids who need to go forward. There have to be corrections that occur this year. We've put forward a plan. The school moratorium was a different part of that plan. But to the members opposite who talk to us about cost, I say to them, can we afford not to act and make these kids fully part of society? Give them some success. See them get a message from this House that they belong and that we believe, despite the extra barriers we've put up for them, that they will finally succeed and not be left behind.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allocated for debate on this ballot item. I will place the questions needed to decide this at 12 o'clock noon.

ONTARIO ELECTION DATES

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (Vaughan-King-Aurora): I move that, in the opinion of this House, the Ernie Eves government be directed to bring forward legislation to establish fixed election dates as outlined in the Ontario Liberal Democratic Charter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Mr Sorbara has moved ballot item number 62, private member's notice of motion number 19. The member for Vaughan-King-Aurora has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Sorbara: I'm pleased and delighted to be moving this resolution and to be speaking to it in this private members' hour, really for two reasons. First of all, under the circumstances that govern my daily life, I do not get as much opportunity as I would like to participate in the debates in this place. Secondly, and more importantly for me, this resolution is extremely important. As a democrat and a parliamentarian and as someone who believes in our responsibility to, in an ongoing way, reform our democratic process, it is something that is extremely important to me.

The essence of the resolution is simple, that is, that it is our responsibility as parliamentarians in Ontario to be constantly reforming our democratic system so it remains vibrant and strong. I was so pleased when our leader, Dalton McGuinty, the member for Ottawa South, put forward an entire package of democratic reforms, which we will be moving forward with after the next election. Anyone who wants to review those in detail can visit our Web site to do that.

The essence of what I hope to achieve here—our system is falling into significant disrepair in Ontario. Democracy is not strong in Ontario. If I had longer, I would make that same argument at the national level and right across Canada's 10 provinces. It's our responsibility to change that; that's the first point.

The second point is that in our system, the real problem, as it is in so many other systems, is that the power is being concentrated year by year, decade by decade, increasingly in one person. In Ontario it's the Premier; it's Ernie Eves. The power of this Parliament, the power of other components of our democratic system, is wasting away, and government after government continues to vest more power in the Premier. I would venture to say that cabinet ministers in this government feel powerless to achieve their objectives. Certainly in this Parliament, the frustration of members of this Parliament is almost breathtaking in their inability to actually achieve and participate in democratic decision-making. I have the advantage of having sat here for 10 years beginning in 1985. On my return in 1999, frankly, I was shocked at how increasingly irrelevant what happens here has become to the life and times and democratic rights of the people of Ontario.

Now, we can't change all that with the reform that is the subject of this resolution, but we can go a long way. I say to my colleagues in this House, the only way to redress the balance of power that Ernie Eves, the Premier, vests in himself is to start to break up that power and put it elsewhere. This resolution is magnificent in its simplicity. Take away from the Premier the power to decide when the voters of Ontario shall have the right to be consulted and go to the polls. Take that power away from him and vest it in our constitution and have our constitution set fixed dates for elections—in our proposals, every four years. Think of the variety of ways in which things would change if that happened. We know that an election is coming up. Only Ernie Eves knows when that election is going to take place. The former Premier Bob Rae described it as the divine right of Premiers to decide when the people shall be consulted. That right belongs with the people, not with the Premier. If we break up that power in the Premier's office in this small way, then the abuses committed by this government and former governments in trying to manipulate the public will change as well.

For example, we know that an election is coming up when Ernie Eves decides that the time is right because, as we watch our televisions every night, suddenly there are millions and millions of dollars being spent by the Ontario government in advertising to tell the people of Ontario how great they've been and how great they are going to be—millions and millions of dollars to try to manipulate the electoral process. If you take that power away from the Premier, this Parliament will also have the opportunity to regulate and moderate the government's appetite to abuse taxpayer dollars taken for that kind of manipulative advertising.

In addition to that, if you take that power away from the Premier, you give everyone in Ontario a fair opportunity to prepare in an intelligent and informed way, to reconsider which party and which government they want to have in power in Ontario. As president of the party, I spend a lot of my time talking to potential candidates who are interested in running for us. One of the most difficult questions put to me in that capacity is—they always say the same thing: "When is the election going to be? Because I would like to do it. I think I've got something to contribute." When you say, "Well, it may be three months away or it may be a year away. The Tories will do polling. They'll start spending, and if they feel like the time is right, they'll pull the plug and Parliament will be dissolved and we'll have an election," invariably, the response I get from potential candidates is, "How in the world can one regulate one's life by that system?"

I invite members opposite to consider just this. Ask yourself, if we were to institute this reform, if we were actually to change our system so that elections occurred every four years in Ontario by virtue of our Constitution and not the divine right of Premiers, which of you would be standing up after that reform and saying to your constituents and to the people of Ontario, "This is horrible. What we should be doing is putting that power to call elections back in the hands of one person"?

In our municipal system, we're quite content every three years to allow municipal councils to go back to their voters to seek a new mandate. It would be horrific in the city of Toronto or in any municipality to suggest that a municipal election should occur when the mayor thinks the time is right. That would be totally unacceptable.

So think of it in this fashion, and I'm sure members opposite, when they consider it—imagine that in Ontario each of us knew at the time of an election when the next election would be. Which of you on the other side would be standing up and saying, "This is horrific. We should no longer have fixed dates for elections. It should be up to the Premier of the province to determine when that should happen"?

This reform and the other reforms that are contained in our party's democratic charter—

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): We would be governors.

Mr Sorbara: My friend from Simcoe says we would be governors here. They're worried about the invasion of the American system. That is patent nonsense, I tell my friend. Our proposals protect all of the important parts of our democratic institutions as well as the possibility that a government would fall by losing the confidence of this House. These democratic reforms, when implemented, sir—and I tell you that they will be implemented—will put the democratic power in this province back in the hands of the people to whom it belongs, and that is the people of the province.

We're going to be putting severe restrictions on fundraising. We're going to put very severe restrictions on the government's ability to rob taxpayers of their funds with partisan political advertising.

But the one reform I am advocating here today and that I'm inviting my friends opposite to consider and support is that the power to manipulate and call election dates in Ontario must come to an end. That power belongs to the people. If we pass this resolution this morning we'll be taking a significant step to make our democracy stronger, and I commend it to my friends in the House.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): As the member of our caucus responsible for the democratic issues agenda that we have launched and that we will be talking more about later, I want to be able to respond to this, and I know my good friend Mr Christopherson from Hamilton wants to speak about this as well.

I want to say, first of all, we will support this resolution. We think quite frankly that it's not a bad idea. The member, Mr Sorbara, is right when he says there's far too much ability for Premiers of all stripes—I will not just argue the current Premier, but Premiers before and, I would argue, Premiers after—to have too much power in being able to manipulate things when it comes to elections. The idea of setting a term or date as far as when elections should be called is not a bad one.

I also want to say to the government members across the way, it's not a concept that's too far away from the province of Ontario. We have set terms for municipal mayors and municipal councillors and school board trustees. The lower level of governments that gets their authority through this Legislature already have set dates for when elections are called and how long the terms are going to be. This is not something that would be out of the ordinary. I would argue that you need to have at least four to five years as far as how long the term should be—that would probably be the fair thing to do—and set the election date for a spring or fall election, considering Ontario for both geographic or weather reasons. We should be trying to pull the election off at a time where the weather is conducive to door-knocking and doing the kinds of things that we do during election time.

I think, however, that the resolution stops short on a whole host of issues when it comes to democracy, and I want to talk about that in some detail here this morning. But I just want to say up front that the issue of setting when an election is going to be called is not what's going to curb the power of the Premier. I think there's a whole bunch of other issues you've got to deal with when it comes to how you rein in the power of the Premier from exercising too much authority over elected members in the Legislature.

We know now that the problem we have under the current system—and it doesn't matter whose Premier is there, which political party—the Premier gets to appoint cabinet, the Premier gets to decide when the election is, the Premier is the head of the executive council and, as such, is able to exercise a lot of power, especially over his own caucus, by right of being party leader and head of the caucus at the same time. What ends up happening far too often is that members of the government—in this case, this government—basically don't have an opportunity to vote as they might want to vote because they're held, by the power of the Premier, from voting against. For example, if a backbencher who is trying to get into cabinet is seen as being critical of his government, critical of his Premier, the chances of getting into cabinet are pretty slight. So the Premier holds a lot of power over individual members just in that right.

That's why we in the New Democratic Party propose a much different approach to how this Legislature should work. The issue to us, as New Democrats, is not just the power that's in the hands of the Premier, because the argument could be made that the Premier has to have certain powers. To us, the issue is how this assembly doesn't work. Currently what you've got are rules in this assembly that say the government can introduce a bill for second reading on Monday and by Wednesday it's all over. All you need is a time allocation on Thursday and a bill gets passed into law, with no committee hearings, no opportunity for public input, no serious reconsideration of the points in the bill. The government just does as it pleases, and there is nothing anybody can do about it because of the rules of this House.

That's why we in the New Democratic caucus are proposing a different approach to this problem. We believe that, first of all, you have to change the way the Legislature itself operates. One of the ways to do that is to do what is done in most parliamentary democracies in the world. In fact, 99% of them have what's called a system of proportional representation. That is, simply said, on election day the parties that get elected end up with an amount of seats as per the percentage of vote they got in the election.

For example, in the provincial election where, let's say, the Conservatives got 43% of the vote, the idea would be that they would get no more than 43% of the seats in the House. The reason behind that is, clearly the people of Ontario have said they support the government to a position of 43%, but they don't want to give them all of the power. They want to be able to take the direction of the government, but not a majority of the people in Ontario support the direction of the Conservative government. So by a system of proportional representation, the rest of the seats in the House would be apportioned to a party based on their percentage of vote, which means, at the end of the day, that we'd all have to work together.

If you take a look at, for example, the German system, at both their levels of government, in both the lower house and the upper house of the German Parliament, what they have is a system where, when electors go to the polls, they have two ballots. They have one ballot where they vote for the party and the other ballot where they vote for the local member. They count up the local members first. They say, "Here's who is elected to represent you in your riding," and you would do that just as we do now and, at the end, they would tally the percentage of vote for the party. Then they would top up those parties based on what they got when it came to the preferential ballot of the party.

That works rather well. In the case of Germany, for example, Schroeder won yet another government, but he has to form a coalition with other parties in the legislature of Germany in order to govern. So what you've got is a social democratic labour party that doesn't have a clear majority, that has to work with other members of the assembly to pass whatever bills come through their House. I would argue that's not a bad idea, and I just want to revisit a couple of very specific votes that we've had in this House where that might have made a big difference.

Let's just take the amalgamations of the cities of Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and Sudbury. We in this Legislature all know that every party in this Legislature had members on both sides of that issue. In our caucus we had a member who felt strongly that you should have moved toward the issue of amalgamation in his particular community. In other parties, such as was the case in the Conservative Party, there were members in their caucuses who disagreed, but because of party discipline members voted according to their own party lines. Because the government had a majority of the seats in the House, even though they didn't have a majority in the vote—they had 43% of the vote but over 60% of the seats—the government did what it wanted. To the chagrin of their own Conservative members, they ended up amalgamating cities, against the wishes of their own backbench members. I say, if we had a system of proportional representation in that vote, each member in the House would have had to stand up and vote accordingly, because then the onus becomes the onus of the member and no one party clearly has the majority. The government would have had to work with the opposition parties to be able to pass or have that legislation defeated.

My basic point is this: I don't believe that vote would have passed, because almost all of the members, except for a few, were opposed to the amalgamation, and there were enough members in the government caucus who were opposed that, if we had been under a system of proportional representation, that would have never happened. The city of Toronto would have never been the big megacity it is today. I think probably we would have been a heck of a lot better off if that would have happened.

The same could be said for a lot of the other decisions that this government is making around the privatization of health care, of Ontario Hydro and of our school system by allowing charter schools to be introduced in the province. My argument is that under a system of proportional representation, the government could never have been able to pass legislation like that because clearly there were not a majority of members in this House who agreed with those basic principles. Therefore, if it can't pass here, then maybe it shouldn't pass at all. Maybe we are representatives of the people and maybe at the end of the day we can do our jobs better in representing what has to be done here in the Legislature.

I will support the member's motion because it is part of what I believe we need to do, but I think the bigger issue here is that if we want to curb the power of the executive and of the Premier, you really have to come at it from a set of rules. One of the basic ones is how we elect people in this province. We will be talking as New Democrats more about that as the winter goes on.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I'm very pleased to have the chance to rise and respond to the resolution brought forward by the honourable member from Vaughan-King-Aurora and the Liberal Party this morning.

The resolution we are debating calls for fixed election terms of four years and is part of the Liberals' democratic charter. I could go on and on about how I feel about this democratic charter. Unfortunately, due to time constraints, I can only address the part of the charter that the honourable member has chosen to focus our attention on today.

I can understand the honourable member's sensitivity, as he was a cabinet minister in the Peterson government that went to the polls early, after barely three years, in 1990, after being elected in 1987. I read very succinctly in a book written by Ian Scott—who was the Attorney General of the day—that the member wasn't happy about that particular decision, and we know the decision resulted in the public throwing out the Peterson Liberals in 1990. I would say that democracy is working well in this province today because democracy is the public holding the government to account in an election. That's what happened in 1990.

Also, the member comes forth and says, "There's manipulation." I don't know whether he was referring to the fact that the federal Liberal government called an early election in the year 2000, after barely three years. Our record is that when we were elected in 1995, we called an election after four years, in 1999, with respect to getting another mandate, which we received in 1999. If there's any manipulation, take a look at the federal Liberal government.

Our current system is based on the long-standing tradition of the Westminster parliamentary model imported from Britain. That's what our model is based on. It's not based on the US model of fixed dates for presidential, Senate and Congressional elections. Our system has been in place since Confederation and has been used successfully by governments of all stripes. This resolution would mark a real departure from this model and signal the beginning of a system that only two jurisdictions use worldwide. That's right: only two other jurisdictions use the fixed term system—only two. Those countries are the United States and New Zealand. Not one other province uses such a fixed term system at this time. Why would we want to put ourselves in a situation that separates Ontario from the nine other provinces and the territories, let alone the federal government?

In August 2001, the British Columbia Liberal government did pass a bill that calls for elections on the second Monday in May every four years, but it has not yet come into effect. This bill comes into effect by regulation. These regulations are set out under order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and as of November 21, 2002, these regulations did not exist in British Columbia.

I am not sure if it is a reluctance to actually make this legislation binding, but it wouldn't surprise me. It just reminds me of the flip-flopping that the Liberal Party is becoming famous for. The Liberals claim that fixed terms would simplify election planning. But is this enough to justify overturning centuries of parliamentary tradition? In the United States, fixed terms are the norm rather than the exception. In contrast, British and Canadian parliamentary tradition has long agreed with the idea that responsible government requires flexible election terms. This not only enhances democracy but makes government more accountable to the electorate. In the United States, fixed electoral terms often lead to situations where the executive branch of government finds itself in the position of a lame duck. Too often political parties are so focused on the next fixed electoral date that they ignore the important issues of the day, and unfortunately those issues are pushed aside.

We, on this side of the House, believe this would be an affront to our democratic traditions. The best check on government power is to have a non-fixed election date so that government policies are not dictated by a calendar. Policies will be determined by a logical assessment of the issues of the day.

This government is by no means afraid of change. The members on this side of the House are open-minded members and are always willing to entertain new ideas and suggestions to better the parliamentary system. Adopting this resolution is not the way to do it. I must stress that this government is committed to making the democratic system in Ontario more efficient and effective. For example, we brought in the Fewer Politicians Act to reduce the number of MPPs in Ontario from 130 to the current 103. This was done not because politicians wanted to give up their jobs but because the people of Ontario demanded a more efficient government, and we delivered.

We also decreased the length of campaign time from five to four weeks. By doing this, the cost of elections was reduced significantly.

Moreover, our government changed the boundaries of numerous ridings so that the federal and provincial elections could use the same geographical areas. This has made the administration of elections more efficient and has cut back on red tape.

As I'm sure the people listening have figured out from the tone of my speech, I will not be supporting this resolution. As stated previously, we on this side of the House are always looking for ways to better our current electoral system. This resolution would not benefit the citizens of Ontario.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I want to commend the member for bringing forward this resolution for discussion by members of the House. I think there are a number of reforms that have to be made. This is one of them that will enhance the democratic process in Ontario. I agree entirely with the member, Mr Sorbara, who has noted the trend in all jurisdictions, but particularly here in Ontario, where we can speak about it, and to a certain extent the national level, of concentrating power in the Office of the Premier or the Prime Minister. The most powerful people, then, are not the people who are elected in the various constituencies but instead are the unelected political advisers, or whiz kids, as we like to call them, who advise the Premier and some of the ministers. So there's no question that we have to restore some significant autonomy for the elected members, and I think this resolution is part of it. I think there is a package for it.

I've always noted as well that one of the really corrosive elements in the political system is money. We particularly see this south of the border, where members of Congress are virtually purchased by special-interest groups, particularly those which are well-financed.

I will start out by saying that I do not think governments should be able to spend taxpayers' dollars on government advertising. Anybody who turned on the Grey Cup game would see the government ads, which were clearly of a partisan nature to reflect favourably upon the government. Members can smirk about that if they want to smirk and be part of the government, but if they're looking at it in the democratic process, now and in the future, no matter which government is doing it and which jurisdiction, if you look at it, it is wrong for governments to use taxpayers' dollars for partisan advertising. That's what's happening in Ontario right now with the hydro policy that the government is attempting to share with the people of this province.

I happen to think there is legitimate advertising from time to time. Some safety things are reasonable, as long as it's not there saying, "and your government is doing a great job because it's bringing it in"—the flu vaccine, for instance. I used several instances where I thought there was reasonable government information provided. But so much of it that this government has been part of—it's a government that has cut so many departments and transfer payments to others and has hurt I think people in the lower income brackets but always has lots of money to spend on government advertising. I think that's wrong and that's part of the package we're looking at.

As well as that, we allow individuals, corporations and unions to donate too much to political parties. We allow the political parties to spend too much money. I thought the last time this government changed the legislation, it allowed for more contributions to come in to individual candidates and parties, it allowed greater expenditures and it exempted some key parts of a campaign.

Also, of course, this government, which has millions upon millions of dollars in its war chest because it has catered its policies to the richest and most powerful people in the province, and has been rewarded by those rich and powerful people who have benefited from its policies, will before a campaign, as well as during a campaign, spend way beyond what would be legitimate. Those are the kinds of reforms that have to be made.

You can't exempt the leaders' tour. You cannot exempt polling, because there's a wide definition of that. If you want it to be fair for everybody, then you have to have strict controls on it. The United States is not a good example.

This resolution takes away from the Premier the right to make a decision on when an election shall be. People who are in the country, people who are in the province, individuals, organizations, municipalities and so on, will know when the election is going to be. There are provisions, if the government falls in a non-confidence motion, where this would not apply. But generally speaking, there would be a situation where we would know when the election was going to be. I think most people in this province would support that instead of having it in the hands of one person and his personal advisers.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I found the resolution before us very interesting, particularly given some of the dynamics of where the different players are coming from on this.

Let me say right at the outset that I think it takes an awful lot of gall for the member from Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford to be talking about defending the traditions of 100 years in this place, given the damage they've done to all kinds of traditions, especially as they relate to the rights of the opposition. Let's just temper some of those comments with the reality of what they've done in governance and how they've trampled on decades of tradition. I don't think that's a defensible point to start from at all.

There is actually a historical reference to this, and I'm surprised it hasn't been mentioned yet. It's pretty significant, given that today is the day Romanow brings down his report on the future of our cherished health care system. When Tommy Douglas was elected Premier in Saskatchewan, I believe in 1946, but certainly just after the Second World War—there's no need to remind people who understand the history of this country that the moneyed powerful people all across North America were recoiling in horror that this fellow named Tommy Douglas had gotten elected to a position of power in a democracy. "How could this possibly happen?" because of course Tommy Douglas was a social democrat, a CCFer, the forerunner to the NDP. For some people there were still memories of what had happened in Russia a couple of decades before. There were concerns about what had happened as a result of the Winnipeg general strike, and some were saying, "My goodness, the election of this social democrat in Canada means the beginning of the end. The Red forces are at the door." Of course, nothing could be further from the truth, but Tommy had to deal with that.

I mention Tommy because Tommy Douglas is now recognized universally as the founder, the father, the leader of bringing in our universal health care system. In fact he was just inducted into I think the first—I don't know the exact title—the Canadian national medical hall of fame. I'm torturing the real title, but that's what it is. Their first inductee was none other than the guy they had struck against, in a general strike by a lot of the doctors at the time in Saskatchewan. The very same group of people, the medical association of Canada, named him as the first inductee, recognizing that without Tommy Douglas we wouldn't have a universal health care system and we wouldn't have the Romanow report.

As I look across, the galleries are filled today with young people, students here, I would assume, on a class visit. It may be a number of years before they recognize the significance of the historic day they are here, because Roy Romanow is releasing a report that is either going to provide a blueprint for them to have the same health care system I had when I was their age, or we're going to lose it. It's that significant.

I raise all that and talk about Tommy today, particularly on this historic day, also to point out that one of the things he did when he was elected, to sort of calm the Red scare fears, was to say, "I will have elections every four years no matter what." I believe it was June. I stand to be corrected, but I believe it was in June. Do you know what? Tommy Douglas was in power, the first social democrat and founder of our universal health care system, for 16 years as Premier, and every four years on the button he held an election. As long as he was in that election, he won.

I think it's worth mentioning too, parenthetically, that Tommy Douglas every year of those 16 years brought in a balanced budget. He didn't really bring in what was then the universal insurance program until about his 14th or 15th year. There are a whole host of reasons for that, but most of them were based on the fact that he wanted it to be fiscally viable and he wanted to deeply plant the roots of the notion of a universal health care system so that future right-wing governments couldn't come along and just wipe it out.

He took all those years to prepare and educate the public, bring them onside, let them know what the benefits of a universal health care system would be for them, and to ensure it could be afforded. Having been in an NDP government and sat in the cabinet, I know the kind of pressure you get from your own supporters to move, especially on those big items that, in large part, bring people to be a New Democrat as opposed to the other parties.

I've only got one minute left, but in terms of the BC legislation, the Institute for Research on Public Policy found that 54% of the population support fixed elections. They had one concern, and I thought it was legitimate. I just spoke to my friend Mr Sorbara to get a clarification from him. Their concern was that you don't want to remove the ability of this House to say, "We've lost confidence" in whatever the government is, whoever the Premier is, and force an election. They felt we lose something if we don't have that. I'm assured by Mr Sorbara that part of their legislation would guarantee that a majority vote of this House, regardless of party, would still constitute a lack of confidence in the government and that would trigger an election.

I think we end up with the best of both worlds. This is a valid idea. Things have to change. The people are demanding it. I think this is a good, positive step in that direction.

Mr Dunlop: I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on Mr Sorbara's resolution.

First of all, I'd like to take this opportunity, because we've mentioned how many young people are in the audience today—I don't know the names of all the other schools, but I do know that Premier Eves has a school here today from Dufferin-Peel-Wellington-Grey, St John the Baptist Catholic school in Bolton. Mrs Bernardi, Mrs Visintine and a number of the parents and other teachers are here with them. Perhaps we could give them a warm welcome. It's so nice to see so many young people here on this very historic day.

Something I didn't know earlier: I didn't realize that Tommy Douglas actually delivered balanced budgets for 16 years in a row. That is amazing and I think that's a great tribute to his great life as a politician.

However, we're here today to talk a little bit about the resolution. I want to say up front that I will be opposing this legislation. Quite frankly, I'm against the Americanization of Canadian politics, and that's what this does. This is a very simple resolution. We might as well have a Congress. We might as well have governors. We might as well have a President.

We haven't seen any leadership in this particular area on behalf of the federal government. As recently as 2000, they pulled an election after three years. If the provinces are going to go in this direction, to a selected term of four years, I think we really have to see the leadership from the federal government. When they decide to call after four years, then we should look, as provinces, at maybe doing the same type of thing.

Mr Sorbara: Why?

Mr Dunlop: Because we need federal leadership. The federal government has to show leadership in some area. In some area of this country, we have to see the federal government showing some leadership.

We've seen some leadership today, I guess, with the Romanow report coming out, but as I said earlier today in my other comments, we don't know what's going to actually happen. Apparently there's $7 billion, I understand now. Finally the federal government will probably have to ante up. We've been saying this for the last six or seven years. Already I read an article where Mr Manley is saying, "The money's not there. We won't be able to provide the money. We'll phase that money in" over God knows how many years.

I'm someone who believes very strongly in the traditions of our country, of our province. I do not want to see the legislation changed. I believe very strongly in the British parliamentary system and everything it stands for.

As I said earlier, I will be opposing this resolution. I want to leave some time for our other members as well today.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): I commend the member from Vaughan-King-Aurora for bringing forth his resolution, because I think the resolution really is an attempt on his part to show that a lot of the democratic traditions in Ontario have been eroded dramatically by the Mike Harris-Eves government. When they stand up and say they're defenders of British parliamentary traditions, it is just laughable. If you look at Bill 26, it did more damage to democracy in this province than any other single bill has done in any western democracy.

What it comes down to is that, in this Legislature now and in this province, if an idea comes from outside the inner sanctum of the government controlling interests, they reject it. I've got a perfect little example for the schoolchildren here today. As you know, there's a law in the province of Ontario now that requires schoolchildren to sing O Canada in school. As the opposition, we brought forth a simple resolution, on behalf of myself, to allow for the singing of O Canada in this building, even once a week. Do you know that the government has stopped that? They won't allow the singing of O Canada in this Legislature as part of our proceedings. Do you know why? Because it's not their idea; it came from the opposition.

That's why they oppose resolutions like this one from the member for Vaughan-King-Aurora. It's not their idea. It didn't come from the backroom group that controls this government. These are faceless, nameless people you never see. They run the province of Ontario. For instance, legislation now is divided and crammed into—they have two days in one. Nowhere in western democracies do they have two days in one. Do you know why they have two legislative days in one? So they can ram through bills that you the public, young and old, will never know anything about.

We have this bill before us now called Bill 198, where they're raiding pension plans. They tried to ram that through so nobody would notice. They've changed the rules to the point that things go through here so quickly we can't even question them. There are no hearings. In the past, we used to have hearings where there would be input, there would be amendments, there would be changes. That doesn't exist in Ontario any more. We go through a democratic façade totally controlled by backroom people who are not in this chamber, and we don't even know their names or faces.

My colleague from Vaughan-King-Aurora is saying, "When you're calling an election, perhaps there should be some kind of accountability or oversight. It shouldn't be the manipulation of the democratic process to call an election when the polls show you might win." This government spends millions of dollars polling all the time, trying to find out how they can take advantage of public opinion to manipulate it.

That's what they're doing right now. They're spending hundreds of thousands of dollars of your money this month, I'm sure, trying to find out when they should call the election. They're not going to call it when they think it's right for the people or right for the voters; they're going to call it when they think they can save their necks. That's what they'll do.

What this would do is bring in some sort of accountability whereby you would know when the elections were to be called so that it couldn't be manipulated by the government and the backroom people. Every four years, you would know when the election date would be, and it would be a fair process. What this government really likes to do is essentially make rules that benefit not you, the voters or the citizens, but benefit them and their friends. That's what they're all about in this place, and they don't want you to know what they're doing. They want to try and change things so fast, and then if we ask for an improvement or a change, they say, "No, we can't do it, because it doesn't help us."

I commend this attempt to basically get some dialogue on getting democracy back in Ontario. This government does not believe in free votes; in this case, you'll see that all the government side will vote against this. They never vote according to their conscience. They always vote according to how they're told to vote. This is wrong, because democracy is supposed to be based on your beliefs and what's best for your voters, not on what's best for vested interests and special interests. In this case here, we've got a debating point, a good way of looking at how we can make democracy better and how we can maybe listen to new ideas. As I said, this government of Ernie Eves-Mike Harris doesn't believe in ideas coming forward and being debated, even—never mind being accepted; they don't think they should be debated. They just will all say that this is wrong.

To say this is about Americanization—this government copied the neo-con agenda word for word, right out of Newt Gingrich's dictionary, and they have the nerve to say they're against Americanization? They bought that hook, line and sinker and tried to sell it to everybody in Ontario.

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): I'm pleased to offer a few comments on the resolution we're debating here this hour. It will be a frosty Friday when I or anyone in our government agree with the Americanization of the election system in this country. It's not going to happen.

This is from a party and from a member who demonstrated precisely why the voters can be trusted by trying to pull the wool over their eyes and going out for an election after two years and nine months, thinking you could sneak something through, so excited that for the first time in 1987 the election results, under the current system, had actually favoured your party—the first time in over 45 years. You were sure it would happen a second time, that lightning would strike twice. So you said to yourselves, back there in the cabinet room, "The voters are incompetent. The voters are blind." You said, "We can pull the wool over their eyes."

You want to know something, Mr Sorbara? You were wrong. David Peterson was wrong; you were wrong; all the other cabinet ministers, including the members still here today, were wrong. The voters are smarter than that. The voters understand the issues. The voters understand that when they have the chance to cast that vote, there is an opportunity to reflect, and it doesn't matter whether it is exactly 48 months or 46 months or 50 months. They reflect on the package of initiatives that have been presented by the government and on the alternatives offered by the two, maybe more, would-be pretenders to the throne.

The reality is that in the last half-century, your party, under the current system, has only ever attracted the attention and the interest of the voters once—once. You're equalled by the socialists, for Pete's sake, in that regard. In every other election in the last half-century, the voters have correctly concluded that there is one party that has their best interests at heart, one party that is not favouring special interests, that has the working families, that has small business, at the heart of all the policy decisions they make. As opposed to the member here, a member who personally was part of the charade of the 1990 election, who was certain—certain—that they were—

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Vaughan-King-Aurora has had his opportunity. He needs to respect the member for Scarborough East.

Mr Gilchrist: I'm sorry if the truth hurts, Mr Sorbara, because the reality is that the status quo doesn't just work here in Ontario; it works all across Canada. It works all across the Commonwealth. This is a principle that goes back centuries, and the member opposite is suggesting that somehow the Liberal Party in Ontario has a better way of doing it than all the other parties in all those other jurisdictions. What arrogance. What conceit.

The reality is that this resolution, just like the entire Liberal democratic plan, is predicated on the proposition that you cannot trust the voters. Well, I for one do trust the voters. I suspect it's predicated on something else. If you knew the exact date of the next election, you would know how long you had to hide your leader, Dalton McGuinty. You'd know that. As it is right now, you're not quite sure when you can bring him out and when you have to keep him behind closed doors.

There's mention that out in British Columbia the Liberal government there has suggested that they want to go to fixed terms. What the member has not suggested, has not put on the record here today, is that the law says that that will take place only when a regulation is filed by the Lieutenant Governor. There is no regulation filed. So in the province of British Columbia, even today it would not be accurate to say that it is the law that the next election will take place on a certain day. It may be the government's intention to prepare that regulation, it's certainly their stated intention, but they haven't done it.

There is no precedent where you can stand in your place and say that someone else has made a formal commitment to have an election on a specific day on a specific cycle. So I'm prepared to continue on with the status quo. I'm prepared to continue to trust the voters in my riding. I don't understand why a member here wouldn't want to continue to trust the voters in his riding—but obviously you don't. You are here as a result of the current system.

On the other hand, if it is this ongoing frustration that there aren't enough of you that can attract the attention and the positive support of people in your riding, then I understand why you want to change the rules. But what I don't understand is how you of all people, of all the Liberals sitting opposite, could stand in your place and suggest that somehow an American-style political system is the way we should be going, when you yourself are the poster child for why the voters can be trusted under the current system.

While I have a second here, I was intrigued, as our good friend from St Catharines is so prone to do a rambling about the by-product of elections—it was fascinating watching another Liberal initiative just before coming up here: the tabling of the Romanow report, and the fact that Mr Romanow himself admitted that if the federal government agreed to all his recommendations, it would increase federal spending to 25%. I just want it on the record that last night on Michael Coren, Gerard Kennedy swore up and down that it isn't 14% that the feds paid today; it's 35%.

So I'm glad to see that he is just as inaccurate, and just as prepared to try and pull the wool over the TV viewers, the voters, as you're trying to do here today. It's a consistent pattern. It really is not becoming to a member to have that attitude toward the voters. I suggest to the member that this is not an appropriate resolution. I will not be supporting it. Nor, I suspect, will any of my colleagues.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): I'm so excited about the opportunity to speak following on the leader of the bitter former ministers' club. I just can't tell you how funny it is to hear a man froth about for six minutes and create the impression on the one hand that the manipulation by the leader of an election date is bad, and then to make an enormous pronouncement, with much pounding of the chest, to indicate that he stands firmly in favour of the status quo, because the status quo has meant that leaders of political parties, all of them in our province, have manipulated election dates in a way that is unhelpful to the quality of our democracy.

So while we on this side are able to stand and say, as Mr Sorbara did in his opening comments, that this isn't a practice that we think has been good for Ontario in the past or that we're proud of, this guy, the member from Scarborough East, stands and makes a speech that makes absolutely no sense, on the one hand criticizing the Peterson government for having called an early election and then on the other hand defending that practice and the status quo.

The thing that I found most incredible from that government, and the member from Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford did it too, was talking about how it would be just terrible to see this kind of change to this parliamentary process, with its traditions deeply rooted in Westminster. He practically brought the Maple Leaf Forever and songs from Britain to my ear. Instead, we had speeches of denial from the members opposite, because they denied the very role that they have played in undermining our democracy to such a great extent here in the province of Ontario.

We seek, on behalf of the people of Ontario, to grab back from them and the way they have operated some connection to our democracy, by enhancing the role of oppositions and committees and giving power back to MPPs and, on this one singular issue, removing from the power of the Premier of Ontario the right to manipulate the date of the election.

These guys get it going, on this matter, on all different fronts. We have a piece of legislation in front of us that they're all going to vote for next week, Bill 198, that is flawed. It has been proven to be deeply flawed, and yet they will ram it through and hope in the quiet of their regulatory environment and the cabinet's basic right to do whatever the heck it pleases, that this issue will just go away, because even when they are caught red-handed, even when the smoking gun has been produced, there is no meaningful opportunity, in an environment where the government has a majority and the majority members are acting like seals, to restore a sense of vigour to our democracy by forcing change on badly flawed legislation.

I have a funny story to relate in my last minute, and it involves the member from London-Fanshawe, Mr Mazzilli. He and I were recently on Focus Ontario, about three or four weeks ago. Every once in a while, because of our capacity to jostle, they bring us on there. The host, Graham Richardson, said to Mr Mazzilli, "So, Frank, when's the election going to be? In the spring?" Frank said, "Yes, that looks very likely, Graham." I said, "Yes, in the spring of 2004." Because once the stink of desperation is on a government, like the stink is on this one, you start to see the kind of manipulation that is disgusting. It's disgusting.

On the weekend of their convention a little while ago, I arrived at 11 o'clock on Saturday. By noon, all of the talk was how the election, which was rumoured to be right now, had been put off. Then at 6:45 or 7 o'clock, the Premier had a press conference. He said, "No, the election is definitely going to be two months one way or the other of the four-year anniversary." On the Sunday he said, "No, no. Fall of 2003," and within a few days later it was the spring of 2004.

End the manipulation. Take back the power for the people.

The Acting Speaker: Response?

Mr Sorbara: I'd like to thank in particular my friend from Hamilton West for reminding us on this day in particular of the important work that Tommy Douglas, one of the great parliamentarians in Canadian history, brought to this debate on fixed terms for Parliaments.

I just have to summarize by pointing out that the incredible arrogance of my friend from Scarborough East is exactly the disease that has poisoned the Conservative Party and is going to end in their defeat when an election is finally called. I have rarely heard such arrogance, an epiphany of nonsense, in support of a resolution on a motion that really will change and improve our democracy.

This is quite simple. We need to improve our democracy. The Premier of this province, Ernie Eves, has far too much power, and this Parliament has far too little power. And the people have far too little power. No democracy is strong when power, wealth and income is concentrated in the few, let alone the one.

I want to talk as well about the remarks by my friend from Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford, because he gave a litany of reforms that he suggests were brought forward to improve our democracy. There is no doubt in the mind of any serious commentator that as to the power of this Legislature, rule changes brought forward by the Progressive Conservative Party have reduced to a minimum the significance of this Legislature.

If parliamentarians on the Conservative side are not concerned about that so that future members of this Parliament can have a real and vibrant opportunity to participate in the lifeblood of their province, then they don't understand their responsibilities here. I invite them to reconsider and support this motion.

The Acting Speaker This completes the time allocated for debate on ballot item number 72.

EDUCATION

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): I will now deal with ballot item number 71. Mr Kennedy has moved private member's notice of motion number 20.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

We will take the vote following my putting the question on ballot item number 72.

ONTARIO ELECTION DATES

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Ballot item number 72: Mr Sorbara has moved private member's notice of motion number 19.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

EDUCATION

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Call in the members for a vote on ballot item number 71. This will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1202 to 1207.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Kennedy has moved ballot item number 71. All those in favour will please stand and remain standing until your name is called.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

HIGHWAY 11 AND HIGHWAY 17

SUDBURY REGIONAL HOSPITAL

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): It's pretty sad when you see that it takes longer for the Harris-Eves Tories to deliver the Sudbury regional operational review than for Roy Romanow to complete a federal study about health care across Canada. It is pretty sad when the Sudbury Regional Hospital continues to wait for Tony Clement and Ernie Eves to release the report that our community wants released. That operational review will set the course of action for the construction of our new single-site hospital. It will set the course of action for our community with regard to health care, and yet the government sits on the report.

Why do they sit on the report? Well, it's very simple. They do not want to release the report because the report is clearly an indictment that they have short-changed our hospital and health care in the north by too many dollars—absolutely, no question.

In our community, we say that this government has abdicated its responsibility when it comes to health care. So today we ask Tony Clement, the Minister of Health, and Ernie Eves, the Premier of this province, to act immediately. Release the operational review of the Sudbury Regional Hospital so our hospital administrators can start planning for the future. We have a course of action. It's time you told us what yours is.

ENTERPRISING WOMAN PROGRAM

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): Ten months ago Corrine was a stay-at-home mom with a business idea but little knowledge of how to start a company. Today she owns a registered soap-making business and sells her product at craft sales and local stores. If Corrine had not signed up for the Enterprising Woman program, run by the women's centre of York region, she says she would not even have a business plan.

Corinne had a good product but she really didn't feel she knew how to start a business. The program showed her how to get her business organized. The program helped her to write a business plan and encouraged her to do market research. Corinne benefited the most from being able to network with other women and to know she wasn't alone in her challenge to get her business started. She began the program in February and graduated in June, launching her business a month before.

The program, facilitated by business professionals, starts with the basics: choosing a name, conducting market research, cash flow analysis, and legal issues. It then offers specialized sessions such Web marketing, e-business, networking, commercial real estate, and balancing life and work. The program is available to 25 women who have a viable business idea.

All the best to you, Corinne. Congratulations on your entrepreneurial business endeavour.

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): Earlier this week a Ministry of Transportation spokesperson was quoted as saying that the four-laning of Highway 11-17 between Thunder Bay and Nipigon would not go forward unless traffic volumes increased to a preset ministry-determined level. To say that this remark irritated me, as well as many of my constituents, would be a very polite understatement.

This four-laning project is one that was first announced 13 years ago by the provincial government of the day. It is a rare part of the Trans-Canada Highway, in northwestern Ontario, where no alternate route across the country is available. It is a section of the highway about which Premier Eves himself made reference to the need to four-lane during a fundraising speech in Thunder Bay this past spring.

To say that volume of traffic alone will determine the need is unseemly, and I, for one, will not accept that thinking. Besides, if numbers alone determined these projects, the section between Thunder Bay and Pass Lake should be fast-tracked, as its numbers frequently meet that cold criteria.

Regardless, the province should be further chastised for not signing on to the federal-provincial agreement on highway infrastructure that would add $2 billion dollars to available highway funding. In that I have been told on numerous occasions by previous Ministers of Transportation that this four-laning project will not go forward without federal government financial participation, why, I ask, is Ontario the only province in the country that has not signed on to this funding agreement?

Minister, are you telling us that we need a rash of tragic fatalities before you'll move forward on this vital project? I certainly hope that that is not your position.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): This government and this Ministry of Health have been playing games with Niagara region, games with some incredibly serious consequences. You see, back in 2001 the Ministry of Health announced funding for eight youth-adolescent mental health beds for Niagara region. Where did those beds end up being located but in the city of Hamilton?

I want to explain to this government: Hamilton is not Niagara. Hamilton has its own very special and extreme needs. Niagara, under-resourced and under-staffed in terms of mental health services for youth and adolescents, is crying out for those eight mental health beds for youths and adolescents.

Welland mayor Cindy Forster and her council passed a strong resolution demanding that those beds be in Niagara region. Dr Thoppil Abraham, who has been relentless, along with his colleagues, in the campaign for adequate mental health services for youth and adolescents in Niagara region, carries on in his struggle to ensure that young people don't have to be put into adult psychiatric wards, that young people have access, notwithstanding this government's refusal to fund it and provide it, to mental health services.

I put to you that it is entirely inappropriate that Niagara not have those eight mental health beds. The government made a promise. It was a promise that wasn't kept. I put to you that we should be listening to Dr Thoppil Abraham and the likes of him. I put to you that this government has a responsibility to fulfill its commitment, to fulfill that commitment to the families of those children, those adolescents, in Niagara region so treatment can be made available to them there, when they need it and as they need it.

NIAGARA FALLS WINTER FESTIVAL OF LIGHTS

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): This past weekend, I again with my family attended the exciting 20th annual Niagara Falls Winter Festival of Lights kickoff, with my colleagues tourism minister Frank Klees and Erie-Lincoln MPP Tim Hudak.

Minister Klees attended the event to announce a provincial contribution of $50,000 for the festival to help support the marketing efforts of the festival. Minister Klees also helped in welcoming Mickey, Minnie and the rest of the Disney characters who attend the festival each and every year. The minister was granted the privilege of turning the switch to help illuminate the hundreds of park and street displays decorated with tens of thousands of lights. The switch also kicked off a dazzling fireworks display.

In previous years, the festival of lights has received more than two million visitors. The event has earned the honour of being named a top event by the American Bus Association. The annual New Year's Eve party attracts over 30,000 people and receives live North American television coverage.

The $50,000 announced this weekend for the festival will help cover the cost of print and radio advertising in Toronto, London, Ohio and New York.

The Niagara festival of lights is a great way to enjoy the four-season beauty of Niagara. I hope that many families will have the opportunity to come down to the falls to experience and enjoy the fun activities that the festival has to offer.

PENSION PLANS

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): The Minister of Finance just can't seem to get it right. First she tried to sneak in a $10-million tax break for pro sports teams, but when they were caught, they took their hand out of the cookie jar. Now she is trying to sneak through legislation that would allow employers to steal a pension surplus from their employees, and that's exactly what the bill does.

Now the government says, "Well, we got it wrong. We'll think about it. Let's pass it. It's wrong; we know that. Let's pass it. It's reckless; we know that. Let's just make it the law and we won't proclaim it." Well, no one trusts this government on that file as no one trusts them on many other files.

The trouble is that no one in this province will believe the government on it. The legislation is wrong. It's time to do the right thing and withdraw the section of the bill. The Minister of Finance, a former government House leader herself, tried to suggest yesterday that it's too complicated to remove that section from the bill—wrong. We did something very similar in the Legislature just last week with Bill 177, and it took all of 10 minutes. We could do it again today. We could stand up and protect the rights of employees. We could do the responsible thing. We could take the offensive sections out of the bill. All it takes is for this government to agree to go to committee of the whole to remove the offensive sections. Why don't you agree to do it and put this miserable issue to rest once and for all?

WOMEN OF DISTINCTION AWARDS

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I rise today to highlight a very special event held in my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. On Monday, November 18, more than 200 people gathered at a resort just outside of Bracebridge to celebrate the first Women of Distinction Awards benefit and gala. The community YWCA of Muskoka presented this grand event.

As a testament to the honour of receiving one of these awards, I would like to point out that there were more than 30 accomplished women from Muskoka nominated for these inaugural awards. An independent panel of judges selected the winners in six outstanding achievement categories, with each winner receiving a beautiful platter designed by Muskoka artist Gina Denne.

I would like to recognize the six women who received the first Women of Distinction Awards: Ms Ruth Bell-Towns of Bracebridge received the community voluntarism award; Ms Hilary Clark Cole of Gravenhurst received the arts and culture award; Ms Jan Lucy of Baysville received the award for education, training and development; Ms Enid Powell of Port Carling received the award for health, wellness and well-being; Ms Dorothy Slocum of Bracebridge was honoured with the award for entrepreneurship; Caitlin Veitch of Huntsville was the recipient of the Young Woman of Distinction award.

I would ask that all members of the House join me in congratulating all these women of distinction for the dedication and hard work they provide their communities.

ROMANIA

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): In the history of mankind, an important event took place 84 years ago, in 1918: the unification of Romania. With us today to help us celebrate this important event are a number of distinguished visitors. I start with the Consul General of Romania, Mr Teculescu; General Mihai Floca; Ionel Marin; Petre Nicapetre; Eugen Roventa; Magdalena Popa; Cornel Chis; Marcel Ban; Dumitru Popescu; and Cristina Parvu.

This great Romania of 1918 proved its vitality in its achievements: the universal franchise was granted; the most important agrarian reforms took place in the history of the country; and the new Constitution was adapted a few years later. We take great pride in these accomplishments.

Above all else, I want the former Minister of Finance to know that our Prime Minister made some glowing remarks just the day before yesterday when he referred to Romania joining the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. What an event. The Prime Minister was saying, "We want to embrace this Romania and these Romanian people because, for the first time, they have moved toward the western hemisphere, toward democracy, toward freedom and establishing their own Constitution, free democracy and state."

We want to celebrate this event, but we are also mindful of the great sacrifices they made when they threw off their dictatorship. They came to my office with a case of champagne and they said, "For the first time, we're free; we're for democracy." That's why we say to them today, forever a free Romania in the future.

[Remarks in Romanian].

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We welcome our honoured guests.

AIDS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I rise in the House today to note that November 25 to November 30 has been declared AIDS Awareness Week by each of the municipalities in my riding of Durham. I commend the mayors and councillors of Oshawa, Clarington and Scugog for their leadership in raising AIDS awareness.

I believe that all Durham region municipalities have similar proclamations. The AIDS Committee of Durham Region is working this week, speaking with youth in our schools. On Saturday, November 30, there will be an AIDS watch interfaith service at 2 pm at St George's Anglican Church in Oshawa. December 1 is World AIDS Day. The focus of AIDS Awareness Week is on prevention against the stigmatization and discrimination against persons with AIDS, their families and friends.

The declaration of AIDS Awareness Week is a reminder that HIV/AIDS is not confined to one group. It is a worldwide epidemic. The United Nations estimates that 40 million are infected worldwide. Sadly, it is estimated that every day of the year there are more people who die from AIDS than who died in the World Trade Center tragedy of September 11 last year.

We are reminded that anyone can get AIDS and be infected. In fact, over half of the victims are women. Recent statistics from Health Canada indicated that for the first time since 1995 there was an increase in the number of positive HIV test reports last year. However, by supporting such events as AIDS Awareness Week, we are fostering the knowledge and understanding that is needed to stop the epidemic and save lives.

The AIDS Committee of Durham works with others, including the AIDS executive director, Peter Richtig, the dedicated staff and caring volunteers. I urge all members to be involved in AIDS awareness in their own riding, to advocate for education and understanding.

RESPONSES TO PETITIONS

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: On September 25, 2002, I presented a petition to the Legislature dealing with kidney and pancreatic transplants. According to section 38(i) of the standing orders, the minister should be responding within 24 sitting days. It's well past those 24 sitting days and I would appreciate your efforts in obtaining a response to that petition.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): That is a valid point of order and hopefully the Minister of Health, who I believe it's for, will be responding to that petition in the timelines required under our standing orders.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on public accounts and move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended:

Bill 5, An Act to amend the Audit Act to insure greater accountability of hospitals, universities and colleges, municipalities and other organizations which receive grants or other transfer payments from the government or agencies of the Crown / Projet de loi 5, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la vérification des comptes publics afin d'assurer une responsabilité accrue de la part des hôpitaux, des universités et collèges, des municipalités et d'autres organisations qui reçoivent des subventions ou d'autres paiements de transfert du gouvernement ou d'organismes de la Couronne.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Yesterday I indicated publicly that I really didn't think I was a moron and I thought I could prove it, I am able to show it. This is my grade 1 report card. This is what Miss Russell says—this is in 1947—“Excellent grade 1 year.” This is my grade 2 report card: “Gerald did well in his spring tests.” This is my grade 3: “Promoted with honours standing.” This is particularly for you, Mr Speaker. This is what Miss Russell said in grade 1, “Self-control—E for Excellent.” My case rests.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Mr Phillips has ably defended himself with respect to the slur that was directed at him yesterday. Is the other recipient of another slur equally able to defend himself?

The Speaker: I thank the member for the report card and the update.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR EXPENSES ACT (CABINET MINISTERS AND OPPOSITION LEADERS), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR L'OBLIGATION DE RENDRE COMPTE DES DÉPENSES (MINISTRES ET CHEFS D'UN PARTI DE L'OPPOSITION)

Mr Tsubouchi moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 216, An Act respecting access to information, the review of expenses and the accountability of Cabinet ministers, Opposition leaders and certain other persons / Projet de loi 216, Loi concernant l'accès à l'information ainsi que l'examen des dépenses et l'obligation de rendre compte des ministres, des chefs d'un parti de l'opposition et de certaines autres personnes.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The Chair of Management Board for a short statement?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): I'll make a minister's statement.

TENANT PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT (HYDRO EXCEPTION), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA PROTECTION DES LOCATAIRES (EXCEPTION CONCERNANT L'ÉLECTRICITÉ)

Mr Agostino moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 217, An Act to amend the Tenant Protection Act, 1997 / Projet de loi 217, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur la protection des locataires.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): This bill would help a situation which is not in the current hydro bill. As it is now, tenants who do not pay hydro directly but pay it as part of their rent don't really have any protection or any opportunity for rebates. The landlord could then apply for an increase in their base as a result of hydro expenses and the tenants would have no opportunity to get any of this back.

This bill, in a sense, would protect tenants—and the government can either introduce it as part of their bill or pass this—to ensure that tenants who pay rent with their hydro included are not going to be subject to any rent increase as a result of the hydro situation between May 1 and December 1, 2002.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

MEMBERS' EXPENSES

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): Today I'm pleased to introduce the latest measure in this government's ongoing commitment to improve accountability in the way taxpayers' dollars are spent. The legislation I am introducing today will, if passed, put into place a clear and transparent means to govern the expenses of ministers, parliamentary assistants, the leaders of the opposition parties and their staff. It would protect Ontario's taxpayers from unnecessary expense by bringing a consistent and high level of oversight to expenses paid out of the public purse. It will bring more openness, accountability and fairness than there ever has been in Ontario or in fact in Canada before.

The rules governing expenses have long been vague and inconsistently applied; I think we all know that. This situation needs to be fixed. Our proposed legislation will provide a transparent set of standards and rules. These rules will apply to ministers, parliamentary assistants, leaders of the opposition parties and their staff, and would govern expenses relating to travel, hotels, meals and hospitality.

As well as introducing greater accountability and transparency, we are for the first time taking steps to ensure that these expenses are reviewed by an impartial third party who has the unqualified support of all members of the Legislature. Therefore, I am pleased to inform the House that the Integrity Commissioner has agreed to review records related to expense claims. As an independent officer of the Legislature, and well respected, the Integrity Commissioner is a non-partisan person and well suited to independently review, report on and bring clarity to this type of information.

I am pleased to report that consultations with the Integrity Commissioner are currently underway to finalize the new rules, which will be effective January 1, 2003.

We're putting into place an accountable and impartial review for the future. This legislation will require all cabinet ministers, their parliamentary assistants and staff, as well as the leaders of the opposition parties and their staff, to table all expenses incurred since 1995 with the Integrity Commissioner. The Integrity Commissioner will issue a report by the end of January 2003 detailing all records received, his recommendations and actions.

This legislation provides for new annual reporting requirements. This will now bring more openness and fairness than there ever has been before.

Each of us has an obligation to the people of Ontario to spend taxpayers' dollars responsibly. For years, the system has not brought accountability to the leaders of the opposition parties with standing in the Legislature. Therefore, the amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act included in this bill will provide for public access to records of payments made out of the Legislative Assembly fund for travel, hotels, meals and hospitality-related expenses of each leader whose party has standing in the Legislature and their staff.

These legislative changes will greatly improve the accountability, consistency, and fairness of the way in which expenses are incurred. They will be a major improvement to the way in which standards are developed, applied and challenged, and I encourage this House to give the proposed legislation speedy passage.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Responses?

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I'm pleased to have the opportunity to respond to this bill. We will look closely at it. Once again we see a government responding to a situation after a problem has emerged, after they get caught. It's a sad statement that that's when they do it.

We welcome changes that bring accountability and transparency to the process. We trust the Integrity Commissioner on these matters.

But we want to talk about a few things. I notice, in reading this very carefully, that the Legislative Assembly funds for the opposition parties are subject to greater scrutiny than the government side. I wonder why that might be. We'll be looking at that closely.

I'd also like to remind the government of my colleague Rick Bartolucci's bill too, the Ministerial Travel Accountability Act, which is more expansive than this, and we will be putting a reasoned amendment to get you to include that in the bill.

Let me say something else. We look at the government ministers' and parliamentary assistants' expenses since they took office in 1995-96. It's gone up from just over $100,000 to well over $500,000—500% more. What happened with welfare recipients? Did they get a 500% increase? No, they didn't. What happened to our schools? Did they get a 500% increase? What happened to our hospitals? None of the above.

I should point out that the official opposition has already released the expenses of its leader with pride, and what did we find? We found that he came in—what was it?—37th. He came in behind Ted Chudleigh, came in behind Mr Spina in expenses. That's because he does a good job with his money and will manage the affairs of this province better than that gang ever could.

They can applaud all they want about this. It's good to see it done. We're going to have a chance to look closely at the legislation, and we will table reasoned amendments to strengthen the ministerial travel accountability sections of the bill. It doesn't go far enough where ministers are concerned, and we want to talk about some definitions.

This is a government on the ropes. We'd like to have an election sooner rather than later. We'd like to go to the people and talk about that pension legislation that they refuse to withdraw. We'd like to go to the people and talk about the situation in our schools from the north to the south, from Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor—you name it. We want to talk about our hospitals and we want to talk about accessibility to MRIs, and we want to focus on this government's record of cutting the people who are most vulnerable while they've padded their own pockets over the last seven years. We want to talk about why the Premier's staff budget has gone up so much and Cabinet Office has gone up so much when supports for the disabled, people on welfare, the most vulnerable children in our society have gone down. We want to talk about why fewer and fewer students in this province have access to student loans and we want to talk about why they haven't dealt with the double cohort issue in a meaningful way.

We will debate this legislation. We welcome accountability. We welcome transparency in all of what we do. But the best accountability, the best transparency is an election, an election that will replace the most mean-spirited, right-wing, out-of-touch government in the history of this province with a compassionate government with a solid plan, led by Dalton McGuinty, for the purposes of rebuilding our public services, our health care, our education.

Make no mistake: we will defend our record on transparency and accountability in a way that you never could or never will be able to, because Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals are the only party putting out a plan for the future, whether it's in health care, the environment or education. That's where it will be decided, not on the foolish pounding of desks in this House but on the pounding of pavements in a general election when the people can talk about accountability, when we can reflect on what's right for Ontario. A new government, led by Dalton McGuinty, will undo the shameful record and mess that you've left behind.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): Let me speak to the bill before I launch into my broader rhetorical polemic about the government. The bill is an interesting one. Because I had an opportunity to read the largest chunks of it, I'm ready already to point out to the government some of the obvious deficiencies. Reviewable expenses, defined in section 3, refers to travel—fair enough—hotels, meals or hospitality. I suggest the government may be generating its own loophole by omitting beverages, because that seems to have been the source of considerable grief, although I expect we can all agree that the issue around meals encompasses the broader range of meals and accompanying beverages.

Howard Hampton has been leader since 1996. I've had occasion to do a fair amount of travelling with him, mostly recently of course on the public power bus—www.publicpower.ca. I hope Howard has saved the receipts because I've been a witness to what I consider a relatively unhealthy diet of Mr Sub and similar chain foods along the highway, and inordinate amounts of Tim Hortons coffee—no disrespect to Tim Horton. If the Integrity Commissioner wants to review Howard's coffee-stained and sugar-stained little slips and receipts from any number of highway, roadside chain-food purveyors, I suppose the Integrity Commissioner can.

I do note that the retroactivity section, section 11, makes this retroactive, according to my brief reading of it, back to 1995. I'm ready to stand with Howard, being somewhat familiar and even downright intimate with his regrettable eating habits while on the road. As to his predecessor, who seems to be covered by the bill as well, he's on his own, quite frankly. I didn't spend a whole lot of time travelling with him.

But let's get down to perhaps somewhat more crucial and critical issues that are of concern, or should be of concern to us, and certainly are of concern to the public. The reviewable expenses are somewhat limited—fair enough. Obviously, were they to be broader, they might be more revealing.

I'm particularly interested, as are New Democrats, in the amount of money spent on US-based consultants by any number of party leaders' offices, so they can design US-style campaigns based on quick blurbs and Tide-style advertising, dishwasher detergent-style advertising. I'd be particularly interested, and I would hope that the public would be too, in seeing how much money was spent on US political consultants in a feckless effort by ambitious political parties to think they can hoodwink the public.

I'd be more interested in this bill, quite frankly, if it incorporated my recent bill, the Man Who Wasn't There Act, which would also—

Interjections.

Mr Kormos: Wait a minute. When you consider the public interest in public expenditure and expenditure of public funds, you will recall that my Man Who Wasn't There Act—colloquially, the Dalton, We Hardly Knew Ye Act—was one which was designed to not compel but require some modest levels of attendance, not just by the Premier but by opposition leaders as well. Surely if the opposition leader of a caucus of but nine can be here 70% of the time, another opposition leader could improve his record of being here but 30% of the time.

In view of the fact that the opposition leader who appears here 30% of the time for question period seems to support his backbencher initiative to dock salaries of a government party leader for absence, one would expect that this same party leader would expect the sauce for the goose to be sauce for the gander, Dalton.

We're not intimidated by the bill. We welcome the opportunity. I question why people would want to obstruct or be dilatory around it. Quite frankly, New Democrats are interested in amendments to the legislation that would provide a more revealing exposure of particularly those out-of-country expenditures on high-priced American political consultants who seem to have become the passion and the rage and about which I'm confident taxpayers would be clearly indignant.

As well, we should contemplate the broader spending, the literally billions and billions of dollars that this government, especially as it enters a pre-election period, persists in spending on its glossy ads and propaganda. Why don't we turn this into a real bit of revelation and exposure?

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to seek unanimous consent to move a motion that following question period the House move into committee of the whole so that we can sever section 25, the pension portions, from Bill 198.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Mr Kormos: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: In view of the Romanow report today and in view of what I am sure is the confidence of all of us in the report by Roy Romanow and his support for public health care, I'm seeking unanimous consent to wear the "RomaNOW" buttons that are available to all members of this Legislature.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

GOVERNMENT PRESS RELEASE

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I will pass to you a press release which was put out by the Ministry of Finance earlier today. It deals with the pension amendments in Bill 98. The headline of the press release reads, "Pension Amendments in Bill 198 Will Never Be Proclaimed." I ask you, Mr Speaker, to look at this in two contexts: first, does this presuppose that the bill will be passed? They have time-allocated the legislation. They have not provided for third reading debate. They have not provided for committee hearings.

The other thing I would ask you to look at is whether or not this bill is in order if in fact the government says it will never be proclaimed. Why would we be debating such legislation if it will never be proclaimed, if it will never become law? Why would this House be called upon to pass a law that the government itself is saying will never be proclaimed?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Not to belabour the point too long, I think there is some confusion with respect to presupposing what this House will do through advertising and public advertising and having an opinion. The government is able and willing to have opinions that they can express through press releases and in this Legislature. They may offer those opinions at any time, at any point they like.

I think the confusion for the opposition House leader is that that doesn't impinge on the fact of our having an opinion, but if we go forward and start advertising certain things about this Legislature, we can't be in contempt of the House and presuppose what the Legislature will do. Every day in this House this government offers opinions on bills before this House. If that is found to be in contempt, it would become very difficult to be able to offer up any opinion or answer any question.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member will know that proclamation is done by order in council; the cabinet doesn't have anything to do with the House. That has happened in other circumstances.

The government House leader is quite right with regard to the advertising. It is an opinion about what may happen. They didn't go out and spend money in that regard. So it is not a point of order, but I thank all the members for their input.

MEMBER'S WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Before we get to question period, I think it's important for this House to know that there is a member in this House who is celebrating a particular milestone. She's celebrating her 45th wedding anniversary. I know her husband, Ken, is watching her at home today. I think that she's making a huge sacrifice in the public interest and I think we should all recognize and congratulate the member for Mississauga South, Mrs Marland.

Applause.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the member for that and wish Ken and Margaret all the best. Might I quickly add that it's all of our spouses who give up a tremendous amount so that we can be here. To all of them, we appreciate all the hard work they do on our behalf when we're down here. They all deserve credit.

Congratulations to Margaret and Ken.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PENSION PLANS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): My question today is for the Minister of Finance. We learn from a press release issued just a few moments ago with the headline "Pension Amendments in Bill 198 Will Never Be Proclaimed" that the government has relented on the opposition position and the position of most knowledgeable people that the bill they have before the House strips pension rights dramatically from pensioners.

I would like to ask the minister, however, why the unanimous consent that we just sought to meaningfully strip away these provisions from the risk of future proclamation—why you voted against that, and why, if a press release and an expression about proclamations is only an opinion, as your government House leader just said, we can trust you not to proclaim these at a later date?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): The answer to that question is very simple: the Premier has given an unequivocal commitment.

Mr Smitherman: Well, we know from our vast experience in this House that the Premier of Ontario has never changed his mind.

Madam Minister, I will in this supplementary provide you with an opportunity to use just a little bit more of your time to expand on this issue of trust. Let's just review the record. When we raised this issue last week in the Legislature, we highlighted the fact that your consultation process, which you were so proud in defending at that time, was fatally flawed in that several of the things that were contained in the legislation were not contemplated in the consultation document. So I ask you to stand in your place today and tell us what it is, beyond pride, that allows you to take the position to say on the one hand that your legislation will never be proclaimed but on the other hand that you insist on its passage with flawed portions intact. Explain that away, and use the word "never" to give us some confidence that your intentions are honourable.

Hon Mrs Ecker: First of all, if the honourable member would like to explain to this House the Liberals' policy on a whole range of issues—one day they were for a hotel tax; today they're not for a hotel tax. One day they're for giving school boards taxing authority; the next day they're not for giving school boards taxing authority. One day they support hydro deregulation; the next day they don't.

What's important here is this government's clear commitment that we are not proceeding with these amendments. We are going to be having a group of experts representing with consultation with the stakeholders to ensure that further consultation will take place. Only after such consultations occur and only if it's necessary to make legislative amendments will any changes be introduced in a new bill, which would be fully debated in the House. I think, in order to ensure that pensioners have been heard, in order to ensure that they know their—

Mr Smitherman: We're left with the curious situation where the minister of the crown says, "We're not proceeding with them; we're only going to ask the Legislature to pass them next week." If it's lost on members on that side, then perhaps that speaks a lot about their comprehension.

Madam Minister, I would like to ask you just one more time to stand in your place and explain why, on the one hand, you're admitting that the sections require review and will therefore never be proclaimed, but that you insist that they continue to be part of your budget bill and that they be passed. Explain that away.

Hon Mrs Ecker: I can understand why the Liberal Party doesn't want to support Bill 198: because it outlines further tax cuts for individuals and small business; it outlines protections for investors, those with mutual funds, for example, in this province; it outlines protections for those who pay for auto insurance. All of those are in the legislation.

But what is important here is that the pensioners who have been concerned that those issues are adequately dealt with are heard and that we can then, if legislation is required based on the expert opinion we get—if there needs to be legislation, there will be a fully debatable bill in the House. You have a clear commitment on that. We're going to be writing to all of the stakeholders to make sure they understand that so that they are clear that they will have an opportunity to ensure that inappropriate steps are not being taken by any member of this House.

DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

Mrs Sandra Papatello (Windsor West): My question is for the Minister of Health. Today the Ontario Liberal Party was very pleased to be recipients of the Romanow report on the future of health care. Two weeks ago, you went ahead with the Alberta model of two-tier health care, the "Pay your way to the front of the line" model, when you released the request for proposals for private MRIs and CTs. This morning Roy Romanow clearly identified this as a clear violation of the Canada Health Act because people will buy their way to the front of the line.

Minister, based on the Romanow report today, will you now withdraw your request for proposals for private MRIs and CTs?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, we have put in a lot of safeguards to ensure that there is no queue-jumping. This is a universally accessible, publicly funded, "Use your OHIP card, not your Visa card, for medically necessary services" kind of service that is going to do wonders to increase the accessibility that Ontarians want for their diagnostic services. We're for accessibility. We're for the patient. We're for making sure that patients have earlier access to diagnostic tools and tests, either at the hospital or through stand-alone clinics. A piece of legislation, the Independent Health Facilities Act, which was in fact proposed by a previous Liberal government, now has in place over 1,000 independent health facilities. This is part of our accessibility, it is part of a health care system that can work, and we are fully supportive of it.

Mrs Papatello: That's exactly what they said in Alberta, and what the Romanow report said today is that they are in clear violation of the Canada Health Act. That is a violation.

This report has an unprecedented level of citizen participation, and it's solidly built on Canadian values. The Canadians are the ones who told the commission they value a universal health care system where access is based on need, not the ability to pay.

Two weeks ago, you went ahead with that same Alberta model for your two-tier private MRIs and CTs. You admitted publicly that people would be able to pay cash. People will be able to jump the queue and get to the front of the line because of their ability to pay.

Minister, you are not to be believed today in the House based on what you have already said and what you are on record as having said. I ask you again, based on the Romanow report today, will you withdraw the request for proposals for private MRIs and CTs in Ontario?

Hon Mr Clement: No, I will not. We, in this government, are for greater accessibility to universally accessible, publicly funded health care. We will not be drawn into the member's accusations and her party's accusations, which in fact are not true. The fact of the matter is that we are perfectly within the Canada Health Act. We ensure that medically necessary services are found universally accessible, without further pay, within the stand-alone clinics in the same fashion as they are found in our publicly funded hospitals.

I'd like to quote another Albertan for the honourable member. This is what another Albertan said today:

"I think" these facilities "play an important role in terms of providing advanced diagnostic services. My view has been that if clinics are providing medically necessary services, they should be covered by the Canada Health Act." Who said that? The Liberal federal health minister, Anne McLellan. I agree with her. I don't agree with Dalton McGuinty.

Mrs Papatello: Minister, I'll tell you what the Ontario Liberal Party believes. It's what Ontarians believe and it's what Canadians believe. We are opposed to your scheme for two-tier private MRIs and CTs in Ontario.

Based on Romanow's report released today, the Alberta model is in clear violation of the Canada Health Act. We are telling you today that here too in Ontario, based on your scheme—and you're not called Two-Tier Tony for nothing. The point is, people will be able to move to the front of the line based on your model. We ask you again, based on what the Romanow report said today, as a violation of the Canada Health Act, will you withdraw your request for proposals for private MRIs and CTs in Ontario?

Hon Mr Clement: If sticks and stones can break my bones, at least I'll have accessibility to an MRI under our plan.

I want to know from the representative of the Liberal Party of Ontario, what have you got against greater accessibility to diagnostic services? What have you got against earlier accessibility to diagnostic services, perfectly accessible, universally accessible within the Canada Health Act? Use your OHIP card. That's what this party stands for on this side of the House. That's what this government stands for. We are proud to be part of a government that is going to increase accessibility using the creativity of Ontarians to do so. We are on the side of accessibility. What side are you on?

HEALTH CARE

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Deputy Premier. I would say, yes, the Minister of Health has a fair salary and he probably can, under his system, buy access. We're worried about all the other people across Ontario who don't have that salary.

Today Roy Romanow provided us with a blueprint to improve and sustain medicare for our children and our children's children. Will your government immediately endorse the Romanow report and begin implementing that report, Deputy Premier?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I'll refer that to the Minister of Health.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I'm sorry, Mr Speaker. I was a bit distracted. Could he repeat the question?

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): What we'll do is maybe stop the clock for that question.

Mr Hampton: To repeat again, Mr Romanow has provided us with a blueprint not only to improve medicare but to sustain medicare for our children and our children's children. Does the Conservative government of Ontario commit today to endorsing that report and to begin implementing that report immediately?

Hon Mr Clement: I can certainly congratulate those aspects of the report, and in fact all reports that have been submitted to Canadians over the previous months and years, that encourage innovation to enhance a universally accessible and sustainable health care system. The Premier and I and the rest of this caucus endorse those aspects of the report that encourage innovation because there is a need to innovate.

We are also encouraged by Commissioner Romanow's identification of the fact that this is a partnership between provincial and territorial governments and the federal government. Commissioner Romanow has made it absolutely clear that the federal government has to step up to the plate. They are part of the solution. We cannot have innovation and successful sustainability and accessibility in our health care system without the federal government's participation. We look forward to working with the federal government in that regard.

Mr Hampton: Mr Romanow is very clear that his vision for medicare is a public vision for medicare, a not-for-profit vision for medicare. He invited those people who promote private-public partnerships, who promote private delivery, who promote profit-driven health care, to present their arguments. He says in the report that he rejects them, that there is no evidence. Do you accept the conclusions of the Romanow commission and are you prepared to commit to a publicly funded, publicly administered, not-for-profit system of medicare?

Hon Mr Clement: I think the honourable member, with the greatest of respect, is going to a conclusion that is not what Commissioner Romanow does. He says that any conclusions based on the appropriate delivery of publicly funded health care have to be evidence based.

On this side of the House we're not afraid of that. We in fact think it's important to have evidence-based conclusions and accountability in our publicly funded health care system. There is absolutely a case to be made that there are publicly funded services that should be publicly funded, and there obviously should be publicly delivered services that are publicly delivered, as well as privately delivered services that are publicly funded and universally accessible. That has been part of our health care system since there has been a health care system.

Your doctor is a private deliverer of publicly funded services. The nursing home operator as often as not is a private-sector deliverer of publicly funded services. We are not afraid of that on this side of the House. We want to make sure that whatever is delivered is accessible and sustainable, not only now but for future generations. That's what this side of the House is all about and we will continue along that path.

Mr Hampton: Minister, Mr Romanow cannot be clearer, he cannot be any more conclusive when he says that the future of medicare is publicly funded, publicly administered and not for profit. Already, the first day, you're looking for a way out.

New Democrats are clear. It is now time for the Romanow report: Roma-now, not Roma-maybe, as the Liberals would have it, or Roma-find-an-excuse. Are you prepared to reverse the private deliveries you've already instituted? Are you prepared to reverse the private cancer clinics? Are you prepared to sign on to the Romanow commission and support a publicly funded, publicly administered, not-for-profit health care system for the people of Ontario and the people of Canada—yes or no?

Hon Mr Clement: I'm holding in my hands right now a list of every single independent health facility that has been approved as part of the publicly funded system in Ontario since Liberal governments, NDP governments and under PC governments—the list goes on for page and page and page—delivering services, universally accessible through your OHIP card to patients across Ontario for diagnostics, for blood tests, for ultrasounds, for lab work. I ask the honourable member, is he prepared to close these down and ruin accessibility for Ontarians because of his ideological point of view? I certainly am not.

The Speaker: New question? The leader of the third party.

Mr Hampton: Mr Romanow went out of his way: he said to all those people who promote private-public partnerships that you and the Liberals like so much, he said to all those people who promote profit-driven delivery, he said to all those people who promote private, profit-driven clinics, "Bring the evidence," and at the end of it, and you heard him very clearly today, he said, "It is not cost-effective, it is not efficient and it is less equitable, less fair than a publicly funded, publicly administered system of non-profit medicare."

That's the question, Minister. You can duck, you can dodge and you can look for the weasel words. He rejects for-profit, private health care. Are you prepared to do the same thing?

Hon Mr Clement: The answer to his question is no. I'd like him to answer my question. I have in my hands X-ray, ultrasound, cardiac, radiology, in St Thomas, Scarborough, Elliot Lake, Richmond Hill, Hamilton, Mississauga, Newmarket, Kanata, Agincourt, Pembroke, Hamilton, Kitchener. Are you prepared to close these integral parts of a universally accessible, publicly funded health care system that delivers quality health care to our citizens?

If you are true to your words, you are condemning over 1,000 independent health facilities that are part of accessibility in the province of Ontario because of your ideological agenda. I say to you, shame to you. That is not what this side of the House is all about. We are for accessibility. We are for quality. We are for better health care for Ontarians and we will fight for that as long as we have the will to fight.

Mr Hampton: Minister, the Provincial Auditor looked at your private health care clinic at Sunnybrook hospital, and his conclusion was that it costs $500 more per patient in terms of private delivery. Your brethren Conservative government in Manitoba set up a private eye clinic. The NDP government in Manitoba brought it back under public, not-for-profit delivery, reduced the costs by $300 per patient, and they were able to accommodate more patients.

This is about taking the profit out of health care. This is about ensuring that we have the most cost-effective, most efficient, and the fairest delivery of and the fairest access to health care. That is what Mr Romanow and his commission are calling for. Are you prepared to endorse that, or are you still going to go about there promoting private, for-profit delivery? Whose side are you on: the private companies that want to make money off our health care system and then make large financial contributions to the Conservative Party—the Dynacares, the Comcares, the Extendicare—or are you in favour of not-for-profit, publicly funded, publicly administered medicare?

Hon Mr Clement: One of the most poignant things that Commissioner Romanow said today is that a properly functioning and successful health care system has to go beyond ideology, has to go beyond the right-wing and the left-wing shibboleths that have marred the ability of governments to find the solutions. He said that this is not about left-wing ideology, this is not about right-wing ideology; this is about what works for the betterment of health care for Canadians from coast to coast to coast.

In that sense, we are for what works. We are for better health care. We are for better accessibility. We are for a system that has the courage to be creative within a universally accessible, publicly funded system. We have the courage. The honourable member should get beyond his left-wing politics and have the courage as well.

PENSION PLANS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): I want to return to the Minister of Finance and I want to give her two more opportunities to explain the unexplainable. Explain to members of this House why it is necessary to come and vote in favour of a piece of legislation when you have admitted that one very significant section of it is flawed to the point where you make a promise, on paper, that you will not proclaim it.

You've operated under the cover of darkness before. You did it with your consultation paper and you certainly did it when you were one of the four happy adherents to the $10-million payoff to sports teams in Ontario. I want to give you an opportunity to stand in your place today and tell us whether it's embarrassment or your wounded pride that prevents you from doing the right thing, which is to sever the pension portions from Bill 198. Do it today.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): Only the honourable member would think that a public consultation document, released publicly, is secret, but we'll leave that for the viewers to decide.

Again, Bill 198 contains significant measures for tax cuts for individuals, for protection for auto insurance consumers, for investors, for new powers for municipalities to have tax incentive zones and opportunity bonds, so it's very important legislation. But what is very clear, as we've said in this House on more than one occasion—as the Premier has said, as I have said—for all intents and purposes these particular amendments dealing with the pension issues are null and void. What we are doing is going to ensure, through an expert committee in consultation with all stakeholders, that pensioners are assured that their pensions are safe, that there is nothing untoward that they need to be concerned about.

Mr Smitherman: They do have something to be concerned about when you use the phrase "for all intents and purposes," because it makes my point rather well. Yes, Bill 198 is a significant bill even without the pensions. So take them out and we'll have an opportunity to vote up or down on it. But you're presenting before this Legislature a piece of legislation that includes significant sections that, if proclaimed—and there is no protection against proclamation except your word and the word of your government expressed in a press release that the government House leader just referred to as an opinion. And then you use the phrase “for all intents and purposes.”

Madam Minister, explain to this Legislature why you think it's such a difficult task—it would take about 10 minutes—to sever the pension sections of Bill 198 from this legislation so that when we vote in favour or against it we know exactly what we're voting for.

Hon Mrs Ecker: The Liberals are quite happy to vote against tax cuts for individuals. They're quite happy to vote against tax breaks for people who are modest-income Ontarians. So their concern about what they're voting for is not something I think taxpayers would take seriously.

But what is important here—he can argue procedural issues all he wants today, but for those who have pensions, for those who are concerned about their pensions, what is important is that the Premier has indicated unequivocally, in the Legislature on Tuesday, in a written statement today, that the pension provisions in the budget bill will not be proclaimed. They are not going forward, and that, I think, is an important statement. I can read it again. If he'd like to ask me, I'd be very pleased to do it again for him, but I think we've been very clear about our commitment.

MEMBERS' EXPENSES

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Chair of Management Board. You're quite aware that each member, on an annual basis, publishes their global budget and it's reviewed by the media and others. You raised a very important issue today and I applaud you for the action you've taken today.

This action, in my view, has been of interest over the past several months, indeed over the last number of years, and has been taken on rather aggressively. I know one of the media outlets captioned Mrs Papatello's action as being the Liberal attack dog. I wouldn't go that far, of course. During that same period of time, one reporter went on to say that she was more of a man than Dalton McGuinty. I think that's a bit aggressive. However, when asked on October 4, Dalton McGuinty said that what's good for the goose is good for the gander. When referring to our ministers, clearly it would indicate by that—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member's time is up.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): I got the gist of what the member was getting at.

It might be advisable for us to review a few things here. First of all, in a media scrum on October 4, 2002, Dalton McGuinty said, “Under the rules we play by today, we get three and a half million dollars, it says here, folks; there's your three and a half million dollars. Put it all into supper if you want, all into salary if you want, put it all into polls, put it all into expensive luggage.” I believe the public needs to know how much of this is going to expensive luggage. Dalton McGuinty said that.

In the same media scrum on October 4, Dalton McGuinty said, “The issue is, who's setting the standards and what might those standards be? I think the ball is clearly in the court of Premier Ernie Eves and he's gonna have to tell us where he stands in respect to the standards to which he holds his ministers.”

Speaker, we've lobbed the ball back over the net into their court; it's up to them. I expect them to support it at second and third reading without debate.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you very much for that, Minister. In fact, on reflection, this may explain why Dalton hasn't been here for the last couple of weeks. Maybe he's putting together some notes to explain, as I understand—

The Speaker: Will the member take his seat. Don't start that. Don't start that stuff, please. You know you don't need to get up and do those crazy things like that. There's no need for it.

Mr O'Toole: Well, I only knew that by referring to Hansard.

I read one of the reports that indicated the ministers are responsible and accountable, and I agree with that. I don't think there's a person here who would disagree with that. On a closer question, quite honestly, Mr McGuinty was trying to explain his generalized expenses, including such things as travelling, meeting with people and, in a general sense, politicking. In fact, he said it wasn't a vacation, so in that declaration it's clear it wasn't a vacation.

What I'm trying to find out through the minister here is—

The Speaker: I'm afraid your time is up.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Speaker, I can anticipate that question as well.

I'll refer again to the same media scrum. The question to Mr McGuinty was, “Would you also release the expenses of all your staff members?” McGuinty said, “Why would I do that?” The next question was, “Why not your staff?” He then said, “Because it's not up to my staff to, uh...” And then they said, “We're talking tax dollars.” He said, “Yeah, but again, you know, what we've got is a set of rules here that says the Liberal caucus is entitled to about three and a half million dollars and it's up to us to decide how we're going to spend those three and a half million dollars.”

There needs to be clarity and accountability. This is what this bill is all about.

MINISTER'S EXPENSES

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): My question is to the Deputy Premier. I'm going to continue along the same lines as my honourable colleague across and talk about accountability.

Deputy Premier, almost two months ago, my colleague Sandra Papatello revealed the rich lifestyle the member from Burlington was leading at taxpayers' expense. He spent over $100,000 of taxpayers' money on expensive steakhouses, expensive hotels, in-room movies, valet parking and liquor. When we revealed Cam Jackson's willingness to spend taxpayers' money like it grew on trees, he paid some back. But, at least as of November 13, not all of the inappropriate expenses were paid back.

Ernie Eves promised a full investigation and review of these expenses. He promised that Cam Jackson would have to pay Ontario taxpayers back. It has been two months. Can you tell me when this review was completed, who did it and how much Cam Jackson was ordered to pay back?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I'm going to refer that to the Chair of Management Board.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): The honourable member points out the reason why we've tabled this bill today. The reason is because we need accountability right across the House. The problem has been that for years, in fact any time before this period of time, the members of the opposition have not been accountable in terms of what they spend. Clearly, they think they can spend on all kinds of very strange things. So what we're trying to do right now is bring accountability.

Our rules within this bill, if it's passed, are such that all expenses from 1995 to present are going to be forwarded to the Integrity Commissioner. That's all expenses: ours and your leader's. I don't know how much more accountability you want than that. We want to be clear and accountable to the public.

It's about time you guys were brought to the table; you haven't been. It's so easy to be holier than thou when you don't think that somehow you're accountable. I have news for you: you're going to be.

Mrs Bountrogianni: Minister, maybe the reason you refuse to answer my question about the honourable member from Burlington is because there is no review. I have here a copy of the Burlington Post, dated November 13. I'll tell you what Cam Jackson said to the Burlington Post: "There is no investigation. The Premier's office indicated there is no investigation."

So who are we to believe, Honourable Minister, Cam Jackson or Ernie Eves? The way things are going, the public doesn't trust either one of them.

Deputy Premier, I've written a letter to the Premier. I've asked the government to provide the names of the people doing the investigation, their terms of reference, the guidelines they are using to determine which expenses are appropriate and which are not and the date by which their investigation is to be completed. Your government has not responded.

Tell the House right now, is there a review or not? If there is, who's doing it, when is it due and when will you finally stand up for the taxpayers of Burlington and the rest of Ontario and demand that Cam Jackson pay those bills back?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: First of all, I will tell you this: the member whom she's referring to has always been an honourable member. He has been so in this House for many, many years. I'm very pleased to say that.

We have a mammoth review we're going to be doing, if you've been listening at all. That's from 1995 to the present, and that's everybody. I don't know how much less you want than everybody. You have to listen to this and read what's there.

The only problem you folks have right now is that you've never been accountable at all. This is going to change.

It's interesting enough that Dalton McGuinty, on October 4—again, it's an infamous day in Dalton McGuinty's life, I guess—was saying he's prepared to release his personal expenses, and he gives a summary. We want to know the details. We want the details given to the Integrity Commissioner—all of them, not his perception of what should be released.

With all due respect, I trust the Integrity Commissioner. He has a huge amount of integrity. I'd rather trust his opinion of what's relevant than Dalton McGuinty's.

SPORTS AND RECREATION FUNDING

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): My question is for my honourable friend the Minister of Tourism and Recreation. As you well know, sports and recreation are important contributors to our economy and our way of life, accounting for 1.1% and 1.3% of Ontario's economic development and contributing immeasurably to the health and social well-being of our population.

A study by the Canadian Medical Association reports that sport and recreation promotion leads directly to financial savings in the cost of health care. They estimate that for every 10% increase in physical activity in our population, health expenditures would go down by $51 million. This is clearly something we want to encourage and support. We want to ensure that all Ontarians are encouraged to increase their level of physical activity.

Will the minister inform the House what he is doing, as the minister overseeing recreation, to see that low-income children and youth across Ontario have opportunities to participate in sports and recreation?

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): I want to thank the member for Waterloo-Wellington for his question. Our government is indeed committed to ensuring that all children, regardless of income level, but particularly those from lower-income families, as well as, I might add, children with disabilities, have access to sports activities and other physical activities.

Earlier today, I was pleased to be in Richmond Hill, at the YMCA Early Years Centre, to announce a new initiative of my ministry called the community sport opportunity fund. Through that fund, we are committing an additional $1.25 million to provide more opportunities for children from lower-income families as well as children with disabilities to participate in sports activities and other physical activities.

We believe that everyone in this province, regardless of economic status, should have the opportunity for a good, healthy start in life. We encourage people to take advantage of this program.

Mr Arnott: It's reassuring to know that the government is committed to making physical activity opportunities more accessible to low-income children and young families.

My supplementary question to the minister is this: what is the minister doing to develop new recreation projects aimed at increasing broad-based participation in recreation, sports and physical activity in a safe environment?

Hon Mr Klees: I'm pleased to add to this. I was also at the same time pleased to announce our ongoing investment in my ministry's recreational development fund. The amount of $2.1 million has been added to that program. The recreational development fund is designed to invest in initiatives that promote involvement in recreation and sport and physical activities by all Ontarians, regardless of age or ability, including children, youth and older citizens of the province. This fund also supports opportunities for sport and recreation safety initiatives at the community level, such as those that facilitate training and recruitment of community coaches, leaders and volunteers.

We believe that this program will do a great deal toward advancing physical education and physical activities within the province. We encourage municipalities and community groups to take advantage and make their applications to participate in this program.

DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a question to the Minister of Health. Today Roy Romanow said this of for-profit health funding approaches: "There is no evidence their adoption would produce a more efficient, affordable or effective system."

You yourself promised that private MRI clinics would only be allowed here if private firms could show that they could provide better, cheaper, faster and safer treatment. Not one shred of evidence has been presented to prove this, yet you're marching forward with your scheme of for-profit MRI clinics here in Ontario.

Minister, will you do the right thing? Cancel your scheme of for-profit MRI clinics and fund these services in the public system.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): The honourable member is mixing apples and oranges, with the greatest of respect.

Roy Romanow today was very passionate about the need to protect a universally accessible, publicly funded system for health services and medical services. We on this side of the House could only agree with him in that regard. We treasure our health care system in this province, in this country. We are working with him and with the federal government and with anyone else—providers and stakeholders and citizens in Ontario—who wishes to ensure its accessibility and sustainability in the future. That is about a universally accessible, publicly funded system. Within that system, there is a variety of means available to us to deliver universally accessible, publicly funded services. There always has been, and there always will be.

Beware the politician who says it has to be 100% one way or 100% the other way. That is what the honourable member is suggesting. On this side of the House we want what works, and that is a judicious mix of public and private delivery to ensure the most accessible and best-quality care.

Ms Martel: Minister, I know you don't like to hear this, but Mr Romanow was very clear. There was no evidence presented to him over 18 months that for-profit health care produces a more efficient, effective or better system—no evidence presented at all. You yourself have failed completely to provide a single shred of evidence to show that your for-profit MRI clinics are going to be better, safer, faster or more effective. Instead of driving forward with for-profit MRI clinics, you should be funding these important health care services in the public system.

Minister, will you do the right thing: stop your for-profit scheme for private MRIs and fund these services in the public system?

Hon Mr Clement: It's clear that we want to be evidence-based. That is what Commissioner Romanow has urged provinces and territories and the federal government. He made an impassioned plea for a single-payer system, which is the system of medicare in the province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada. We support maintaining the single payer. But when it comes to the delivery of those services, he is correct when he says it has to be evidence-based.

I encourage the honourable member, her caucus and her party not to jump to conclusions, also to be evidence-based, also to look at the facts, also to make sure we are ensuring better delivery of services universally accessible to the people of Ontario. That's what we are doing on this side of the House, and we will continue to do so.

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): My question is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. More than a month ago, with much fanfare, you announced $64 million province-wide to help developmentally disabled adults. The southwest region was allocated $1.2 million for direct care.

Minister, the southwest region has 10 counties. The waiting lists for care are staggering. Our local CSCN only serves five of those counties. There are 318 people on their waiting list. There are 74 who have the highest and most severe needs, and they're on what's called the "Oh, my God" list. The $1.2 million does not even scratch the surface. CSCN tells me that the 74 neediest individuals require $6.2 million for care, and that is for only half of the southwest region.

Chelsea Hache and her family have been pleading with your ministry for help. Twice, I've sent you a proposal for funding and it collects dust on your desk. Her family is burnt out and exhausted from years of futile advocacy. Minister, how do you justify leaving people like the Haches to fend for themselves?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): To my colleague across the way, the whole reason he's bringing this up is because our government has been so diligent in finding ways to invest money and to assist those who are developmentally disabled and their families. We made a multi-year announcement in the budget year 2002. It included $104 million, growing to $197 million annually, to enhance services in multi-pronged services. We did foundation service funding for those who are leaving high school for a more independent lifestyle. We've provided, in the $67 million I announced just a few weeks ago, money for revitalizing services so that they can retain staff who will provide services to those who are in homes, and renewed funding and brand new funding for new capitals, for new homes—three different areas of funding in a very large piece of $67 million to serve just the kind of people this gentleman is referring to.

Mr Peters: Minister, I truly believe you don't have any clue of the magnitude of this problem, and I would urge you to come and visit the southwest CSCN to find out exactly and hear first hand how troubling this situation really is. I believe that the way this government and your ministry brushes aside and fails to meet the needs of those with the most severe physical and developmental disabilities is one of this province's worst-kept and dirtiest secrets.

I specifically asked your office for the following information, and I am asking you to please table this information for this Legislature. What are the allocations for every region across this province? How are the allocations divided for capital, support services and agency revitalization? How many people are on each region's waiting list for service, and what are those regions' populations?

If you're so confident that you are caring for the needs of society's most vulnerable, then I challenge you to table that information today. Will you do that? Will you let this Legislature know exactly how many families in this province are waiting for care? Please table that information, Minister.

Hon Mrs Elliott: Let's be very clear. The investment that this government makes to serve the families of the disabled in this province is substantial: over $1 billion. We just kept a promise to the families and to those who are developmentally disabled in the province of Ontario by announcing the second stage—67 million additional new dollars for services for new homes. Our commitment to serve those who are developmentally disabled in Ontario is unequivocal.

How do we decide how that money is going to be distributed? We decide according to the needs that are presented to us from all across the province, based on our best abilities to respond. We do it based on the response that is needed and requested by each individual community.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question today is for the hard-working Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation. The minister works very hard for his constituents and all Ontarians.

It is my understanding that exports of goods and services bring over $190 billion into this province's economy. Exports account for over 50% of Ontario's economy and support more than 1.6 million jobs.

That said, Asia is Ontario's third-largest trading partner. Minister, I understand that you have recently returned from a very important trade mission to China. Can you please advise this House about some details of what you did on this trip?

Hon Jim Flaherty (Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): I thank the member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale for the question.

Ontario is an exporting jurisdiction, and we've come a long way since the dark days of 1985 to 1995. Ontario's economy is strong. We're leading the Canadian economy, and we are an exporter. In fact, more than 50% of Ontario's economy is exported, creating 1.6 million jobs here.

One of our major trading partners, and a great future trading partner of course, is China. There's huge interest and activity by Ontario companies in China; in fact, there are more than 400 Canadian companies with established offices in China to do business. Ontario exports to China were valued at $659 million in 2001 and are growing. So is investment by China in Ontario, and we have increasing evidence of that as we go forward.

What we have done now is we have established the Ontario Marketing Centre in Shanghai, which has been up and running since February 2002.

Mr Gill: Excellent. There's more to be done. Thank you, Minister.

It is clear that our government is committed to promoting Ontario's strengths around the world. Our government is engaged in many initiatives to grow Ontario's economy through enhanced trading relationships with countries and regions all over the world.

I also understand that on your way back from China, you went to San Diego, USA, for a conference called CoreNet. Can you please tell this House what this conference was all about and why you attended?

Hon Mr Flaherty: I thank the member. CoreNet is the premier conference in North America for corporate real estate and site location. More than 2,500 decision-makers were in San Diego. I'm pleased to inform the House that they're going to be in Toronto in May; from May 3 to May 7, I believe. We expect to have even more—3,000 or more of these folks who make decisions about where corporations are going to locate, where plants are going to be located, where jobs are going to be created in North America.

I had the privilege of hosting two Ontario events, both very successful, on November 18 and 19 in San Diego, with these decision-makers. I'm proud to tell you that they're all looking forward to coming to Toronto, Ontario, Canada, next May.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): My question is to the Chair of Management Board. He seems to be up there with the media, Speaker. Could we stop the clock until he comes down?

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Maybe we could stop the clock and the minister could—

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr Gerretsen: My question is to the Chair of Management Board, and it relates once again to the OHIP building. Minister, as I know you believe, this is not in any way, shape or form a partisan issue. It deals with the health and welfare of the employees we have in that building and it deals with the people who utilize the building and have over the last number of years.

Minister, there is a deep concern that even though you have agreed to some air quality testing, that process has happened before on a number of different occasions. What the workers are looking for inside the building and what the GeoCor report has clearly indicated is that what's necessary is that a consulting firm be given access to the building so that drill wells, in effect, can be set up both inside the building and inside the foundation of the building to find out once and for all whether or not the coal tar that is closely associated with the building, and may indeed be under the building, is allowing toxins to enter and have some effect on the people who work there and the people who utilize the building.

Minister, you know that there's a much higher incidence of cancer rates; higher incidence of pulmonary diseases, higher incidences of immune system deficiencies that people suffer from etc.

Everybody wants to get to the bottom of this. Why don't you agree to have—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the member's time is up.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): The member will note, because we had a brief conversation the other day exactly on this point, that my concern is just like his: for the employees of the province of Ontario.

What I did say to him was this: the union is working with us right now; in fact, they met yesterday. I think it's important for them to be satisfied in terms of the process going forward and the consultant being chosen. We've agreed, certainly, to work with them, and the solution has to be one that the union and the employees agree to; otherwise it makes no sense.

The actual issue: part of what they're trying to do right now is some more air testing. If there's any indication at all that it's something in the soil, we have to do what we can do to protect these employees. I am not ruling out anything. Whether it's soil testing or air testing, it's important for both the union and our group to work together, the ministries as well, to make sure they're comfortable in what they're doing.

At the end of the day, I want our employees happy with the solution, and for us to come up with that solution so they'll be safe. I don't think there's any other answer here.

Mr Gerretsen: Minister, I appreciate what's been done and I think more should be done. The GeoCor report clearly indicates that what has to happen are some more monitoring wells set up both inside and outside the building to deal with the coal tar situation.

What you've agreed to is air quality testing. That's already been done before. We need to take that next step, as this independent engineering report clearly indicates. I just hope that you will work toward that end so that the people who utilize that building and work in the building can have much greater assurances as to their health and safety. Will you give them that commitment here today?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: I recall that when that report was released, the particular company indicated not to take too much out of context here because it's very preliminary.

Having said that, it won't matter to me what we need to do, whether it's air testing or drilling. At the end of the day it's important that the committee, which is made up of the union and ourselves, pick the right consultants. We'll follow the consultants' recommendations. Whether it's soil-testing and the remediation of that, we'll do what we can. We'll do what we have to do to make sure our employees are safe. That's our commitment.

I think they're going to go through the consultant to have some recommendation. I'm not an expert on this and I know you're not as well, so we have to abide by whatever the consultant's recommendation is, and that consultant, as I said, is being chosen in co-operation with the union and also the ministries. I think at the end of the day we'll have a reasoned recommendation that will protect our employees, and we'll do what we can to protect them, obviously.

ACCESSIBILITY FOR THE DISABLED

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): I direct my question to the Minister of Citizenship, the Honourable Carl DeFaria, the dynamo from Mississauga East. I want to take the opportunity to ask you about some of the most recent outstanding appointments you've made to the Accessibility Advisory Council of Ontario, created as part of the Ontarians with Disabilities Act, 2001.

The appointment of Brampton Paralympian Jeff Adams as the new chair of the council, Barry McMahon as the vice-chair, as well as the eight additional members will make a significant contribution to our government's commitment to create a barrier-free Ontario.

There are many people with disabilities in my riding who are watching the development of the ODA with great interest. Minister, could you tell me about the council and how it will help improve the lives of Ontario's 1.9 million people with disabilities?

Hon Carl DeFaria (Minister of Citizenship, minister responsible for seniors): I welcome the opportunity to tell the Legislature about the Accessibility Advisory Council of Ontario.

The council's role is to provide me with advice related to the implementation of the Ontarians with Disabilities Act. The council advises and reports to me on issues such as the accessibility of government services, as well as those services funded by government, the accessibility for people with disabilities to employment opportunities and other accessibility-related issues as they arise.

Because accessibility is a shared responsibility, the council will assist the government in engaging the private sector in partnership to develop initiatives and inclusive programs and services for people with disabilities.

Mr Johnson: I thank the minister for the response. One of the reasons I'm interested is that earlier this week a member of the opposition talked about a form that he said would make it very difficult for ODSP recipients. I just wanted to make sure this council will debunk that kind of information.

Minister, as you mentioned, this council will provide advice on issues that affect people with disabilities. In fact, I was pleased to hear that Kathryn Bremner, who's been a long-time community leader and advocate for people with disabilities in both my riding and our colleague's riding of Whitby-Ajax, has been appointed as one of the eight new members of the council. Further, Duncan Read, an existing council member, is also active in disability issues in the Ajax area as a judge and former president of the Ontario March of Dimes.

Can you please tell us more about other accessibility advisory council members and of course any upcoming meetings?

Hon Mr DeFaria: With respect to our government's commitment to achieving an accessible Ontario, I have appointed a group of exceptional individuals to supplement our existing high-calibre members of the council, bringing the full complement to 12 members.

Along with our existing members, Jeff Adams, our newly appointed chair, and Barry McMahon, our newly appointed vice-chair, we have Duncan Read and Dean La Bute. Last month's appointments also include Kathryn Bremner of Whitby, Valerie Baker of Waterloo, Barbara Fowke of Kitchener, Uzma Khan of Mississauga, Tracy MacCharles of Pickering and Kristin Snoddon, Karen Liberman and André Bélanger of Toronto.

I'm also pleased to report that we are having our first full meeting today and tomorrow. I know their advice will be important to moving forward our government's commitment to achieving an accessible Ontario.

PENSION PLANS

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): My question is to the Minister of Finance. You announced today that never are you going to proclaim the legislation that gives employers the right to strip surpluses out of pensions. Aside from that issue is a bigger issue. As you know, in 1991 the NDP government passed a regulation that basically sets up the regime we've got today that prevents employers from being able to strip surpluses from pensions and gives employees access to those surpluses.

My question to you is very simply this: that regulation comes due December 31 this year. Are you going to reclaims the NDP regulation that was put in place in 1991 and leave the system as status quo?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): We will continue to extend that regulation, as has been the practice.

Mr Bisson: You are agreeing you are going to be extending the regulation. We take that as good news.

The second part of my question is simply this: if you're taking the step today to issue this press release that basically says measures in Bill 198 dealing with pension issues will never be proclaimed even if the bill is passed by legislation, why don't you take the next step, which is to take this completely out of the legislation itself?

The precedent for doing that has already occurred on two occasions in this Legislature, in Bill 47 and Bill 72. Your government moved finance bills into committee of the whole to do exactly that. I'm putting to you that we can do that lickety-split. We will give you unanimous consent and time-allocate the time in committee of the whole to remove this out of legislation. Will you do so?

Hon Mrs Ecker: I appreciate the suggestion from the honourable member, but we've been very clear. We think this will be an appropriate way to move forward to make sure there's the expert committee and the consultation. We're not proceeding with these amendments.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): My question is to the Minister of the Environment. Minister, will you stop the untreated, highly toxic sludge from the Domtar tank in Sydney, Nova Scotia, from being land-filled here in Ontario?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I appreciate the question from the member opposite. The situation is very difficult. It's a very difficult situation. There are three such particular places in this country that can receive that kind of material: one is in Quebec, one is in Ontario and one is in Alberta. We have set guidelines, very strict, to ensure that in fact it's going to be pretreated in future, plus it's encased in cement and dealt with in a very environmentally sensitive way.

I say to the member opposite, this is not a new situation. You're the member; you've lived there all your life. You know that this has been operating for a number of years. But with three operations in Canada—we ship ours to Alberta; we ship some to Quebec; we receive some—it would be virtually impossible for me to put a stop order on all of it coming in. But what I can do, and what I have done, is make it environmentally sensitive, harmonize our rules, and you've seen a reduction of 31%.

Ms Di Cocco: Unfortunately, Minister, the experts in Nova Scotia, as well as the people in Nova Scotia I have spoken to, have said that waste should not even leave there, that they should treat it and deal with it there because it makes it even more dangerous to take it out and ship it here to Ontario.

Toxic hazardous waste importation has quadrupled in this province since 1995; it has. The landfill that we have near Brigden, in St Clair township—you know the full-time inspector that you stated was on that site? He's not on that site. He just shows up whenever he feels like it. So we don't even have an on-site inspector. The legacy that we have, because of the expansion that was done in 1997, is incredibly detrimental to that area, long-term.

Minister, I'm asking you again: please stop that waste from coming into Ontario. It does no one any good.

Hon Mr Stockwell: If I could unilaterally stop it—I don't have that power, regardless. It goes through an environmental process that you know about and I know about. I can only say this to you: the Sarnia Observer on November 13, 2002, quoted Phil Whiting, a University of Western Ontario professor of chemical and biochemical engineering. He said that if we deal with this process the way we're dealing with it, "If this is done right this is a pretty darn good solution."

We're seeking a solution. I understand the member opposite has this in her riding. I appreciate your concern and the concern of your residents. I can only go about handling it in the most environmentally sensitive way, considering there are only three sites in this country. We ship our stuff out sometimes; we take some in. I can only tell you what the experts have told me: if it's properly handled, environmentally encased, dealt with and transported properly, it is a safe and effective process that they're using.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO SAVINGS OFFICE

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): I want to introduce five people from the gallery who have been involved in collecting this petition. They hail from Oxford county. They're Brian Brown, Laura Rowbotham, Richard Brown, Dorothy Brown and the ever-incredible Howard Clynick. They've done a lot of work in presenting 1,500 names on this petition, which reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the following names in petition, request the government of Ontario to review their decision to sell the Province of Ontario Savings banks and halt their intention to sell;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To cancel the decision to sell the Province of Ontario Savings branches, as many account holders are seniors and long-time account holders, among many other very satisfied customers. These banks and staff are a credit to their province."

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Could we stop the clock while the government House leader does the orders of business for next week.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, can I also seek consent?

Interjections.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I want to get the attention of the NDP. I'm seeking consent. I believe I have unanimous consent to move a motion without notice regarding private members' public business.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Notwithstanding standing order 96(d), the following changes must be made to ballot lists for private members' public business: Mr Bisson and Mr Prue exchange places in order of precedence, such that Mr Bisson assumes ballot item 76 and Mr Prue assumes ballot item 73; and that notwithstanding standing order 96(g), the requirement for notice be waived with respect to ballot item 73.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Pursuant to standing order 55, I have a statement of business for the House next week.

Monday afternoon we will resume debate on Bill 213. Monday evening we'll continue debate on Bill 210.

Tuesday afternoon we'll debate Bill 209. Tuesday evening we'll debate Bill 213 again.

Wednesday afternoon we will debate Bill 210. Wednesday evening's business is to be determined.

Thursday morning's private members' business will discuss ballot items 73 standing in the name of Mr Prue and 74 standing in the name of Mr Patten. Thursday afternoon's debate is still to be determined. Thursday evening's debate is still to be determined.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Continuing on petitions.

ALUMINUM SMELTER

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition to clean up the abandoned aluminum smelter in Georgina. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the abandoned aluminum smelter located on Warden Avenue in the town of Georgina has been deemed to have heavy metals exceeding Ministry of the Environment guidelines; and

"Whereas the site is adjacent to a wetland that leads to the Maskinonge River feeding into Lake Simcoe;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"The Ministry of the Environment should immediately conduct a full environmental assessment and cleanup of the site."

I affix my signature. I am in complete agreement with the sentiments expressed in the petition.

HYDRO RATES

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I have a petition that's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and deals with the Hydro situation.

"Whereas electricity bills have skyrocketed under the Harris-Eves government's flawed electricity plan; and

"Whereas some consumers have signed higher fixed-rate contracts with retailers, without adequate consumer protection; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has failed to address electricity supply shortages in Ontario, forcing the purchase of American power at premium prices, driving up prices still further; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government appointed a board of directors for Hydro One that has been paying themselves extravagant salaries, compensation packages and severances for senior executives; and

"Whereas Hydro One bought 90 municipal utilities, serving about 240,000 people across Ontario, at premium prices and with borrowed funds. These purchases with borrowed funds have increased Ontario's debt burden; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has added additional fees and taxes to local electricity distribution companies. These charges have also been passed along to consumers;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Harris-Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair and reasonable prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario and that the Harris-Eves government and its leader Ernie Eves call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on this issue."

HOMELESSNESS

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have a petition which reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario provincial government has totally withdrawn support for the construction of the new social housing project in this province, therefore endangering the lives of the less fortunate and residents who cannot afford paying the high cost of rent; and

"Whereas the Ontario government should recognize that there is a serious shortage of affordable housing in this province; and

"Whereas the Ontario government should recognize that the homeless situation in this province has reached a crisis proportion and that some measures will have to be taken to remedy this situation; and

"Whereas the Ontario government should recognize that the hostel system was not meant to be for permanent housing but is for temporary shelters; and

"Whereas the Ontario government should implement the 1% solution promoted by the Toronto Disaster Relief Committee and restore the Rent Control Act which was taken away by the current government;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"All members of the Legislature take actions to end the homeless situation in Ontario with any means that are at the Harris-Eves government's disposition."

I will affix my signature to this petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% over three years, or $3.02 per diem in the first year and $2 in the second year and $2 in the third year, effective September 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month after three years; and....

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario will still rank last among comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas the government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan" back "in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase over three years in accommodation costs to no more than the cost-of-living increase annually and that the provincial government provide adequate funding for nursing and personal care to a level that is at least at the average standard for nursing and personal care in those 10 jurisdictions included in the government's own study."

I affix my signature. I'm in complete agreement with this petition.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): This petition is about Bill 77. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 77 passed second reading on June 28, 2001;

"Whereas Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, received committee hearings in November 2001;

"Whereas Bill 77 addresses privacy concerns for those who wish to avoid or delay contact;

"Whereas adoptees are dying from genetic diseases in the absence of their family medical history; and

"Whereas birth mothers were never promised confidentiality;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Immediately call Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, for third reading and final vote."

I, of course, will affix my signature to this petition, because I am in full agreement with it.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I have another petition to the Legislature of Ontario.

"Whereas the daily increase of $7.02 starting August 1, 2002, for residents in long-term-care facilities is not in keeping with the increases of prior years. This large increase in rates is a severe financial burden to residents and to family caregivers to maintain a loved one in a long-term-care facility and maintain themselves in order not to ask the government for financial assistance;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to repeal this large increase and reduce the rates to a nominal increase as in prior years."

It's signed by approximately 400 people from the greater Toronto area. I agree with it and I've signed it accordingly. I'm handing it over to Olaniyi.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): This petition reads:

"To the Ontario Legislature:

"Whereas the Conservative government's plan to privatize and deregulate Ontario's electricity system will lead to higher rates because private owners will sell more power to US customers whose rates are typically 50% higher than Ontario's; and

"Whereas selling coal plants like Nanticoke to the private sector will lead to more pollution because the private owners will run the plants at full capacity to earn a profit; and

"Whereas electricity deregulation in California has led to sky-high rates and blackouts; and

"Whereas Ontario needs a system of public power that will ensure rate stability, environmental protection and secure access to power;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the undersigned call on the government to scrap electricity deregulation and privatization and bring in a system of accountable public power. The first priority for such a public power system must be incentives for energy conservation and green power. Electricity rates and major energy projects must be subject to full public hearings and binding rulings by a public regulator instead of leaving energy rates to private profit."

I will affix my signature to this petition because I fully support it.

CHILDREN'S HEALTH SERVICES

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Ontario government is shutting down the heart surgery unit at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario; and

"Whereas the closure of this program will restrict the accessibility to life-saving surgery for children in eastern Ontario; and

"Whereas every year CHEO treats 140 cases of seriously ill children close to home; and

"Whereas centralizing children's heart surgery in Toronto will force patients and their families to travel 400 to 600 kilometres away from home at a traumatic time; and

"Whereas there is a waiting list for cardiac surgery in Toronto but not at CHEO; and

"Whereas the people of eastern Ontario demand accessible, quality health care for their children;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to immediately override the government's decision to close this life-saving program and ensure that top-quality, accessible health care remains available to every child in eastern Ontario."

I affix my signature. I'm in complete agreement.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have another petition on adoption disclosure, a little different from the last one, to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads:

"Whereas in Ontario, adopted adults are denied a right available to all non-adoptees, that is, the unrestricted right to identifying information concerning their family of origin;

"Whereas Canada has ratified standards of civil and human rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the UN Declaration of Human Rights and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child;

"Whereas these rights are denied to persons affected by the secrecy provisions in the adoption sections of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts of the province of Ontario;

"Whereas research in other jurisdictions has demonstrated that disclosure does not cause harm, that access to such information is beneficial to adult adoptees, adoptive parents and birth parents, and that birth parents rarely requested or were promised anonymity;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to enact revision of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts to permit adult adoptees unrestricted access to full personal identifying birth information; permit birth parents, grandparents and siblings access to the adopted person's amended birth certificate when the adopted person reaches age 18; permit adoptive parents unrestricted access to identifying birth information of their minor children; allow adopted persons and birth relatives to file a contact veto restricting contact by the searching party; replace mandatory reunion counselling with optional counselling."

I will affix my signature to this petition because I support it.

ALUMINUM SMELTER

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It's designed to clean up the abandoned aluminum smelter in Georgina. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the abandoned aluminum smelter located on Warden Avenue in the town of Georgina has been deemed to have heavy metals exceeding Ministry of the Environment guidelines; and

"Whereas the site is adjacent to a wetland that leads to the Maskinonge River, feeding into Lake Simcoe;...

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"The Ministry of the Environment should immediately conduct a full environmental assessment and cleanup of the site."

I affix my signature. I'm in complete agreement with the sentiments expressed in this petition.

1530

LONG-TERM CARE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have another petition which refers to the long-term-care fee increase. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Conservative government increased fees paid by Ontario seniors and other vulnerable people living in long-term-care facilities by 15%, or $213 a month, instead of providing adequate government funding for long-term care; and

"Whereas the Conservative government has therefore shifted the cost of long-term care on to the backs of the frail elderly and their families; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas in 1996 Ontario abandoned its minimum requirement of 2.25 hours of nursing care per nursing home resident; and

"Whereas the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own study, government cutbacks have resulted in Ontario seniors receiving just 14 minutes a day of care from a registered nurse (less than half the time given to residents in Saskatchewan); and

"Whereas the report also found that Ontario residents receive the least nursing, bathing and general care of nine other comparable locations;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Join the Ontario New Democratic Party in demanding the Conservative government eliminate the 15% fee increase for residents of long-term-care facilities, increase the number of nursing care hours for each resident to a minimum of 3.5 hours per day, and provide stable, increased funding to ensure quality care is there for Ontario residents of long-term-care facilities."

I will affix my signature to this petition because I fully support it.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ELECTRICITY PRICING, CONSERVATION
AND SUPPLY ACT, 2002LOI DE 2002 SUR L'ÉTABLISSEMENT
DU PRIX DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ,
LA CONSERVATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ
ET L'APPROVISIONNEMENT
EN ÉLECTRICITÉ

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 27, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 210, An Act to amend various acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity / Projet de loi 210, Loi modifiant diverses lois en ce qui concerne l'établissement du prix de l'électricité, la conservation de l'électricité et l'approvisionnement en électricité et traitant d'autres questions liées à l'électricité.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): It's my understanding that in the rotation it is now the government's turn, and therefore I will look for a speaker, and will recognize the member for Nipissing.

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): I rise today to speak in strong support of Bill 210, the government's proposed Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act.

This bill reflects the government's commitment to the energy policy that encourages new electricity generation, promotes green energy and energy conservation, and helps to keep electricity prices as low as possible. To that end, this government is taking a number of measures to generate new resources of electricity.

Although we have enough electricity to meet our immediate demand, we need more generation to keep prices down and to meet the long-term needs of families, small businesses and farmers across this province.

We are committed to ensuring that Ontario has an efficient, competitive and reliable supply of energy now and into the future. As my esteemed colleagues the Honourable John Baird and the hard-working member from Niagara Falls, Bart Maves, announced on November 12, we are taking steps toward increasing electricity output at Niagara Falls.

First, we are directing, as a private-public partnership, Ontario Power Generation to proceed with the Beck tunnel project. This will involve building a 10-kilometre tunnel, which will increase output at the existing Sir Adam Beck generating station by some 10%.

Second, the Ministry of Energy is proceeding with an independent study on the feasibility of moving forward with Beck 3. This would involve building another approximately 10.5-kilometre tunnel and two 350-megawatt generating stations.

We are directing OPG, Ontario Power Generation, to speed up assessment of the new 500-megawatt generating project on Toronto's port lands on the site of the old Hearn generating station. This public-private partnership would generate sufficient electricity for approximately half a million homes.

Not only are we, as the government, making sure to develop new sources of electric power, we are also taking steps through this proposed legislation and other measures to ensure that a growing portion of Ontario's energy supply is derived from green sources.

I think that's a good point. When I think of my nieces and nephews, Bailey, Charlie, and Joey Puddister, I want to make sure that they, as they get older—because they're quite young right now—have an environment that's clean and safe. So I think this is the right initiative, where we're going to go toward green power to generate the power and electricity that we need for future generations of Ontarians, and protecting the environment at the same time. So this is a key part of the legislation that speaks to not only green power but conserving power as it stands right now.

The TransAlta natural gas plant at Sarnia is undergoing trial tests and will come on-line early in the new year with a capacity of 490 megawatts. ATCO, Coral Energy, and Ontario Power Generation's natural gas facility at Brighton Beach is scheduled to start generating in 2004. It has a 578-megawatt capacity.

A number of small water power, wind, and landfill-gas-emission projects are also under construction or at the final stages of approval, with a combined output of over 100 megawatts. We are supporting a centre for excellence for electricity established jointly between McMaster University and the University of Waterloo, which I happened to be at yesterday and I can tell you it's quite a university, down in Waterloo. The centre will research, develop, and demonstrate electricity generation technologies. It will also explore the application of new technologies to improve the efficiencies and, just as important, to reduce emissions in the generation and distribution of electricity.

Mr Speaker, as you know, currently, projects as small as two megawatts can be subject to review under the Environmental Assessment Act. I see you nodding your head, so I know that you know that. This is a barrier to the development of new supplies of clean energy. We are proposing to raise the threshold for the environmental approvals exemption for clean generation. I think that speaks very well to this party's desire to see green power come on-line to protect our environment.

Mr Speaker, I know you would agree with me that we have to look after our next generation, our grandchildren and their children, to ensure that they have a sustainable environment, a reliable source of electricity, not only so that they can heat their homes and turn the lights on but to provide opportunities for them and their children in job creation and in creating a reliable source of this power so that our province can grow and bring prosperity.

Together, I believe these measures would ensure consumer stability to allow us to focus on the many necessary developments that need to take place in the areas of generation, including alternative and renewable forms of generation, and conservation.

I think you can see the theme here: we're talking about conservation and green. I think that's key to this piece of legislation, it's key to this bill, and it's key to where I stand on the fact that we have to protect our environment and at the same time provide a reliable source of electricity, of power to the families and small businesses of the province of Ontario, if we're going to move forward and create the opportunities for our youth to be employed in the future.

Bill 210 proposes a number of incentives for investing in and producing clean energy. My colleague the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Janet Ecker, spoke about many of these initiatives last night. I actually watched it on TV last night from my apartment and I thought she spoke very well and very clearly on this subject. I congratulate her on that. I'm sure all the members opposite listened as well. I remember hearing a lot of them agreeing with what she said, I believe. They were nodding their heads.

The government believes these initiatives are necessary in order to jumpstart investment in the new generation facilities in Ontario. In face of the overall slowdown in new electricity investments across North America, we need power, and we need it soon, and these measures will help ensure that Ontario has the investment it requires to generate the power it needs.

I also believe strongly that our government has the obligation to carry out as many recommendations outlined in the select committee on alternative fuels' final report as possible. I am a firm believer in the role that such energy sources can play in creating a strong and sustainable economy in Ontario. I was impressed by the Premier's recognition of the importance of this subject, and I am encouraged that he has appointed my colleague Steve Gilchrist to be Ontario's first commissioner of alternative energy.

I can tell you that I've had the opportunity to sit on many committees with Mr Gilchrist, and I was very impressed with his knowledge of power generation. He seemed to have a good understanding of the whole subject. From when I sat down with him and he was going over the different aspects of this legislation and what Ontario needs, I think the Premier made an excellent choice in this individual, Mr Gilchrist.

I'm looking forward to hearing about the new recommendations and helping to build on his excellent work on the select committee. In fact, at this time, I'd like to publicly acknowledge the excellent support and involvement of every one of my colleagues.

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): Oh, yeah.

Mr McDonald: Mr Dunlop is here tonight. I want to support the involvement of everyone who sat on this committee, especially the hard-working member for Northumberland, Dr Doug Galt, who is here today as well. I must say to the constituents of Mr Galt that they are very lucky to have this individual. I can tell you, I think he has perfect attendance, and he's here day in and day out. He's here until 9:30 just about every night. I know he's here tonight, and he's smiling. Mr Galt, we appreciate how hard-working you are.

I believe that shows, regardless of political stripe, that all Ontario legislators have a firm commitment to making a better Ontario. I say that very openly. We all sit here because we all want what's best for Ontario. I would encourage all members of the Legislature to support this legislation, which really encourages green energy and conservation. I think those are two key things that, when I read the legislation, come back to me, living in northern Ontario. We're very fortunate, in that part of the province, that it's beautiful and clean. We support these initiatives. I can tell you that, being in northern Ontario, we understand how important it is to keep our environment safe, clean and viable for our grandchildren in the future.

There are some things that individuals can do as well. For example, this proposed legislation will provide individuals with a sales tax rebate for the purchase of solar panels. This goes back to clean energy, obviously, Mr Speaker. I see you nodding your head, and I know that you like the idea of clean energy. We all like the idea of clean, green energy. This is really free energy, coming from the sun, that will be able to power our homes and businesses. I like the idea of providing the sales tax rebate to the average citizen who wants to protect the environment. It provides incentive for him to go out and buy solar panels. Really, it cuts down his heating costs. I think that's good for all of us, and it's great that we go back to the fact that we want to protect our environment. Any time I see anybody with a solar screen on their roof and they happen to be out mowing their lawn or whatever the case is, I always stop to thank them for providing that service for all Ontarians, because what they have to understand by providing that is that it takes some of the demand off the grid. That enables the peak times to come down a bit. It really promotes conservation and protects our environment.

We recognize the high capital cost of these panels, but I think we all can see the long-term benefits, as I just mentioned earlier. This sales tax rebate helps make it affordable. We hope to see 100,000 homes convert to solar power within five years. That's quite a goal, but I think it's a worthwhile goal, and I think our environment deserves that. I hope Ontarians encourage their federal MPs to help Ontario in this important cause by putting in place a federal tax incentive similar to what we are proposing. I believe that all levels of government share in the responsibility of protecting the environment to ensure that everyone has reliable energy, reliable electricity, and that all three levels of government should work together for the benefit of all Canadians, all Ontarians. I think it's key that we ask that all three levels of government participate in such a program.

Some of these proposals are things that governments and other large organizations can do as well. We're committing that the Ontario government will target 20% of its electricity usage to come from renewable sources. That speaks to green power; that speaks to conservation. We challenge other organizations to match our commitment. I can tell you that our province would be a lot better off if large organizations and individuals take the challenge that this government wants to put forward. To help make this possible, we're proposing an electronic information system that will provide generators with a transferable electronic certificate showing the environmental characteristics of each megawatt hour of generation. That's quite a mouthful. Those are pretty big words, but I think they are key to protecting our environment, providing reliable energy to our homes and businesses in Ontario and, particularly because I'm in northern Ontario, providing sustainable and reliable power to northern Ontario.

I know I'm running out of time, Mr Speaker. I can see that you're concerned that I might not be able to get all my speaking notes into the record, but I want to assure you that I am going to do my best.

We are committing the government to the goal of ensuring that every newly constructed government or other institutional building is energy self-sufficient, using an alternative or clean source of energy. I think that's a great initiative. I think that shows leadership on the part of government. I hope that all MPPs will support this legislation that provides clean, safe energy to all of us who live in this province.

Through this legislation, we are proposing a requirement for net metering and connection arrangements between distributors, self-generators and small-scale generation.

One exciting opportunity that we have in Ontario, with its remote and First Nations communities, is to use wind power to supplement or even replace the costly, environmentally questionable diesel generators that, to date, have been these communities' only source of power. I was in Mattawa, Ontario, last weekend and I was talking to Mayor Backer, who seemed very keen on the fact that maybe we might be able to put clean power in the north. I was explaining to him these wind funnels that will harvest the wind. They'll provide clean energy to the north. He seemed very keen on the idea. I think it would be great for northern Ontario if it participated in this type of initiative. Not only does it promote environmentally clean electricity, it also promotes job creation and shows that northern Ontario is taking a lead in the fact that they want to make sure they protect the environment as well. I hope the federal government can lend its commitment to this very sensible and long-overdue idea.

These changes are the initial steps in the move to innovate and the groundbreaking opportunities to use alternative fuel and energy. To better harness the excellent minds in Ontario working on alternative energy, the government is planning to establish a centre of excellence for alternative energy jointly between Queen's University and the University of Toronto. Its goal is to make Ontario the leading North American jurisdiction for research and development of clean energy technologies.

By paying attention to conservation, we can effectively increase our available supply of generation, help moderate prices and protect the environment. It's done with immediate payback and immediate reward for an individual company making that effort. To spur that effort, the Ontario government has committed to reducing its own power consumption by 10%. We challenge everyone—individuals, companies and institutions—to follow our lead.

We plan to help. The government will be directing substantial efforts toward a public education campaign that shows electricity consumers can reduce their consumption and thereby lower their electricity bills. Looking to the future, to a time where prices are stable enough to return to a competitive consumer market for electricity, we need to lay the infrastructure for the time-of-use pricing of electricity. To that end, we believe that every home should have the opportunity to take advantage of interval meters. We propose that all local hydro companies should be required to offer this service.

As these initiatives demonstrate, this government has brought common sense and stability to the electricity market in Ontario. I'd like to thank you for my time.

The Acting Speaker: Members now have up to two minutes for questions and comments.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Obviously the government is going to be required to pay, for the rebates and reduction in future bills, some hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars. I know the member would want to join me in expressing the concern that if federal dollars coming for health care are not specifically spent directly by the federal government, there are people within the Ontario government, particularly since Guy Giorno is back now, who will want to siphon away that money that is destined for health care and use it to pay the rebates. I know the member for Nipissing will want to join me in urging his colleagues not to do that. In fact, my recommendation, flowing from the Romanow report, is that the federal government increase its spending substantially on health care and spend it directly in Ontario on such things as diagnostic equipment and the cost of infrastructure in hospitals; in other words, places where the federal government can spend it directly, so that the members over there in the government don't take the money, as they have in so many federal-provincial programs, stick it in their pockets and give it away on their tax cuts instead of using it appropriately for health care.

Interjection: Name one.

Mr Bradley: I'll name one for you: the millennium scholarship. You took that money away. You siphoned it away from the students for your own purposes. What about the clawback in the child care tax credit, where you take it from those people and pull it back? Or disabled people? There are so many instances where this government takes the federal money and then puts its own money away in tax cuts for the richest people. I know my friend from Nipissing will be ever-vigilant about that and not want to see that money being steered somewhere else. I'm confident he will agree with me on that.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): So here we have a government standing up righteously and piously claiming to be acting in the best interests of Ontarians, claiming that they're working hard to stabilize rates. What is wrong with this picture? They're the guys who did this in the first place. They deregulated and privatized hydro. They had been warned time and time again—by this party, by Howard Hampton and the NDP, the electricity coalition and many others—that this was going to happen. There were examples of it all over the world, and they went ahead and did it anyway. They said, "Trust us. Rates are going to go down." And here we are today with this desperate pre-election ploy to get people to hopefully vote for them the next time around. Well, I will guarantee you that they won't, because they're on to this government now.

They brought in this deregulation and privatization despite the warnings, did not act in the best interests of Ontarians, but acted in the best interests of the private sector, who wanted to make big profits off the Ontarians they're supposed to be representing. And now they stand up and are offering to give us back some of our own money, that we pay through our taxes anyway, to try to cover up the huge, huge dilemma they are in as they start to go down, down, down in the polls.

What are we going to see after the next election, should they, God forbid, be re-elected? We know what the plans are: to let those rates go up again, because they have no choice. That is what we're looking at here. The people of Ontario know that and they're not going to go along with it.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): If the comments from the member from St Catharines weren't so laughable, I'd respond. But the excellent member from Nipissing and his comments are right on topic. The viewer today should be aware that at the end of the day this is about the consumer and having a reliable source of electricity in the future.

If you look back far enough, the member from Toronto-Danforth, when they were in government, really started this problem. As I understand it, in 1993 they identified that there was a serious problem. Their whole government was in collapse—the social contract and things like that. They ignored it. In the meantime, Howard's been riding around Ontario in a bus with tinted windows—and there's nobody in the bus—preaching. I'll be speaking on this in some substance later.

I want to pay respect for the important issues that the member for Nipissing drove home. This government, in preparation for the broader debate, did call an alternative fuels committee, an alternative energy committee. Mr Gilchrist and Mr Galt of course served on that committee, as did Garfield and pretty well all of the members here. In fact, the member from Toronto-Danforth was on the committee. This was a unanimously adopted report, I might add. I had the good fortune to serve on that committee. But it's one of many committees this government has initiated. Mr Bradley, the member from St Catharines, would understand.

This whole thing goes back even further, from the Macdonald commission report day to the very important select committee on nuclear affairs, the NAOP, the nuclear asset optimization plan, which really clearly identified there was $3 billion or $4 billion of investment required at that time—Mr Bradley was on that committee—to get the nuclear plants up to production. In fact, OPG arguably still hasn't delivered on that $3-billion or $4-billion investment.

So the member from Nipissing, I commend you for your comments today, for helping the viewer understand what this government's committed to doing: having safe, clean, reliable power into the future.

Ms Churley: What a joke. Come on. I know you gotta do what you gotta do.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr O'Toole: If there's no speaker to stand up, I'll stand up.

The Acting Speaker: There is somebody ready to go, once you all come to order. That especially includes you. Please take your seat.

Ms Churley: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Well, you too, for that matter.

Once we have order, which I know we're going to have, we'll go to the member for St Paul's.

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I listened closely to the member for Nipissing's speech. It was an optimistic speech about government conservation plans. I guess I'd firstly point out that the marketplace has been open for more than 200 days. This government has been in power for more than seven years. For the government to introduce conservation plans 200 days from the marketplace opening is either an acknowledgement of defeat, that in fact the marketplace wasn't ready in the first place, or it's simply a reversal.

I was interested to hear the member talk at length about how great these government conservation programs would be. I thought he might be interested to know that it wasn't that long ago—January 25, 2002, in Report on Business magazine—that the Minister of Energy, Jim Wilson, said this: "The private sector asked us to get out of large-scale government conservation programs. Those efforts may have made the odd person feel good but they had absolutely no effect."

I'm sure he wasn't referring to you, I say to the member for Nipissing. I think the problem, writ large, is a government that expresses with enormous confidence the power of capitalist imperialism without checks, without supply, without demand, without management and without rate relief, and then the next day reverses its position entirely and says that the conservation programs that the Minister of Energy said would be of little effect are now going to be wildly effective, as described by the member for Nipissing. So I look forward to hearing what he thinks of what the Minister of Energy said on January 25 of this year.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Nipissing now has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr McDonald: I'd like to thank the members from St Catharines, Toronto-Danforth, Durham and St Paul's for their thoughts and their concerns on my 20 minutes on this legislation.

I listened very closely to what they had to say and I particularly caught the member from St Catharines talking about, "Are we taking this funding out of health care?" or this or that. I believe that if we're moving forward as a province, we have to promote conservation, and by doing that, sir, we're also providing a legacy for our grandchildren and their children, to provide a safe environment for them, and at the same time a reliable power source for our homes, for our businesses and for the prosperity of Ontario.

The one part that really jumps out of this legislation to me is the fact that we're encouraging green energy, we're encouraging conservation, we're encouraging citizens to be responsible, to turn off their lights, to turn down their heat when they don't really need it. Coming from northern Ontario, I can tell you that when we turn our lights off up there, it gets pretty dark at night. I find living down here in Toronto that I turn off the lights in my apartment and it's still light out. It just seems that everybody leaves their lights on all night long, and I find it incredible that this goes on. I like the challenge: we're challenging individuals and corporations and institutions maybe to turn those lights off. There's no need to have a 50-storey apartment building with every light on.

I thank you for the opportunity to speak, finally, in members' comments.

The Acting Speaker: It's my understanding that both leadoff debates were deferred and therefore I will look to the official opposition for their lead-off debate. With that, the member for St Paul's now has the floor.

Mr Bryant: The electricity competition marketplace opened more than 200 days ago, more than seven years into Tory governance. Now we are quite literally getting the bill for it.

Seven years, 200 days, into market opening, the government of Ontario got around to announcing their supply and demand plan for electricity, got around to rolling out the rebates and the price shock absorbers owed to all Ontarians. So after 200 days of this Tory journey of incompetence, the Eves government asks us to trust them that they've got it right this time.

We all recognize that price relief was desperately needed. As Dalton McGuinty and Ontario Liberals said in this House time and time again, many Ontarians simply could not afford to pay their hydro bills. It's not that they were uncomfortable bills, it's not that they were unpopular bills; they were unaffordable bills.

I met people in Wawa who told me they had pulled out their hydro cables because they just couldn't afford to pay the bills any more and they were running their electricity through a John Deere diesel generator in their backyard. It was the 19th century, but it wasn't. It's a have province, but suddenly it wasn't.

While of course we need to bring in this rate relief and this price relief for all Ontarians, we say that much of this may be too little and it's certainly more than 200 days too late. Premier Ernie Eves has lost the trust of Ontarians with their electricity. More than 200 days ago, the Premier of Ontario, the Honourable Ernie Eves, made a decision, one that he clearly regrets, given the bill we have before us today.

The Premier flipped the switch, opening the retail and wholesale marketplaces simultaneously, the only jurisdiction in the world that decided to do it at the same time. At the same time, the government sought to privatize electricity transmission, thereby undertaking all three reforms simultaneously. The volatility caused by these simultaneous changes, plus the political volatility of a waffling Premier and a waffling executive council, chilled the competition marketplace into a deep freeze.

Meanwhile, contrary to promises from our current Premier and his predecessor, contrary to promises from energy ministers, however many times they were shuffled, there wasn't enough electricity supply in Ontario, yet the Premier of Ontario admitted in this House just a couple of weeks ago that he didn't even bother picking up the phone to call the person who could have told him that, the chairman of Ontario Power Generation, Bill Farlinger. Incredibly, he did not pick up the phone, he said, to call Chairman Farlinger, who could have told him what Ontario Power Generation had told the world with published reports and filings, that surely the Premier knew or ought to have known about and certainly his energy minister did know about: namely, the Pickering A nuclear plant, that was supposed to provide the adequate supply in the summer and this coming winter, wouldn't be on-line on time, until next year. But that was information this government just didn't want to hear. So you heard, you saw and you spoke no electricity evils, shuffling your energy ministers to avoid accountability, and instituted a doctrine of denial on all things hydro. The strategy backfired and now no one trusts this government with their electricity.

It turns out that reforming the distribution, transmission and generation of electricity in Ontario all at once was the worst kind of imperialism. Neo-conservative ideology dictated that if you opened the market, they would just come and build without the government having to lift a finger or even dial the phone. But that capitalist imperialism, plus political ineptitude, underscored the heroic simplification in market design, such that by day 200 of the market opening and beyond, it is now clear that this government shipwrecked our electricity system and nobody trusts them with it.

New Democratic Party leader Howard Hampton says to beware of all electricity profits. He says "profits" with a dollar sign. But his current plan clearly deals with wheeling and dealing with private generators, referred to in safe parlance as "independent power producers." Consider also what the New Democratic Party was saying at the time in which all three parties were sitting down and making an effort to resolve our electricity crisis. It was time, all three parties decided, to stop playing dumb on hydro. At that time, at that select committee, the NDP representative, Floyd Laughren said "I don't have a big problem with bringing competition into the system." In the December 1997 report coming out of that committee, the NDP states in their conclusion, "We support changes to the way Ontario's electricity market is structured."

Ms Churley: We still do.

Mr Bryant: So I say to the member for Toronto-Danforth who just spoke forth, and to your colleagues in the New Democrat Party: instead of your faux paranoia over electricity profits, perhaps Ontarians should beware of false prophets offering imaginary maps of faltered government efforts past, of failed hydro efforts past.

For the flipside of the capitalist imperialism that faltered for this government on electricity, the extreme alternative of the bureaucratic imperialism of the old Ontario Hydro, with all power resting in the debt-belching hydro Frankenstein, cannot in the long term make for a healthy electricity system in Ontario.

Interjection.

Mr Bryant: I do.

The future for Ontario electricity is not bright. Let's avoid the simplification and imperialism that got us into this mess, and look to workable manageable improvements to our power shortage, replete with consultation and due diligence. Let us look not to the margins of ideological simplifications, but rather, determine what's workable and what delivers reliable and affordable electricity to all. Let's work with consumers and industry alike, putting aside planning on the back of a napkin, and pour the light of transparency on an electricity system shrouded in secrecy. Let us speak the truth to Ontarians, even if it hurts, about how and why power at cost is very costly.

Now that the diagnosis is in on the electricity shipwreck, the journey that started in May of this year, after only 200 days, I believe Ontarians will beware of magic bullets claiming the power to slay hydro dragons. We will look very closely at this bill in the coming days, as all MPPs seek to earn Ontarians' trust with their hydro.

Let us start at the beginning: the announcement by the Premier of Ontario that the marketplace would be opening. It was December 19, 2001, that Premier Harris said, "Nothing is going to go wrong. The supply is there." The Premier said he was confident that the end of the provincially owned monopoly would benefit consumers. And then he said, "This will clearly lead to better service, more choice and lower rates than if we had not taken this decision." If that were the case, then this bill would not be before us today.

The government made promises that they could not and did not keep. This did not happen. The supply was not there; the consumer protection was not there; the conservation measures were not there; the market wasn't ready. The market was opened with reckless abandon and then shipwrecked. This is the raise-the-Titanic project that we now have, announced on November 11 of this year, the bill before us. But let's be clear. All those pronouncements of this government, before the marketplace opened, turned out to be wrong.

The Premier would later say in an interview with the Financial Post on December 19, "I am 100% convinced" that opening the marketplace will result in cheaper power for consumers. "I am convinced," he said, "rates will be substantially lower than they would have been had we not taken this decision."

On September 25, 2001, the Premier said in the House: "We made it very clear, the conditions for opening the market in Ontario and the conditions that we laid out. We made it very clear that the market would not open unless we could meet those conditions, like ample supply..., as appropriate competition to ensure that we're getting the competitive forces."

He said "We made it clear" in September. He said "We made it clear" the conditions have to be ample supply. And yet the government has known for a year now that Pickering A would not be up on-line and on time and there would not be ample supply. They were given the warnings. They may call it bad information now, but it was simply information that they did not want to hear.

It wasn't just the Premier who was making bold predictions and bold promises to Ontarians to trust them with their electricity. The energy minister too, Honourable Mr Wilson, said March 21, 2002, six weeks or thereabouts before market opening, "Ontario has a reliable supply of electricity."

He said on February 28, 2002, the week previous, "I am convinced that Ontario's competitive electricity market will enjoy the same success as other jurisdictions." Clearly, if that was the case, this bill would not be necessary. This bill is bringing in measures that had to have been in place before the marketplace opened. It is in part cleaning up a mess; it is in part doing what should have been done before the marketplace opened in the first place.

It is obviously an admission of defeat. I've said time and time again that nobody has a monopoly of success or failure when it comes to hydro in the Legislature, looking at the efforts of all governments over the past 25 years. Nonetheless, what we have experienced over the last 200 days has truly been a journey of incompetence. That, I will try and convince the House, could have been foreseen had all of the warnings been heeded.

The energy minister also said, interestingly—and I said this in response to the speech from the member for Nipissing but I'll say it again—on January, 25, 2002, in an interview with Report on Business magazine, Energy Minister Jim Wilson said, "The private sector asked us to get out of large-scale government conservation programs." Those efforts "may have made the odd person feel good, but they had absolutely no effect."

This is a serious indictment on the announcements of the energy minister—the latest energy minister that we have—of this government that he made on November 13, the infamous day that Hydrozilla showed up and ruined the announcement; the infamous day, I suppose, that the government conceded that Energy Minister Jim Wilson was wrong, that in fact we need those conservation programs.

In any event, clearly nobody can trust this government on this subject when within 12 months you've got one energy minister saying conservation programs have no effect and another energy minister holding them out as a panacea.

Minister Wilson made it very clear, and I think to his credit, in 1998. He said it's not Ontario Power Generation that's running the show here. It's not Ontario Hydro One that's running the show here on electricity reforms.

It's not the Ontario Energy Board. It's not government enterprise corporations. It's not crown corporations. It is the government that must be held to account for the successes and failures of these electricity reforms. He was right. He was honest. He famously said in this House that, I think, he is the first honest energy minister—may have been in the history of Ontario, he said.

He said on June 25, 1998, "The government will take the decisions in establishing the market along with the expert advice we're receiving from the Ministry of Finance." Now, who was the Minister of Finance in June 1998? I can't remember. Oh, Ernie Eves. He was the Minister of Finance. What Minister Wilson is quite rightly saying here is that the Premier—the finance minister of 1998—and the energy minister of Ontario ultimately must be held to account for the failures of this marketplace; not Mother Nature, not Eleanor Clitheroe, not Mr Farlinger or Mr Osborne or Mr Laughren, but the government of Ontario, the executive council, which comes to this Legislature to be held to account, which in turn is to be held to account amongst the general public.

I think Energy Minister Wilson was right when he said that; it's the government that will make the decisions in establishing the market. Ultimately, I think it has to be said, given the bill we have before us today, that the government is the one to blame. It's the government that has failed and not the scapegoats that they seek out, as we speak.

He went on to say of the chair of OPG, "I would remind all honourable members that Mr Farlinger and the new management that he has put in place at Hydro are turning around Ontario Hydro. He is a 'hands-on' manager.... It's on a direction now to be a world leader in supplying world-class, high-efficiency energy to the people of Ontario. We're the shareholders and it's in our best interest that we have the best possible management and the best possible chair."

I wonder if the energy minister today feels that way about our management and chair of Ontario Power Generation. If he does, he sure has a funny way of showing it.

I have asked Energy Minister Baird on several occasions in this House, "Do you have full and unqualified confidence in Chairman Farlinger and CEO Osborne?" When I first asked him that, he said, "Oh no, they are two different people." And he sat down. This was not a ringing endorsement. So I thought, "Well, I'll ask the Premier. He'll give a ringing endorsement, surely, of Chairman Farlinger and CEO Osborne." And he wouldn't do it either. He bounced the question over to the energy minister, who didn't answer the question.

You have to ask yourself, either the government of Ontario has full confidence and believes that Ontario Power Generation has the best possible management and the best possible chair, as Energy Minister Wilson said, and they'd stand up and say it proudly, "Yes, we've got the best possible management and the best possible chair," or they would say, "Well, we've got problems over there and we're going to fix it." In fact, the Minister of Energy said of OPG's handling of the Pickering A nuclear refurbishment, "It was not OPG's finest hour."

The Premier, under questions this week in the media about whether or not he had confidence in Chairman Farlinger and whether or not Chairman Farlinger's tenure would continue, started talking about the delays in Pickering A. These are not words of confidence in the chair and management of Ontario Power Generation.

But I say to the Premier and the energy minister, this is not colour commentary. This is not talking about whether or not the coach and the quarterback are doing a good job or not over on TSN during half-time. You're the government. You are the ones who appoint them. As the energy minister said, "You're the shareholders, representing the people of Ontario, so you must take action if you have problems with what's going on over there."

Not only have the Premier and the energy minister damned these people with the faintest of praise, but they have damned our energy supply with the faintest of leadership, trying to be, I guess, vaguely critical of Ontario Power Generation performance, but at the same time doing nothing about it. It obviously must put Ontario Power Generation management in a state of paralysis and it obviously contributes to heap even more volatility upon the electricity marketplace, and so nobody wants to come and do business in the province of Ontario.

Meanwhile, the effort on behalf of the Eves government in particular to try and shuttle energy ministers in order to avoid accountability and to play this game of see, hear and speak no evil on energy electricity, that effort has an air of unreality when you consider the practices of the Ministry of Energy in conjunction with Ontario Power Generation.

Here's Energy Minister Wilson on June 10, 1998. He sets forth in print, in Hansard, the practice of this government, which continues to be the practice of this government based on answers that I recently received in the autumn from the Deputy Minister of Energy during estimates committee hearings. Here is what Energy Minister Wilson said: "I meet with Mr Farlinger and Mr Osborne every week at a set time, as did my predecessor Norm Sterling, as did my predecessor Brenda Elliott." So the Minister of Energy meets every week, and maybe now it's two weeks, but in any event meets on a regular basis, with the Ontario Power Generation chair and CEO.

Any suggestion that the government didn't know about the state of affairs at Ontario Power Generation, any suggestion that the government didn't know about the lack of energy supply in the province of Ontario, any suggestion that the government can point fingers about the delays in the refurbishment and Pickering are, frankly, unbelievable. They cannot be believed. You cannot imagine that the Minister of Energy would be sitting there with Chairman Farlinger and CEO Osborne and say, "I'm looking at this report, Chairman, and it says that Pickering is not going to be up until 2003." This is before the electricity marketplace opened, as I'll explain in a moment. Those reports were available for the public. I'm assuming the Minister of Energy got hold of the annual information filings. You don't think that the Minister of Energy said to Chairman Farlinger and to CEO Osborne, "So we've got delays in Pickering, huh?" "Yep, that's what it says here." "Why? When is it going to be fixed? Do we have enough supply? What's going on?"

Of course they did. Of course the government was doing that. Of course the government knew. Are we to believe that the energy minister was just tapping his fingers on top of the Ontario Power Generation forecasts of lack of supply? That is unbelievable. It's simply unbelievable.

To bolster this case, consider the pronouncement of victory from Minister Stockwell on June 5, 2002. He was asked about whether or not Ontario Power Generation was doing a good job. You'd think, if the government was told in November of last year that there were going to be delays in Pickering, if they were told in January of this year that there were going to be delays in Pickering, if they were going to be told before the marketplace opened that the Pickering A nuclear plant would not be refurbished and we would not have the supply the government was counting on until 2003, you'd think that if the government was aware of all that and had a problem with that, at some point in one of those weekly meetings between OPG and the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Energy might have said, "You're not doing a good job."

Yet here is the Minister of Energy, on June 5, saying, "He's done a good job at OPG." He was talking about CEO Osborne. I asked him whether or not CEO Osborne is getting the salary that he deserves. He said about Mr Osborne, "He's done a good job at OPG. OPG is running well. They've done a good job of privatizing. They've done a good job setting up the open market. I think Mr Osborne has done a good job, and at $1.7 million a year, I suppose that's reasonable."

Whoa. Clearly the government was aware and defending the actions of Ontario Power Generation right through to June, past the market opening, right at the cusp of what happened: the price spikes. The price spikes hit. Caucus meetings were no doubt very civil affairs on the government side, and the question was asked to the energy minister, "What is going on? Why these price spikes? How come?"

Soon enough, energy ministers were shuffled and the new message was out: "It's not the government that's to blame; it's Ontario Power Generation that's to blame." No longer does the Minister of Energy say that OPG is doing a good job. No longer does anyone express confidence in Chairman Farlinger, a man referred to by the Premier of Ontario, Mike Harris, as a man of integrity. No longer are they talking about the "exciting new vision" that Chairman Farlinger brought to Ontario Hydro. No longer are they calling Mr Farlinger the best possible chair of OPG. No longer does the government refer to the best possible management team at OPG.

Now it's not their finest hour. Now OPG is full of delays. Now the finance minister, Janet Ecker, expresses concerns about delays. Now the energy minister is saying, "The delays are unacceptable." Now the Premier is saying, "You've got this delay and then that delay and then this delay and then that delay. You know, there's a problem with all these delays." No longer is there confidence. Why? Because it hit the fan. The prices went up. The price spikes went up.

By all accounts, the government was warned before market opening. Remember, the energy minister said it's the government that set up the marketplace. You can't blame anybody else. The government was warned. I know, because I've spoken to so many of these people.

They were warned by industry. They were warned by distributors. They were warned that this marketplace, as it is currently designed, is not built for price spikes, that it is not built for volatility, and that if you get it, the system won't be able to handle it. The distributors will have to underwrite it and they will be put on the edge of financial ruin. The consumers will have no price shock-absorbers, the government was told. They will flip out and not be able to afford their bills. In the midst of that volatility, political decisions will waffle on a weekly basis and you will end up with a deeply frozen, chilled marketplace that nobody wants to invest in, with consumers who can't afford to pay their bills, and with distributors who are put in a position where they have to go back to get some rule changes, which were denied, so that they don't have to declare bankruptcy.

The government was told, "You built a market that does not meet the realities of Ontario and the fact that we have one major player in the marketplace, and that's Ontario Power Generation."

"No, no," apparently the answer came back from the government, "there will be no price spikes." Of course, we would love to have a select committee, and we have called for a select committee. I bet the third party would support a select committee to find out and get to the bottom of what happened with this marketplace. The government doesn't do that, but maybe the government will change its mind and will agree to that so that we can try and find out what happened. I would love to confirm all this, get the people to come in and speak on camera and for the Hansard and explain what they explained to the government, the warnings they provided to the government.

The government, as I said before, constructed a fancy, red convertible without a top and then they drove it out into the Arctic tundra. Then everything got a little bit uncomfortable for the passengers. Everybody got uncomfortable, it turns out, including the government of Ontario.

The government was warned. When were they warned? How were they warned? In black and white, in reports filed by Ontario Power Generation that are sitting on their Web sites right now. It's not difficult to find them.

The first one was on November 27. Ontario Power Generation said that the reactor at Pickering could not be repaired by May 1: "OPG expects to begin commissioning the first unit of Pickering A nuclear generating station in mid-2002." It's a year ago the government got that warning.

Then it got worse. It got pushed back again. January 30, 2002: "Ontario Power Generation reports 2000 year-end earnings." It's a press release basically. In it OPG states, "Commissioning of the first Pickering A unit is estimated to start during the third quarter of 2002."

It's getting shakier still. First November and now January, and suddenly Pickering is not going to be coming back on-line until the third quarter of 2002. That's when the alarm bells should have gone off and the government should have said, "Whoa, we don't have adequate supply. Pickering is not going to be ready. We're not ready to go. We're not ready to flip the switch."

I understand, the Premier was too taxed to pick up the phone and call Chairman Farlinger to get that information, but it is frankly beyond belief that the Minister of Energy of the day did not deliver the information to the Premier that Chairman Farlinger delivered to Premier Harris—because he had the time to meet with Chairman Farlinger to find out about the state of Pickering. It is unbelievable that the Premier did not sit down with the Minister of Energy, who we know was meeting with the chairman and CEO of OPG every week. He knew, because he read those reports. He knew, because he would have discussed this in their meetings. I can't imagine a matter that would have been more urgent than this. So the Minister of Energy knew that Pickering A was not going to be up on-line and on time, and he knew it last January.

But it gets worse. The annual information form for the year-end December 31, 2001—this was filed before the marketplace opened up—says, "OPG currently expects to return the first unit" at Pickering A "to service in late 2002 or early 2003."

Well, there it was in black and white before the government of Ontario. Not once, not twice, but three times they were told by Ontario Power Generation. The energy minister was told, and the energy minister must have told the Premier, that in fact Pickering A was not going to be up on-line and on time. It is the government that has to be held to account for it, because they were told.

The Premier had to make a big decision. He won the leadership of his party and was the Premier-elect, or whatever he is called, on March 28. He was sworn in in April. He got his first briefing the first Monday after he won the leadership on March 28. This is a Premier who must have been told this information. He had to make a decision: does he delay market opening until we have the supply-and-demand conditions that this bill today tries to put into place? Does he wait till we have the price shock absorbers? Does he wait until he has the rebate system ready to relieve consumers of unaffordable bills? Does he wait until he has the supply plan in place that is in this bill before us now? Does he wait until he has the conservation measures announced on December 13 and that are in this bill now? Does he wait or does he flip the switch and open the marketplace? He did the latter. He opened the marketplace with reckless abandon. Either he was wilfully blind to the damage that would be caused or he decided that he would believe in the theory of capitalist imperialism that says, "If you just open the market, it'll all be OK."

Well, clearly that is not the case or else we wouldn't have this bill here today. This is the bill to make up for the mistakes of the past. It's an indictment of that major decision made by Premier Ernie Eves, the first major decision that faced him as the Premier of Ontario. Lord help us when he gets his hands on the funding formula and on the Romanow report, because then he's going to have some other tough decisions to make, ones requiring consultation and diligence and getting things ready before you open it up. That's not what happened with electricity. What happened with electricity was a journey of incompetence, and it's all right here in black and white.

So the National Post, no enemy of the government, writes on November 13 in a column by Andrew Coyne, "Mr Eves's blatant politicization of the electricity market, as others have pointed out, has erased any chance of developing a private power industry in Ontario: investors simply do not trust it. Well it is just the same for voters. I mean this quite literally: voters have no reason to trust a word the Eves government says.... The Ontario ... government has reached the end of its useful life. It should be removed—no, hurled—from office, and the sooner the better."

Clearly, along the way, the transmission chaos contributed to the volatility. Here's what I mean by that: the reforms to distribution and the reforms to the wholesale market generation took place at the same time. The retail marketplace and the wholesale marketplace opened at the same time in November. As I said, I think in retrospect the government sees that as a mistake, because they've had to come in and bring in changes to it.

In the midst of that were the reforms to electricity transmission, the third part of our electricity system; not only the stuff upstream that makes the power, generation; not only the stuff downstream that delivers the power, distribution in retail; but the stream: the electricity transmission highway. That was wholly owned by the people of Ontario, Hydro One, a natural monopoly and money-maker for the people of Ontario. Like Highway 401, it's a matter that had to not have a fiduciary principle but good public policy as its guiding principle. It had to put the people first. This is a company that made money for the people of Ontario. Hydro One was a natural monopoly and a natural money-maker.

It is also the electricity highway that other potential investors would plug into. The independent power producers would plug into the highway, and they needed to know there would be a highway to plug into. They're not going to travel, build the vehicle and try to deliver it downstream if there's no stream. If there's no electricity highway to travel along, obviously they're not going to come in and build it. If there is volatility with transmission too, it would be the death knell of the reforms, and of course it was.

In December of last year, Premier Harris announced that Hydro One would be privatized, sold via an initial public offering; the whole thing, 100%, sold to the private sector. Interestingly, the now Deputy Premier, Elizabeth Witmer, said during the leadership debate that she had concerns and questions about selling off Hydro One. The cabinet was aghast. Now-Premier Eves, Mr Stockwell, now the House leader, and all the other candidates thought it was outrageous that Mrs Witmer, now the Deputy Premier, would in fact slag the selling of Hydro One. She turned out to be prophetic.

Then Ernie Eves took over, became the Premier of Ontario, and he said, unequivocally, "The IPO is on. The IPO is on. The IPO is on. We will sell Hydro One." Then a by-election came along, one that the member for Nipissing is very familiar with, and suddenly the IPO was off the table. It was off the table during the by-election. It was at that point—between having your Deputy Premier question the wisdom of this move, the public pressure about the stupidity of the move and the Premier saying in the midst of a by-election that the sale of Hydro One was off the table—that everybody who might come and invest in the province of Ontario and build more electricity, so that we could have the supply and lower prices that were promised by Premiers past and present, just said, "Forget it. We're not coming into this province until this mess is cleared up."

In the midst of it, the former Deputy Premier—the runner-up in the leadership race to the current Premier, now the Minister of Enterprise—Mr Flaherty said, "No, the IPO should go ahead." It was really a flip-flop, Flaherty flipped, and then the whole thing flopped after the by-election. The decision was made that Hydro One wouldn't be privatized by an IPO, but they'd sell 49% of it.

That volatility and a total lack of certainty as to what the government of Ontario will actually end up doing on Hydro One—because now we've asked the present finance minister, "What are we going to do with Hydro One?" The answer from the Premier at some point was, "There's no rush." So we don't know what's going to happen with Hydro One. Again, that volatility. Clearly they're going to sell Hydro One, and it's enormously unpopular among the people of Ontario. They're going to do it through a fire sale to try to finance electoral promises, but from an electricity reform perspective it was a disaster.

On top of all that you get the political chaos of a Premier who is changing his mind on transmission on an almost bi-monthly basis. You then have, when the heat is on, a former cabinet minister, now-member for Burlington, send out a petition saying that we should freeze rates. You then have the Minister of Labour—there's a principle of cabinet solidarity that says that if you want to depart from the cabinet's position, then you must resign. Nothing could be more straightforward than departing from the position of the government on the competition marketplace, but he just bolted. The Labour Minister said, "No, I don't like the current system and I think we need to bring in price caps."

The parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General said the same thing in published accounts. There were others. The Speaker of the House—not the current Speaker, but Mr Carr, the member for Oakville—also released a petition.

So there is the political instability. Again, if you are an investor, you are thinking of building in the province of Ontario to provide enough supply. When I talk about the independent power producers, this is something that all three parties—check out their Web sites—support: the concept of independent power producers coming and providing power so that the taxpayer isn't picking up the tab. But they're not going to come in under these circumstances, with the government falling apart at the seams, a total lack of confidence in the policy of the government.

Then, of course, on November 11 the Premier announced that the rate freeze would be brought in. It was pretty clear by September at the latest that rate relief was necessary. I think it was incumbent on all members of the Legislature to try to assist their constituents who called up. Many of them had heart-wrenching problems with their bills. They couldn't afford them. They couldn't understand them, nor could the Energy Minister. I asked the Energy Minister to read an energy bill from Great Lakes Power and he could not. It was very unclear. We need standardized, clear energy bills. People couldn't understand them, they were too high and they couldn't afford them.

So we had a mess. We had a fire that had been started by the government, and I think it was incumbent on all members of this Legislature, no matter what side of the House we were on, to help put out the fire. That does not mean that the New Democrats and the Liberals were complicit in the arson, or, to switch metaphors, put the holes in the ship that was our electricity system, now shipwrecked. No, but we had to help. We had to try to put this fire out. So working within the current rules and laws that were before us, Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals began, at the first instance when the House returned, to call for the government not to roll the rebate out next summer or before the next election, but to roll it out now. Thus began the campaign to roll out the rebates to compensate Ontarians for Herculean hydro prices.

October 1, 2002, press release from the official opposition: "OPG Needs to Roll Out the Rebate to Compensate Consumers Now." I said in a question to the energy minister and also in my statement in response to a minister's statement: "So our message to the government is, we need relief for Ontario consumers now. We need you to roll out this rebate now—the full rebate, all the rebate and nothing but the rebate now. Will you join us in fighting to roll out the rebate now?" That's October 1, 2002.

We are here now, rolling out the rebate. We are here now, calling for the price shock absorbers that should have been put in place before the marketplace opened. Obviously, the price relief had to be provided.

On October 3 I asked the Premier, "It's the people's money, not yours to play with. Why won't you give Ontarians their hydroelectricity rebate now?"

Initially, the Premier wasn't interested in this rebate. He talks about Tinkerbell and the bedpost sometimes. He was in political never-never land at the time. He just refused to admit what this bill before us admits, that in fact he made the wrong decision in opening up the marketplace the way he did.

Here's what he said on October 3: "I indicated this morning that I expect the rebate program to be as advertised by OPG and I expect the people of Ontario to be entitled to their rebates." The way it's advertised by OPG is, they wouldn't get it until August of next year. That didn't stay the case. The Premier said it would stay as advertised, then he changed it on November 11.

In the October 8 standing committee on estimates, I asked the energy minister, "When do Ontarians get their rebate?" The minister said, and I quote, "It could be in August; it could be in April." Boy, that sounded a lot like a pre-election goody rebate, August or April. The government refused to roll the rebates out now. Now they're trying to roll out the rebates, but that wasn't their plan in early August. It was our plan; it wasn't their plan.

October 16: I asked the Premier, "Will you agree to roll out the rebate to compensate Ontarians for Herculean hydro rates now?" The Premier said, "We will look at the long-term picture.... It's important to get the entire picture before you decide what a rebate is going to be. You can't do it on the basis of a week or a month or even a three-month period of time." You can't do it, he said. "So it will be important to look at this in a long-term perspective."

Again, this is October 16. This is three weeks before the announcement of this price relief measure and he's still in never-never land. The Premier is still saying, "No, you don't get the rebates yet. You can't do it." He said you can't do it. He just dismissed the Ontario Liberals' effort to get the rebates rolled out now. He dismissed it and said they can't do it.

So we try again, because we don't give up. October 18: I wrote the Premier and said, "With news that September rates are even higher than those of July and August, it is time for you to show some leadership and roll out the hydro rebate for Ontario families and businesses immediately." I didn't get a response to that, or I'm waiting for my response. I guess I got my response and it's the bill before us.

November 5: Dalton McGuinty asked the Premier, "When, Premier, are you going to help these people by providing them with a rebate?... Where is the rebate that they need today?" I don't know how many times we had to tell the Premier that people can't wait until August, that they can't wait for this long-term rebate, that they can't wait for some pre-election goody, that they need the rebate now. Why? Because bills are unaffordable now. This isn't about giving people a goody. This is about helping people afford their bills. This is about affordable electricity, which the government promised to provide, but did not, and thus we're here today with this bill.

November 5 I asked the Premier, "What people want to know now, Premier, is, when are you going to be rolling out the rebate and how much is the average rebate going to be?" We didn't get an answer from the Premier. We have been trying. Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals have been trying, and fighting to get that rebate rolled out.

We now have a bill that the government suggested in their responses would never be needed because the rebate would never be needed, and yet we now have the rebate. Why? Because eventually the Premier figured out what Dalton McGuinty had been telling him, and that was that electricity prices were just plain unaffordable. Jobs would be lost. The economy would be further crippled. More people would find themselves unable, in some cases, to pay their rent, those on fixed incomes, or meet their basic needs. Why? Because they couldn't afford their hydro bills. They just couldn't afford them. But now we have it before us.

Is the bill perfect? As soon as the bill was introduced, I asked the Ministry of Energy for a briefing, because obviously there's a lot in this bill and we wanted to make sure that Ontarians were getting the rebates they deserved, that in fact the price shock absorbers were there that were needed. I, as member for a Toronto constituency, was particularly concerned that customers of Toronto Hydro, those who had signed on to fixed contracts, especially those who signed on to fixed contracts unaware of what they had signed, would be protected.

So I asked for the briefing, and we didn't hear back from them. I do not fault anybody in the ministry. I do not fault any of the ministry staff. I know the professional civil servants tried to put something together as quickly as possible. It is sad, frankly, that the bill was introduced before the briefing was ready. I said that obviously I need to have a briefing before I can start debating the bill. That should go without saying. That's not the way it works in the Ontario Legislative Assembly. The briefing was scheduled, guess for what time. It was 4 o'clock this afternoon, when I was rising to speak. Just a fabulous coincidence. In any event, looking at the bill, I can say off the top that there is obviously a great concern that this government has got to address and that they know they have to address.

In his announcement on November 11, the Premier said, and this is from his press release, "Large commercial and industrial consumers could choose between their current arrangements and a fixed 4.3 cents per kilowatt price for power." The problem, as Minister Baird found out afterwards, was that would mean that all the industrials, all the big companies, would go with the 4.3 cent price cap, which would mean that nobody, no generator, could ever get the financing to come in and build in Ontario, because they wouldn't have the anchor base load with a large company and thereby be able to provide power for all Ontarians. So they found out that if they did this, what they promised they'd do on November 11, literally the wholesale marketplace would have shut right down.

A few days later the Minister of Energy said on CBC radio that he was talking with big commercial and industrial users to see if they should be exempt from the freeze and permitted to buy their power on the open market. It's another change of policy, another one after November 11. I would have thought they would have got their fix-up plan fixed up before they announced it, but they didn't. Now the government's in a tough position from a negotiating perspective because they made a promise they know they simply cannot keep. But that is in the current bill and that's a big problem. The government knows it's a problem. Again the homework wasn't done.

Just as they rushed to open the marketplace without having got their act together, this thing was rushed out. They waited too long and found out too long—despite the fact that for months everybody was telling them hydro rates were just too high and hydro bills were unaffordable, they were in denial. The doctrine of denial has set in over there, energy ministers have been shuffled, so if you ask a question of the current energy minister, he could say, "I've only been the energy minister for a few weeks." "What about your predecessor?" No answer. Mercifully we have Hansard, mercifully we have published reports, and so we now have the record in Hansard of what happened.

What happened is that the government was warned that there was not enough supply. The government was warned that they had to have a supply-and-demand plan. The government was warned that they had to have consumer protections. The government went ahead and opened the market anyway. Then when the government found out what a mess it was, there were a lot of shuffles and a lot of prevaricating, and this new bill to try and fix it. But to make matters even worse, the new bill has got a big problem in it, in that it will totally shut down the wholesale marketplace, which the government is relying on desperately for reliable and affordable power. It will shut it down for good.

I have a funny feeling that in the comments in the leadoff from the third party you might just hear a thing or two about Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals, so I would be remiss if I did not, in my remaining five minutes, talk a little bit about New Democrat solutions, diagnosis and prescriptions.

I would say that for all the wrong reasons, Mr Hampton's diagnosis of the electricity system in Ontario did turn out not to be inaccurate. However, now's the time, now that this bill is in and the price freezes are in place, to look at the prescriptions of the New Democratic Party. People may be surprised to learn that one of those prescriptions involves that thing the NDP allegedly reviles: private power.

If you go to their Web site, you will see they are interested in public-private partnerships. "When new supply was needed, the government would be," and this is a quote from their Web site, "open to bids from non-utility generators who meet environmental standards. Much of this would be independent power." Do you know what independent power is, folks? It's not public power. So do you know what that means? It means it's private power. Independent power is private power.

This whole debate about bringing back public power is a total misnomer. Right now, public power is about all we have: Ontario Power Generation. So any paranoia over privatization, however wrong that may be with Hydro One and how ever wrong it may be, obviously, to privatize the nukes in Hydro, it hasn't happened. It's not privatization that is the sin, and I heard the member from Toronto-Danforth say an hour ago that privatization drove the prices up. Privatization? What privatization? There wasn't any privatization. There wasn't any.

So, then I guess the danger is private power. The NDP says that private power is the enemy. The only robber baron out there right now is a public company. It's called Ontario Power Generation. They're the ones who are making a lot of money. It's not Enron, it's not a private company; it's OPG. So independent power, private power, call it what you want, is the only affordable way, along with public power, that we are going to provide reliable and affordable electricity.

I think it's just a false debate to suggest that this is about privatization and public power and private power. It's not. All three parties want to get so-called independent power producers to come to Ontario because we don't have enough supply. All three parties want that.

If you want to talk about records, and I know the New Democrats just might cite Liberal pronouncements past, and accomplishments past, I suppose I must talk about the NDP record during their governance between 1990 and 1995. This is the government that used hydro by Costa Rican rain forests; raised rates by 40%; built no supply; added $4.2 billion to the debt in private power contracts; cancelled the hydro lifeline to Manitoba; and promised, and then broke the promise, to give everyone a new refrigerator.

I say with respect to the New Democrats' prescription, they are for private power like everybody else. They are for independent power producers like everybody else.

Mr Bryant: You'll have your chance in a minute.

They'll either blow up the debt, or they'll hike your taxes, or both. They won't say they'll lower rates. They'll just keep them stable, they say. They can't keep power going when we need it most because they refuse to import, and would cancel the Bruce A restore.

The great political tango being played right now between the party in power that engineered this journey of incompetence in electricity and the New Democrats speaks the line that at least the New Democrats are consistent. I say they were for a competition marketplace in 1997; now they're against it. They say they're against private power, but it's on their Web site. I hope all Ontarians will take a close look at all—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Thank you. Time now for comments and questions.

Ms Churley: The Liberals are still desperately trying to justify their position in support of deregulation and privatization of hydro. They're still trying to make the case for privatization and deregulation. "It's not bad, and it's the right way to go. It's just that these guys, the Tories, blew it, did it all wrong, were incompetent and did it too fast." But if it were the Liberals, they would have done it right, while still ignoring, listening to the speech today, what happened in California and other jurisdictions, completely ignoring the price manipulation that went on, the Enrons of the world. There are already investigations going on here for potential manipulation of the market. They're still ignoring all of these things.

Then he has the nerve to stand up and say that the NDP once supported—now, this is really getting desperate—privatization. A member who has not been with this caucus for several years sat on a committee and was quoted as saying that he had no problem with some private sector involvement. Look, this caucus under this leader has consistently and always opposed privatization and has been the only party to do so. We have made it clear from that time on, and we have never wavered from that position.

We have always said that changes need to be made. We still say that changes should be made, but we are the only party that's made it clear that we do not support privatization and deregulation. That is the bottom line here. We have seen from other jurisdictions that it doesn't work. We predicted the rate increases. We predict brownouts and blackouts, given what's going on. The NDP does have a credible plan to deal with all of those issues.

Mr McDonald: I listened to Mr Bryant speak. I have some Hansard quotes here that I just want to read on their position on hydro. Sean Conway, invitation to a $350-per-person energy sector reception: "Throughout Ontario's electricity restructuring process, Dalton and the Ontario Liberals have been consistent supporters of the move to an open electricity market in Ontario."

This goes on to say, "I think that it's important that we move ahead with competition both in terms of generation and in terms of the transmission."

Sean Conway says, "Let me be clear. We need a competitive marketplace." The electricity market that we have "is one where we see a competitive market in the generation of electricity."

Mr McGuinty goes on, "I have been very consistent with respect to Hydro One. I think it should be kept in public hands. I have been very consistent when it comes to generation" that it should be competitive.

Mr Bryant says, "The only way we're going to get more made-in-Ontario electricity is to permit the private sector to come in and build made-in-Ontario electricity."

Mr McGuinty says, "The responsible thing to do would be to bring the private sector in with the public sector and say, 'Look, folks, we're going to have to work together here in a place where there is real competition and tough regulations to make sure that we can have'" sufficient electricity.

Mr McGuinty goes on to say, "Rates may very well have to go up. We've been getting a bit of a free ride here in terms of the debt...." He also says, "I'm not saying today that I'm guaranteeing we're going to leave this ... package" together. This was on November 15.

Mr Bryant, on October 28, 2002, said, "Our position has not changed since 1997." Mr Bryant, I agree with you. You don't have a position on hydro.

Mr Monte Kwinter (York Centre): I am delighted to participate in—

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): Monte, tell us about Patti Starr.

Mr Kwinter: Let me just tell you about some other things first.

What I really want to talk about is that this government never misses an opportunity to seize an opportunity. When they made their announcement on November 11, this sort of casual view of the Premier sitting down in a typical Ontarian's living room to talk about the fact that he was going to give that family a rebate—this is a family that had a 50-inch television set and lives in a house that most people would aspire to in their dreams. And what happens? Instead of coaching this person—because obviously this wasn't just a casual drive-by where he said, "Let's drop in there and talk to this person and see what they have to say." They had to bring in generators, they had to bring in the media. It was fully orchestrated.

"What do you think of this?" She said, "Oh, this is wonderful. We thought we were going to have to cut back on our Christmas lights and now we're going to have to put out all of our Christmas lights again. That's fabulous."

She could have said, "Mr Premier, do you know what? We really appreciate the fact that you're trying to help us out, and to show that we are going to do our part, we are going to cut back on our Christmas lights." A kilowatt of energy saved is more valuable than a kilowatt of energy generated, because you've got to pay to generate it. When you save it, it costs you nothing. In the end of the equation, one kilowatt saved is identical to one kilowatt generated, other than the cost. I think there was an opportunity that could have been followed. It could have sent a signal to the people of Ontario that we are prof-ligate.

I talk about the member for Nipissing; I agree with him. When I'm down in Florida and I talk to people, because of the cost of power, they are so conscious. You cannot buy an electric kettle in Florida because it draws too much power. People don't turn on their air conditioning until they need it. I'm saying that this is an area this government should pursue.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): The member for St Paul's speaks of free fridges. How enviable it is to be so young, because I remember the government of paint jobs and free fridges. It was the Liberal Peterson government of Patti Starr. As a matter of fact, one of the first capers that Shelley Martel and I ever embarked upon was when, with great stealth, we made our way up to Eglinton Avenue, west of Yonge, on the north side, to the House of Chan, purported hangout of the Starr gang; to wit, the Patti Starr gang. We expected, opening the doors of this very reputable steak and Chinese food joint, to walk in, and we thought it was going to look like Leon's, you know, the Price warehouse with rows and rows of fridges, along with the vault where all the misappropriated funds were being stashed. That's what "fridges" triggers for me, the fridges that were being doled out by virtue of the Patti Starr largesse, she of the House of Chan—not a bad steakhouse, in the total scheme of things.

I just find it incredible that a Liberal would want to talk about fridges being given away, when those fridges and the free paint jobs—indeed, I watched cabinet minister after cabinet minister being hung out to dry, flapping in the wind, as the Patti Starr scandal and its stench regrettably took down, among other things, that government.

But I want to tell you this: I've been proud to stand with Howard Hampton. I've been proud to join him on the public power bus. I've been proud to access his Web site, www.publicpower.ca, because it's the New Democrats who are advocating and fighting for public power, hydro at cost, publicly owned, publicly controlled, regulated.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for St Paul's has two minutes to respond.

Mr Bryant: I don't know if many people watching that would understand what was just said. The New Democrats are very sensitive on this issue. The truth is that the New Democrats in 1997 were very much in support of the competition marketplace. It was great to listen to the member for Toronto-Danforth say that, despite the fact that Mr Laughren, the NDP representative on the select committee on energy, in 1997 was their representative under the current leader, Mr Hampton, and he said, "I don't have a big problem with bringing competition into the system." I think what the member for Toronto-Danforth seems to be saying is, "He wasn't speaking for the NDP."

Then you might think that in the NDP's final, concluding report they might have disavowed themselves from their representative, but they didn't. There was not a word of that. Obviously Mr Laughren was speaking on behalf of the New Democrats—that's how it works on these committees—as Mr Conway did for the Liberals. What the New Democrats said in their final report was,

"We support changes to the way Ontario's electricity market is structured."

Interjection.

Mr Bryant: No, that's Mr Hampton and the New Democrats.

The reality is that the New Democrats know that there has to be a mix of rebates and price shock absorbers and there have to be independent power producers and public power producers. We are all now going to try and figure out, after the Tories shipwrecked our electricity system, how to move forward in that direction. But let's not pretend that there are any magic bullets out there on this issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Now we're going in rotation for debate.

Mr Hampton: I am very pleased to take part in this debate. It's always interesting to see how the Liberals could take a debate about hydro electricity and turn it into a revealing history of free fridges in the Liberal government of 1987 to 1990. I will avoid any fascination with free fridges. Instead, I want to focus on how important a dependable, reliable supply of hydro electricity is to Ontario's residents and Ontario's industries and, equally, how important it is to have hydro electricity that is affordable and predictable in terms of the pricing.

There is some history to this whole issue, and I welcome anyone at home—if you've got a public library in your community, chances are they will have a Hansard of the Ontario Legislature. You can go to your public library; you can probably access it either electronically or in print. I welcome you going to the Hansard, either electronically or in print, because there is a very interesting history here.

The Liberals now, as we heard from the last speaker, are desperately searching around for something to hang on to in this debate. I want to point out why Liberals are so desperately looking around for something to hang on to.

We know the Conservative position. The Conservative position—and I think they started enunciating their position in about 1996. Before that they talked about how they wanted to make some changes to the electricity system, but in 1996 they started talking about the prospects of privatization and the prospects of competition, and yes, there was in fact a committee of the Legislature to study the issue.

The Conservatives put forward their position; they wanted privatization. They wanted competition. The Liberals got on board, totally; they wanted privatization, deregulation, competition. The New Democrats said, "Yes, we see some need for changes in terms of the hydro system in Ontario," but we felt strongly enough that we actually issued a dissenting report. The Liberals and Conservatives agreed on a report; the New Democrats issued a dissenting report. We said that there are some real problems here—problems for the environment and problems for consumers. Did the Liberals dissent from the Conservative fascination with privatization, deregulation? Not at all. The Liberals were right there, right along with them.

In fact, I researched my files. It's interesting when you keep files, because you can go back to those files and you can read them into the record. This is a file from February 5, 2001. It's Radio 640 AM in Toronto, and the host is Larry Silver, and he is interviewing the leader of the Liberal Party, Mr McGuinty. He asks him some questions about hydro privatization.

He starts out by saying, "I'd like to talk to you"—Mr McGuinty—"about hydro deregulation. Howard Hampton, from the New Democrats, has raised a flag, and I'd like the Liberal viewpoint on that topic...."

He continues. Mr Silver says, "The Harris government has plans to deregulate the hydro industry later this year, you know, open it up to the private sector, have other people supply you your hydro. Now NDP leader Howard Hampton, he is warning that homeowners, businesses, everybody will get stung by this, that they're going to face higher hydro bills if the province does proceed with the deregulation of the electricity sector." This is back on February 5, 2001. This is some time ago; we're almost talking two years ago. "Dalton McGuinty, what's the Liberal stand on this idea?"

Very clear question: "Dalton McGuinty, what's the Liberal stand on this idea?" Mr McGuinty responds, and I want to quote: "Well, first of all, I don't bring any kind of ideological bent when it comes to deregulation." I think this is what the Liberals mean when they also say that they have open minds when it comes to privatization of health care too. It doesn't come with any ideological bent. He says, "The fact of the matter is, Larry, that some deregulations are good and some are bad. From the Ontario family perspective, when I'm knocking on doors here at election time or at any time between elections, and you talk to people, when they think about hydro, there are only three things that they want to focus on. They want to know, 'What's going to happen to my rates?' They want to know, 'Is it going to be reliable? I want to make damn sure when I flick the switch the lights come on. That's very important to me in business and at home.' And the third thing they always want to know about is, 'Is there going to be safe generation of electricity here? Is it going to be safe for me and my kids?'"

He launches into an attack on Ontario Hydro—it's funny, it's the same attack the Conservatives launch into: "Now, we had a problem with Ontario Hydro. We had a runaway locomotive on our hands. Costs were skyrocketing out of control. They were into all kinds of things that they shouldn't have been into, and the problem was they didn't face any competition." This is the Liberal leader speaking. "So we believe that there should be deregulation in Ontario Hydro and introduce competition and help bring this beast to heel. What we've got to make sure is going to happen, though, Larry, is to make sure that we've got some real competition in place, and so far what the government has done from our perspective is they haven't taken the steps necessary to make sure before they completely deregulate that there are enough stronger competitors...."

I can only conclude that Mr McGuinty wanted privatization to proceed faster and further.

Mr Silver, the host, then asks another question. Basically, he asks Mr McGuinty, "And you know what I'm concerned about is, and I bring it back to the Highway 407 issue, is that they said, 'OK, no, we've got it in place. The Quebec company can run the 407.' Do you approve of that?"

McGuinty: "Well, that's just it. When they were proceeding with their bill, which is going to bring about this deregulation, we specifically asked that the government include a clause in the new law that guaranteed that rates would come down as a result of deregulation. I mean, that's the whole idea behind this thing is to bring in competition and to bring rates down."

McGuinty finally ends with, "I mean, who's ultimately going to be responsible, and that's a question that the government has failed to properly answer yet, so again, we believe you've got to go towards deregulation.... That's the way to introduce real competition."

When you read that, it sounds to me like the Liberal position was pretty clear: privatization. And you needed, according to Liberals, to sell it all off and sell it quickly—complete deregulation—and then competition would do the rest.

New Democrats have never bought into that. New Democrats have said from the beginning that if the government wanted to go down this road, there had to be real measures in place to protect consumers and to protect the environment. We didn't buy into this process. We submitted a dissenting report to the one which the Conservatives and Liberals bought into. That continues to be our position today.

Even after February 1, 2001, New Democrats continued to point out that if you looked around, deregulation and privatization of electricity was not working out very well anywhere.

It wasn't working out in California, where prices didn't go up by 10 times, by 20 times, even 30 times; they went up by 50 times. Just to get a sense of the magnitude of what happened in California: in 1998, before California started putting in place the deregulation measures, the all-in cost of hydro electricity, of power, in California, was $8 billion. That's for industry, for consumers, for institutions like hospitals, colleges, etc. Two years later, after deregulation had been implemented and was now operating on an almost full-blown basis, the all-in cost of hydroelectricity in California went up to $29 billion a year—from $8 billion to $29 billion.

If people read from time to time that corporations are being brought before judges and juries or being brought before commissions of inquiry, the reason for that is, consumers and industry in California are trying to figure out who made off with the $21 billion; who stole $21 billion out of the pockets of California consumers by means of deregulating the hydro electricity system. That's what Californians want to find the answer to.

I could perhaps give them some information about where the money went to. The Enron executives, before the house of cards started to collapse, shipped several suitcases to the Cayman Islands. I bet if someone were to open those suitcases, they would find an awful lot of money. Some of that money, I suspect, even found its way into George Bush's election campaign, since Enron was the major financial contributor to Mr Bush's election campaign. They even allowed Mr Bush to use the corporate jet to fly around the country. But it wasn't just Enron. There were several other private hydro generators in California who, it now is very clear, did exactly as Enron did. Once the market was deregulated, they manipulated the supply of hydroelectricity. They shut down generating stations. They created an artificial electricity shortage, and then when that electricity shortage happened and people needed electricity, they just jacked up the price. They jacked it up and jacked it up until California consumers were gouged out of $21 billion of unjustifiable charges in one year. That was the evidence before this Legislature.

I brought those issues into this Legislature day in, day out. I questioned former Minister of Energy Mr Wilson. I questioned former Minister of Energy Mr Stockwell. We all questioned them. We said, "Are you paying attention to what happened in California?" "In view of what happened in California, don't you think you should watch carefully what's happening here?"

Sorry, Speaker.

Interjection: Howdy, Jonathan.

Interjection: Hi, Jonathan.

Mr Hampton: It's not every day that a four-and-a-half-year-old boy gets to come to watch his father speak. I'm sure he'd rather watch me play hockey, but this will have to do today.

So this was not stuff out of the blue. We asked these questions in the Legislature.

Then there was the fiasco in Alberta. Before deregulation and privatization, Albertans had some of the most affordable electricity rates in North America. Why? It's pretty easy to understand why. You've got those huge natural gas fields. You can take the natural gas right out of the ground, you can run it into a generating station and you can generate electricity right there. In fact, if you go to Medicine Hat, and I invite all members of the Conservative caucus—it's safe territory for you; the MLA from Medicine Hat is a Conservative. I've been there. In Medicine Hat, Alberta, the natural gas fields are right there. They take the gas out of the ground, they run it into a generating station and they generate electricity right there. It is some of the least expensive electricity in all of North America. That's what Alberta had.

Then the Klein government proceeds along the same path that this government has been on and they try to force municipalities to sell off their electricity system and they engage in deregulation. What happened? Hydro prices, hydro bills, shot through the roof again. In fact, Alberta consumers became so angry that Premier Klein in Alberta, a Conservative Premier, brought in—now, get this—first of all, rebate cheques. Just before the Alberta election, he started mailing out rebate cheques to electricity consumers in Alberta. He proclaimed a rate cap. In fact, the estimate is that Alberta spent over $2.3 billion of taxpayers' money to hide the cost of deregulated, privatized hydroelectricity from Alberta consumers. Then they called an election.

My colleagues in Alberta, New Democrat colleagues, said to the people of Alberta, "Look, as soon as the election is over, the price caps will come off; the rebate will disappear." In Alberta, they always vote Conservative, so they voted Conservative again. But what happened? Almost within six months after the election—the official election results weren't even in yet in terms of all the tabulations and being printed—what happened? Off came the price caps. Off went the hydro bill rebate. What happened to people's hydro bills? They went through the roof again.

That's not the end of the story. In fact, if you read these radical newspapers, like the Red Deer Advocate from the home of Stockwell Day—some of the Conservative members might know Stockwell; they might know him personally—it regularly writes editorials complaining about the manipulation of the Alberta electricity market by private generating companies. It regularly complains about the price gouging, the price fixing that's going on.

In fact, what you're seeing in Alberta now is some companies that have no interest in electricity, other than that they need electricity for their business, having to go out and build their own generating capacity. Why? Because they can't depend on the privatized, deregulated market in Alberta to deliver predictable, reliable supplies of electricity at affordable and predictable prices. It's unbelievable. That's what happened in Alberta.

It doesn't end there. Do you know that a mere three weeks ago in the state elections in the United States the people of Montana voted overwhelmingly to terminate deregulation of electricity in that state? Why? Because after deregulation of the system, the price of hydroelectricity in that state went up four times. After people experienced that, they said, "We're not having anything to do with it. We're having nothing to do with it." They voted to terminate deregulation and have a regulated electricity price again.

In Nevada, where they gamble on just about everything, people there have voted in a referendum to abandon, to cancel, to terminate hydroelectricity deregulation there as well. Why? Again, deregulation resulted in very high prices, huge price spikes and resulted in an unreliable, unpredictable supply of electricity.

When will this government learn? Have they learned yet? Well, this bill suggests to us they haven't learned a thing. The Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act reads like a carbon copy of Ralph Klein's playbook in Alberta. The government has to call an election probably within a few months. They know that people are angry about hydro prices that have gone through the roof.

What do they do? They bring in rebates and a price cap just before the election. They say that this rebate and price cap is going to continue on far into the future. I'll make another prediction here today: these rebates and this price cap will last for about two months after the next election. Then, as in Alberta, they will be terminated.

What is this legislation all about? I'm sure you've heard of Rent-a-Car, Rent-a-Maid or Rent-a-Wreck? This is called Rent-a-Vote. Bring in a rebate just before the election, provide some price caps just before the election, and rent a vote.

Hon Jim Flaherty (Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): Rent-a-Boat?

Ms Churley: Vote: V-O-T-E.

Mr Dunlop: Is that like your bus? You mean boats, not votes.

Mr Hampton: That's exactly what it's about.

Mr Kormos: A boat's a different issue. That's the Hydro One boat.

Ms Churley: Yes, a sailboat.

Mr Hampton: If they want to talk about boats, I'd be happy to talk about the Hydro One yacht, because that's the other part of this. You see, they said both to Hydro One and to Ontario Power Generation, "You're going to be privatized, so start acting like those big, mean dogs on Bay Street. Move your salaries up from that measly $500,000 a year you're getting paid now as the president of Hydro One. Yes, $2.5 million." So they did. The government said, "We recognize that you want to have a better car. Go out and buy the most expensive Mercedes you can and it'll be paid for through people's hydro rates. And oh, by the way, when you get tired of driving the Mercedes around, just take a limousine." So the president ran up limousine expenses. I think it was $183,000 in a year. The former president at Hydro One had this fascination with sailing, so they got a yacht. She didn't pay for it privately; it was paid for out of the people's money. That's what goes on here. That's why privatization is so wrong. That's why deregulation is so wrong.

This is an essential public service. People need it every day. People shouldn't be paying for yachts and Mercedes and $6-million retirement allowances and $2.5-million salaries on their hydro bill. But that was this government's strategy. That was fine by this government—until they got caught and it became public. Then, "Oh, we've got to cover that up." That's what this bill is. This bill is nothing other than an attempt to hide from the people of Ontario the true cost of privatized, deregulated hydro.

Why does privatized, deregulated hydro cost so much? This is something people want to know. I suggest they go to their hydro bill, because now you'll find eight, maybe nine charges on the hydro bill. Why? Those charges are simply an indication of all the profit-takers, the fee-takers and the commission-takers that are now on your hydro bill, thanks to the Conservative government, with Liberal help.

In a not-for-profit hydroelectricity system, whatever it costs to generate, transmit and distribute electricity is what people pay. Under the system the Conservative government created, the generating company not only wants their costs, but if they can soak you for a 40% profit or a 50% profit, or in the case of Enron and others if they can jack up the price 20 times, they'll do it. The transmission company: they want their 10% or 15% profit. The distribution company wants their 10% or 15% profit. And I shouldn't forget the president of OPG or the president of Hydro One, because they want their $2 million or $3 million or $4 million. Then the folks on Bay Street who move the money around in the background wanted a $200-million or $300-million commission. Then the real parasites, the electricity retailers, the Direct Energys, if you read the contracts they fleeced people into signing, they wanted a 40% markup too.

When you've got all these profit-takers, fee-takers and commission-takers on the hydro bill, it is no wonder someone's bill goes from $100 a month for hydro to $200 a month or more. No wonder. The corporate friends of this government are all lined up on people's hydro bills, trying to get into their pockets. That's what was going on.

I want to say a word about Direct Energy. They are a really interesting outfit. Just over the last month, I've had about four or five constituents come into my constituency office and they will hold up a contract. In this case they were natural gas contracts. They will hold up a contract they signed with Direct Energy in, say, 1999 or 2000, and in the contract, Direct Energy promised to provide them with natural gas at, say, 11 cents a cubic metre. When you read the contract, it's very clear: 11 cents a cubic metre. You can see the person's signature.

Then they show you a bill they received the first month or two months after signing this and, yes, it's for 11 cents a cubic metre. Then they show you a bill six months later and suddenly the price shoots up to 35 cents a cubic metre. They'll show you a letter they wrote to Direct Energy saying, "Why are you charging me 35 cents a cubic metre when you said you'd deliver it at 11 cents?" There's no response. Then they show you another letter, and no response, and they show you another letter, and no response. So I took their contracts and I took their letters and I wrote to the energy board and said, "What's going on here?"

What we got back was that the energy board said very clearly, "Direct Energy has done something quite illegal here." They've ordered Direct Energy to reduce the price to that which was agreed on in the contract and they've ordered Direct Energy to rebate these people for the overcharges. What's interesting is that despite the consumer writing to Direct Energy, despite the consumer phoning Direct Energy, despite the fact that the consumer time and time again asked Direct Energy to look at the contract and provide gas according to the contract, Direct Energy ignored them. Direct Energy deliberately and intentionally engaged in a strategy of price gouging of those consumers.

That's exactly what this government has invited into the hydroelectricity system. The shock of people. I remember when I confronted Premier Eves with the high hydro bills, he said, "Well, people should sign up with an electricity retailer." Then I brought a Direct Energy bill in, and again it had doubled. Why? Because, when you read the fine print of the Direct Energy situation, they were bumping this person's price up by 50%. They were going to charge him 50% more than he'd ever paid before, but they were going to tell him it was a good deal. That's why people's hydro bills have gone through the roof.

What is the government going to try to do here? Temporarily, they will try to hide this from the consumers of Ontario, from the public of Ontario, until after the next election. Now what is this going to cost, because it is going to cost something, and how is it going to be paid for? Here is the great irony. I remember all the former Ministers of Energy, this Premier, the former Premier, saying that the reason the government had to privatize Ontario Hydro was that there was a debt. That's what they said. They had they privatize because there was a debt. How is this government now going to hide the true cost of privatized, deregulated electricity from people? They're simply going to drive up the debt. When you read the legislation, that's what it says. They're going to drive up the debt. They're going to hide the true cost of very highly priced, privatized, deregulated electricity by simply putting it on the debt.

What's the other way they're going to do it? The other way is to do something this government has done a lot of, which is download on to the municipalities. They have already engaged in a course of action where they blame the municipalities. They blame the municipal utilities: Toronto Hydro, Mississauga Hydro, Hamilton Hydro, London Hydro, Thunder Bay Hydro, Greater Sudbury Hydro, Ottawa Hydro. They blame the municipal hydro utilities. In fact, what they're going to do is push a lot of the costs of this cover-up down on to the municipal hydro utilities.

We've got a number of municipal hydro utilities that are already on the brink of bankruptcy, that are already in difficult financial situations, thanks to this government. What will happen to those municipal utilities? By the way, those municipal hydro utilities delivered the hydro to people's homes for over 80 years in a reliable and predictable fashion and at an affordable price. Now they are being pushed to brink of bankruptcy by this government. What can they do?

The one thing that municipalities will be forced to do is to sell off their municipal hydro utility. I say to people out there, bad deal; don't do it. If you do that, you expose yourself even more to the rip-offs that you saw happen in California, that you saw happen in Alberta and that you saw earlier here in Ontario, over the summer. You're even more exposed.

The other option for municipalities is to increase property taxes to pay for the costs that are being pushed on to the municipal hydro utility for this government. What does it amount to? Not only is the $75 rebate cheque in effect a pre-election, rent-a-vote scheme, but it's one that people will pay for through their property taxes. So you get a $75 rebate cheque and then you get a $100 increase in your property taxes. You lose. But add on to that that after the election your hydro bill goes back up again.

That's what is about to happen here. That's why New Democrats oppose this legislation. I know Liberals are in favour of it and Conservatives are in favour of it. I'm not surprised at that. Liberals and Conservatives have been together on this from the beginning and they're together on it now. New Democrats are calling it what it is: nothing but a scheme, a scam to cover the cost of privatized, deregulated hydro until after the election. It is nothing but a scheme, a scam to rent people's votes until after the election.

There are some other aspects of this, some really terrible aspects. I had an opportunity the other day to talk with Tom Adams, the executive director of Energy Probe. Mr Adams and I have our very clear differences. Mr Adams has been a friend of the Conservative government and a friend of the Liberals in that he advised them both on hydro deregulation and privatization. In fact, I think he served on the market design committee. He is still an almost religious proponent of hydro deregulation and privatization. But do you know what he said to me the other day? He said, because of what this government has done, because of the fact that they have gone down this road of hydro deregulation and privatization without ensuring there is adequate supply, that we could very well see blackouts in Ontario this winter. Keep this in mind.

We built a public power system in this province after 1910 and into the 1920s. Since that time, I think there have been only one or two situations over an 80-year history where there was a power blackout or brownout. But he said, "Thanks to this government, and thanks to the Liberals for helping them, Ontario realistically faces the prospect of a blackout this winter, people not having enough hydro."

Imagine for a minute: we know that the temperature in this province in winter can go down to 30 below, 20 below—10 below is cold enough. Imagine people who depend upon electric heat not having electricity under those conditions. Imagine people who have to rely upon medical equipment that is powered by electricity when it's 30 below and the power goes out. Imagine the risk that people in Ontario are now forced to undergo because this government refused to heed the warnings of California and Alberta, because Liberals refused to recognize what was happening in California and Alberta as a result of hydro deregulation and privatization. That is, regrettably, a real risk this winter for people across this province.

On a very cold day we could see significant parts of the province not have electricity. It's not just electric heat that this affects. If you've got some other kind of furnace and you do not have electricity, then the furnace doesn't come on either. If you've got an oil furnace and the electricity doesn't work to ignite the system, the heat doesn't come on; natural gas, the heat doesn't come on. This puts literally millions of people across Ontario at great risk this very winter.

I say to people that this will not happen by accident. This will happen because a government was so arrogant that it thought it could ignore the experience of California, it thought it could ignore the experience of Alberta and other jurisdictions. This will happen despite the warnings. It will happen because the government ignored the warnings.

I want to speak a bit about the future here. One of the other aspects of this is that the government says that they're going to provide some incentives for new hydro generation. I've been out there and I've talked to a number of the private companies. I've talked to Brascan. I knew Brascan's corporate strategy when they bought four hydro dams from Ontario Power Generation a year ago. By the way, they got a great deal. Our estimate is that the government sold off those hydro dams for about half of what they were worth. If you compare the generating capacity of those hydro dams with other hydro dams that were privatized in the United States during the same period, this government sold them at about half price.

Brascan used them to make a ton of money this summer when the price of privatized, deregulated electricity shot up to $1,000 a megawatt hour. I talked to Brascan. Brascan was clear about what they're going to do. They're going to apply to put an electricity transmission cable under the St Mary's River so that they can transmit electricity into Michigan. They're interested in accessing the Milwaukee-Chicago market where prices are 40% higher than they have been in Ontario, and they estimate that through the difference in price, the much higher American price plus the exchange rate, they can make a substantial amount of money.

They also said at the same time that as soon as they access that American market in a deregulated, privatized environment, as soon as they access that much higher price, then that is the price that they will want from their consumers in Sault Ste Marie, in Wawa, in Blind River, in Garden River and elsewhere along the north shore of Lake Huron.

There's nothing in this strategy to protect consumers. It's not about lower rates. In fact Brascan is very clear. They said, "If the government wants us to build new generating stations, new hydro generating capacity in Ontario, the price will have to go even higher in Ontario." That's what they said.

We've called up Sithe Energies. Sithe was proposing to build two natural gas generating stations, about 500 megawatts each. The government was even boasting about them before they were built. I can remember some of the members standing up saying, "Great news about hydro deregulation and privatization: a new generating station is going to be built in Mississauga by Sithe Energies." I think even a couple of the Liberals joined in on that announcement. And what happened? The prices didn't go high enough. If the prices had gone higher, then they'd be interested in building.

The price didn't go high enough. It seems to me that what the government is also trying to hide from people is that if the key to new hydroelectric supply is private generation, profit-driven generation, the price will have to go even higher still.

I have to hand it to Mr McGuinty. I'm not sure which Mr McGuinty this was, because there have been several nuances and changes of position. Oh, this was the Mr McGuinty of December 13, 2001. About a year ago he said—this is a quote in the Globe and Mail—"Rates may very well have to go up. We've been getting a bit of a free ride here in terms of the debt that Ontario Hydro has amassed." This is the same Dalton McGuinty that now says he agrees with the rate cap. He's in favour of the rate cap. Just throw it on the debt and pay for it through the debt.

That's the truth about privatized, deregulated electricity. If you want private, profit-driven companies to come to Ontario to generate electricity, the price will have to go even higher still.

I also want to talk a bit about energy conservation. The government made some, at best, embarrassing announcements over the last couple of weeks. In fact Hydrozilla went to one of the announcements. Hydrozilla, frankly, I think stole the show on the government. Hydrozilla is this left-leaning lizard who goes around eating wallets because that's what privatized, deregulated electricity does: it eats your wallet. It takes your money. And then when it has taken your money it comes back for more.

The government made what were clearly embarrassing announcements. The Minister of Energy drove up in a car powered by bacon fat. What that has to do with hydro-electricity and what it has to do with energy conservation, I don't know. As I said before, perhaps that is an illustration of this government's fascination with pork-barrelling. This is a government that believes that you send out a rebate before the election and then you just roll in the votes: rent-a-vote, as I say.

What was so embarrassing about this government's announcement is that it doesn't amount to a hill of beans. Ontario does need a conservation strategy. There was a conservation strategy in place in 1995. It was called the Green Communities strategy. This government got rid of it. Do you know why? Because the profit-driven private hydro companies didn't want it. They didn't want it. Why don't they want it? Because they want to sell as much electricity as possible at the highest possible price. That's how you jack up your profits. If you're an Enron, a Brascan or a British Energy—although British Energy's turning out to be quite an embarrassment for this government too since they're now bankrupt.

Interjection.

Mr Hampton: Oh, yes. Read the news reports today, John.

Profit-driven private hydro companies don't want conservation strategies. That's why this government got rid of the Green Communities strategy in 1995. But this province desperately needs one. We need to put in place at least a $300-million-a-year strategy where we can work with municipalities, boards of education and community groups to retrofit hospitals, schools or community centres, to retrofit apartment buildings to reduce the electricity that is consumed, to reduce the natural gas that is consumed, so that when their hydro bill goes down and their natural gas bill goes down, people can then repay the loan from the fund which allowed them to do the retrofit in the first place.

Then, you take that money and you roll it into the next community, the next apartment building or the next group of private homes. Over the course of a couple of years, we can substantially reduce the electricity and the natural gas that we consume in this province.

Ms Churley: And meet our Kyoto targets too.

Mr Hampton: And meet our Kyoto targets at the same time. But does the government have a strategy for that? No. No strategy at all.

What did they announce? I will say that taking off the provincial sales tax on the sale of freezers, refrigerators and other electrical appliances is not a bad move, except for most lower- and modest-income families, that $20 or $30 is not enough to help them purchase.

Now, if you're dealing with the Liberals and Patti Starr and they're giving away free fridges, it might work, but not everyone can get on that form of payola. Not everyone is that connected to the Liberal insiders.

Mr Kormos: Or that star-struck.

Mr Hampton: Or that star-struck, for that matter. But I just say to you, your offer to reduce the PST is not going to help the majority of modest- and low-income families across this province, because it's not enough of a price reduction to allow them to buy the fridge, the stove, the freezer or any other electrical appliance. As a public relations gesture, it's not bad, except Hydrozilla took over the press conference, but as an effective conservation strategy it's nothing, nada. It doesn't do a thing.

Speaker, I note that it is 6 of the clock. I move adjournment for now.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Mushinski): It now being 6 of the clock, this House is adjourned until a quarter to 7.

The House adjourned at 1800.

JUSTICE STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT DES LOIS DANS LE DOMAINE DE LA JUSTICE

Mr Flaherty, on behalf of Mr Young, moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 213, An Act to improve access to justice by amending the Solicitors Act to permit contingency fees in certain circumstances, to modernize and reform the law as it relates to limitation periods by enacting a new Limitations Act and making related amendments to other statutes, and to make changes with respect to the governance of the public accounting profession by amending the Public Accountancy Act / Projet de loi 213, Loi visant à améliorer l'accès à la justice en modifiant la Loi sur les procureurs pour autoriser les honoraires conditionnels dans certaines circonstances, à moderniser et à réviser le droit portant sur les délais de prescription en édictant la nouvelle Loi sur la prescription des actions et en apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois, et à modifier les règles qui régissent la profession de comptable public en modifiant la Loi sur la comptabilité publique.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Mushinski): Mr Flaherty has moved second reading of Bill 213—

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Dispense.

The Acting Speaker: Dispense?

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): No.

The Acting Speaker: —An Act to improve access to justice by amending the Solicitors Act to permit contingency fees in certain circumstances, to modernize and reform the law as it relates to limitation periods by enacting a new Limitations Act and making related amendments to other statutes, and to make changes with respect to the governance of the public accounting profession by amending the Public Accountancy Act, the Honourable Mr Young.

1850

Hon Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I believe I have consent to move this motion.

May I ask for consent to let the debate proceed as follows: that one hour be divided equally among the parties, beginning with the government caucus, and that the remaining unused time for each party's one-hour leadoff speeches be reserved to the next time this bill is called; for the purpose of standing order 46, tonight's debate be considered a sessional day and that at the end of tonight's debate the motion for the adjournment of the debate shall be deemed to have been made and the Speaker shall adjourn the House.

The Acting Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): After the complex rulings and legal decisions prior to my speaking tonight, I just want, for the viewers tonight, to reassure them that this Bill 213—I always like to go to the basics—is 32 pages in length. Of course half of it is in French, so it's really quite a small bill in terms of content, but it is significant in the three sections which were in the notice that Minister Flaherty explained in the introduction.

It is schedule A, amendments to the Solicitors Act, which is the section dealing with the permission of contingency fees.

I'm going to read the preamble here:

"The Schedule amends the Solicitors Act to regulate contingency fee agreements. Contingency fee agreements may not be considered to reduce an award of costs and a client may collect full payment for an award of costs, even if it exceeds the amount payable under an agreement, if the award is to be used to pay the client's solicitor and the solicitor and client have entered into a contingency fee agreement."

This is clearly an agreement where, in my view, this is considered an access-to-justice issue. There are prohibitions, of course, of contingency fees in two areas: criminal and quasi-criminal issues with respect to family matters. Those are two areas in which you can't enter into an agreement with your solicitor or your lawyer to split any award or ruling with the lawyer. In the case of people who have civil matters that they feel need to be well represented, many lawyers in many cases would be happy to find these agreements.

My realization is that Ontario is the last jurisdiction in Canada and indeed North America—and a recent court ruling has indicated that in fact it is a process that Ontario should adopt. So I will speak to some extent, in the limited time I have, more on that, but I do want to mention the two other sections. Schedule B, which is the Limitations Act—I'll read a few clauses here for the viewer:

"A basic limitation period of two years is established" in section 4, "running from the day a claim is discovered" which is in section 5 of the Limitations Act. "A claim is discovered when the person with the claim is, or ought to be, aware of" the "material facts." That is, they are aware that there is some violation. "This basic limitation period replaces the general limitation periods found in the existing Limitations Act and most of the numerous special limitation periods found in individual statutes." The importance here is harmonizing with some predictability or confidence the limitations period in a variety of statutes.

Now there are some important exemptions, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to see you in the chair this evening as well. I think we should take time and recognize Madam Speaker.

I think for the viewer this evening it's important to say the act lists a variety of proceedings in respect of which there is no limitation period.

They are listed in section 16: "proceedings for declarations; proceedings to enforce court orders and other orders that are enforceable in the same way as court orders; proceedings under the Family Law Act"—in fact is what's mentioned here—"relating to support; proceedings to enforce arbitration awards; proceedings by persons in possession of collateral to redeem or realize on it; proceedings arising from sexual assault in certain circumstances; proceedings to recover fines, taxes and penalties owed to the crown."

There is also no limitation period with respect to undiscovered environmental claims, which is very important. So there is a schedule here that lists exclusions from this imposed limitations period.

The third section, which I think has been long sought after, is a sense of fairness. The issue here is schedule C, amendments to the Public Accountancy Act. For the viewer this evening who may not be familiar, there are a number of people who practise accounting, and public accounting is technically the issue here. It's been something that all levels of government, provincially etc.—some provinces have dealt with this issue; Ontario hasn't. It's really recognizing professional accountants who are able to do public accountancy functions.

I'll read for the record here: "Currently the Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario consists of 15 members, 12 of whom are appointed by the council of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario and three of whom are elected by licensed public accountants." This is replaced by a provision under which the composition of the Public Accountant Council is established by regulation made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

"The Lieutenant Governor in Council may prescribe, by regulation, additional functions for the Public Accountants Council.

"The qualifications for being licensed currently include membership in the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario." That's really been the nub of this whole issue, sort of a monopoly position. It isn't an issue about lowering standards; in fact it's allowing access. There will be those—and I see Mr Kwinter here this evening—who disagree. I don't know their position, nor would I presume to know what the Liberals stand for.

"This is replaced by a reference to membership in any one of three organizations"—Madam Speaker, with your indulgence, this is important—"the Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario, the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario and the Society of Management Accountants of Ontario." These again must go through rigorous training and also examinations to be licensed to practice as public accountants. So there's more to this bill as well.

"The schedule adds to the grounds on which a public accountant's licence may be revoked after an inquiry held by the Public Accountants Council. The licence may be revoked if the inquiry finds that the licence holder meets prescribed conditions. These conditions are to be prescribed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council after consultation with the Public Accountants Council."

In this era when public confidence in the financial community is extremely important, I believe that bringing openness, clarity and transparency is extremely important to the public and in many respects could be considered a consumer protection issue.

I know that we as members of the Red Tape Commission have met. There have been judges involved or retired judges retained to try and find agreement between the existing council and the proposed reform of governance, and I believe this is a very good first step to raise the standard in public accountancy.

I think that in my own particular experience the contingency fee is an area where I want to spend a bit of time in the very limited time that's allowed. Again, there can be arguments on both sides of the issue, as in all cases, but contingency fees to me really mean access to justice. In these matters where persons may, for a lot of reasons, not have the resources, they can engage a contract with a lawyer who will professionally represent their issues and bring them to the attention of the courts and receive proper hearing. It is my understanding that regulations will determine the sharing or some formula for sharing any award. Failure to win the case would mean that the lawyer arguably would be working for nothing.

I guess in the agreement and depending on how generous these awards are and the risk situation with respect to something going before the courts—that is why at the moment there is no regulation specifying the amounts within that agreement that are allowable. But it's my understanding as well that there would be some mechanism to appeal the contingency fee schedule.

I think it is important in today's very complex, rather litigious world that Ontario catch up with other jurisdictions and address the access to justice issue. Simply put, the cost of using the legal system should not be a barrier to justice, as I see it as I look into the issue. The proposed legislation would regulate the way in which individuals enter into contingency agreements with their lawyers. Contingency agreements tie legal fees to the outcome of the case, as I said before. Under such agreements, if the client wins a case, the client pays a pre-arranged fee. If the client does not win the case, the client does not pay the fee. In these ways, individuals may be given the option of negotiating a different financial agreement with their lawyer so that the unpredictable legal fees and upfront costs do not serve as barriers to justice.

Middle- and low-income Ontarians should not have to sacrifice their families' future to exercise their legal rights. This legislation is designed to ensure that this does not happen. By modernizing the way legal fees are regulated and ensuring strong public protection, Ontario would benefit from a new tool, contingency fee agreements, to help them deal with the escalating costs of hiring lawyers. Escalating costs is another issue. Legal aid, as we have dealt with, and the public defender, which was in a previous bill—I believe our Attorney General, David Young, has done an admirable job of trying to improve in the overall aspect of access to justice, as well as providing legal aid certificates in those cases where deemed appropriate.

By their very nature, complex cases are often lengthy and costly in civil matters, prepared so that the cost of complex cases may be prohibitive, as I've said, for many Ontarians. Yet this type of case can be among the most important. Not only is the individual or organization involved, but the evolutionary process by which common law adjusts to the ever-changing realities of society—that is, there is just more litigation today.

This further highlights the importance of affordability. In the market, if there are plenty of lawyers willing, eventually the client will find a lawyer that they deem to be competent and comfortable, and the rates themselves, these contingency fee rates, would be determined in that kind of context. There's no reason why they couldn't talk to one or two lawyers to determine that. Allowing contingency fee arrangements will help to ensure that such decisions are less the product of pocketbook considerations and are based to a greater extent on the principles of justice itself.

In speaking on the importance of contingency fees as a means of enhancing access to the justice system, Supreme Court Justice Cory stated a few years ago—it's very important for those viewing to know what has motivated this deep consideration by our Attorney General. Justice Cory said the following:

"The concept of contingency fees is to make court proceedings available to people who could not otherwise afford to have their legal rights determined. This is indeed a commendable goal that should be encouraged. Legal rights are illusory, and no more than a source of frustration if they cannot be recognized and indeed enforced."

This is with respect to a case called Coronation Insurance v. Florence in 1994. It's important to quote Justice Cory in 1994.

I wouldn't in any way try to make this a political thing. It has occurred in the Attorney General's file over a number of years. Again, I commend our current Attorney General and predecessors for the work they've done on this important issue of access to justice. Actions, really, at the end of the day, are the real testament to this commitment to the people of Ontario. I cannot underline that strongly enough.

There are a couple of other sections under the Solicitors Act, but the limitations period is, I believe, an administrative issue in the general sense. Of course, as in all cases, there will be those who say it's not long enough, but if you look at section 16, as I mentioned before, in the preamble to the bill, there are clear determinations in certain types: persons dealing with environmental issues, disability issues, access issue, liabilities to the crown. Those are listed in the schedule of exemptions that aren't going to be included in this two-year, overarching limitation period.

I won't spend a lot of time, because in the last few moments remaining, public accountancy is an issue that I feel each of us—income tax may be our only time, but for small business particularly and for not-for-profit organizations this is an extremely important issue: access to public accountancy. When you have a marketplace, others bidding to do the work, competent and capable of doing the work, that's what this issue is about. Any person who by prescription or legislation has achieved a non-contested position of providing that service—often it's government's role to take the bold and committed step of improving access of the citizens of Ontario to that very service.

In no case would we be lowering standards. This issue, public accounting, is the practice of preparing audited financial statements and other reports which investigators lead to and shareholders may rely on. So investors need to have clear confidence, as we have seen in the more recent uncertainty in the marketplace, in becoming an investor in part of an enterprise.

It is important here that on October 30, 2002, our government retained the dean of the University of Toronto's faculty of law, Ron Daniels, to hold consultations and advise our Attorney General and this government on how best to reform the public accounting licensing regime. I think it's important to look at the third-party resource here as a professional: the faculty of law of the University of Toronto, very highly respected. Ron Daniels has given some information to the government, and the Attorney General obviously has chosen to act.

Again, there are always two sides, or more, to every issue. What reassures me as a member of government is that you have to have the sense of what the people want and the courage to do it, because there is a line-up behind each one of those dissenting voices—and you may, in the next hour, hear some of those dissenting voices. But I can clearly feel comfortable, in standing and speaking on behalf of my constituents of Durham and indeed having worked with the Attorney General and other ministers, that this is having the courage to do the right thing.

At the time, we discussed the idea of broadening eligibility for public accounting to include members of the three major accounting bodies—chartered accountants, certified general accountants and certified management accountants—who meet prescribed high standards. The proposed legislation addresses this important issue. It proposes the framework for the work from Professor Daniels as he developed recommendations on a more modern, effective and transparent licensing regime based on high, internationally-recognized standards. The new competency-based licensing system would protect the public and maintain investor confidence in Ontario by ensuring that only the best-qualified are licensed to practise public accounting in the province of Ontario. I want to stress that while this legislation would broaden eligibility for public accounting licensing, CAs, CGAs and CMAs—these are the designations they have—would still have to meet prescribed high standards that we will put in place after professor Daniels's report to the government. We look forward to receiving Professor Daniels's report. I would like to once again thank the many stakeholders who took the time to participate in this very important process.

In all cases, clarity and access to Ontario's statutes and laws is what this is about. There will be those who oppose and are resistant to change, but it is to have the courage to make a difference that is really the by-line of this government. Taken together, the proposals contained in the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act modernize outdated laws and enhance access to justice while protecting the public. These are important steps that we are taking to ensure that the justice system, the Limitations Act and the Public Accountancy Act are modernized to become more accountable and more accessible to the people of Ontario.

I can only say that I have engaged the professionals in my community and I am going to put a couple on the record. Donna Chambers, as well as Janet Collins, who's a CGA, live in my riding. In fact, each year when the CAs, CGAs and CMAs receive their designations after fulfilling the very difficult exams, I always try to send a recognition or at least a letter to congratulate them, commend them, for the hard work, not just in undergraduate studies—many of them may even have master's degrees—but for receiving the designation and passing the very difficult high-standard tests.

I also shared these comments with our Attorney General, David Young. I would like to say that I worked very closely with Ralph Palumbo, who was involved with the CGAs and who I believe has patiently and persistently tried not to lower the standards but to set standards and have the standards accessible to all persons who want to be public accountants.

Also on public accountants, I've had a listener, Stephen Horton, who is a CGA student with a bachelor of science and a registered insurance broker. He applauds the government for taking this action.

There is e-mail and a number of other ways, but I believe it's important for the people of Ontario to feel they have access to their MPPs. As an MPP, I can assure you I have access to our ministers; in the case of Bill 213, which we're talking about tonight, it is our Attorney General. I commend him for his effort. I'll be supporting this bill. I expect others to do the same.

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): I also want to express thanks and gratitude to the Attorney General for, with the cameras rolling and the tapes whirling, saying on the record something that I appreciate by acknowledging the contribution, however modest, that Bill 178, a private member's bill to bring forth, legalize and regulate contingency fees, had on this process. The official opposition often must blow wind into the sails of government, and if our efforts to try to legalize and regulate contingency fees in Bill 178—which passed, by the way, unanimously in the House, I'll proudly tell everybody here—did that, that is a good thing.

I'm back to talking about contingency fees, as I was with Bill 178, my private member's bill to address that very issue. Let me say that when I first introduced my contingency fee bill in the spring, at the time, contingency fees were considered illegal, really. Contingency fees were covered under provisions of the Solicitors Act, 1990, and An Act respecting Champerty, 1897. Under those acts, the prevailing view under the common law was that those provisions in those statutes prohibited the use of contingency fees in most circumstances. In turn, the rules of professional conduct which govern the conduct of lawyers in Ontario prohibited lawyers from entering into contingency arrangements unless it was approved by statute, which it was not, as it was understood then.

The Class Proceedings Act, 1992, permitted contingency fees in relation to class proceedings, and commission or percentage agreements were permitted in relation to some non-contingency business and conveying matters under the Solicitors Act.

When I introduced the bill, it was an effort on my part to try to, among other things, legislate the recommendations of the joint commission report that had been submitted to the Attorney General of Ontario, the Honourable Mr Flaherty, who subsequently rejected those recommendations. I'll get into that in a moment.

However, the work of the joint commission report, which was an advisory committee to the Attorney General, was excellent work and involved, really, a settlement, a negotiation and a compromise between all the major stakeholders impacted. Not everybody came out particularly happy, but they came out with something that could be taken to legislation. That was not done by the government of Ontario, so I introduced a private member's bill to do just that.

Everything then changed in September, when the Ontario Court of Appeal released its decision in McIntyre. The judgment was written by the Honourable Mr Justice Dennis O'Connor, famous, of course, for heading up the Walkerton public inquiry. The other judges on the panel who concurred were Justices MacPherson and Abella. It was September 10, 2002. I'll get into the judgment in a minute, but to make a long story short, the Ontario Court of Appeal said that the law of Ontario was such that contingency fees were not illegal.

The Attorney General of Ontario at the time of the hearing took the position that they were, but to be fair, he was just arguing the common law as it then stood. The Attorney General took the position that in fact it should be the Legislature and not the courts that should be changing our laws on contingency fees. While that particular submission was rejected by the court, nonetheless the court did go on to say that it really was almost necessary for the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to enact regulations through statute of the conduct—not necessarily by regulation, but via statute—of lawyers entering into contingency fee arrangements. Therefore, I had to amend my contingency fee bill, because it was operating under a different set of assumptions. It then went before the Legislature and, as I said, passed unanimously.

Now we have a government bill which is remarkably similar, in terms of addressing the contingency fee aspects, to my private member's bill, and in that sense I have little to add in terms of constructive criticism to those provisions, because the only thing worse than a sore loser is a sore winner, as the member for York Centre constantly reminds me.

In any event, it is fair to say that there are arguments for and against the legalization and regulation of contingency fees, and I suppose we ought to address those. I have no doubt that consumers and members of various professions may have concerns about what this means. The chief concern over the years with that is that this would somehow Americanize our system and result in a lot of frivolous litigation. To paraphrase Justice O'Connor in the McIntyre case, those fears just never turned out to be in any way validated by the facts as we know them; namely, that every single province in this country has contingency fee legislation in some fashion. Manitoba has had it for over 100 years. Every other province has had it for more than 25 years. Clearly, Ontario had to join the rest of the country in regulating this activity because, as many people understand, a contingency practice was well underway and has been underway for many years. It was simply unregulated, and the potential was always there for abuse. The point of my private member's bill, and I think the point of this government bill, is to do just that.

The first and obvious reason for bringing in contingency fee legislation is that it's going to increase access to justice. We have a brutally expensive justice system, accessible to very few. Most of the court dockets on the civil side, in most jurisdictions in this province, are dominated by what I would call professional litigants, that is, businesses who have to, as part of doing business, get into the business of litigation, whether it be insurance companies acting as defendants or whether it be matters involving the various professions which are often being sued or whether it be simply the commercialists, companies which go to court to try and resolve disputes because the stakes are so high. What that means is that the docket is totally unavailable and unaffordable to the vast majority of Ontarians. Noted in a 1995 report prepared by the Ontario Civil Justice Review—this was a report by the Ontario Court of Justice and Ministry of the Attorney General—this was one of the observations:

"It is important to ensure that access to justice applies fairly to all members of society. There is a particular concern that the middle class, who do not qualify for legal aid, cannot afford the costs of litigation and therefore encounter a barrier to access to justice. As well, wealthier members of society can wear down middle-class members since the latter cannot afford to fund lengthier lawsuits."

1920

That obviously applies 10-fold for those who do not even consider themselves, or otherwise fit into, the demographic of the middle class. There's just no access to justice for so many Ontarians because of this. Now, is this bill a panacea? No, it's not, nor is my private member's bill a panacea. Rather, the hope and the assumption here is that the experience will be the same in other provinces, and that is that some cases that otherwise might not have gone to court will get access to justice.

Legal services are normally purchased with an initial retainer to the lawyer and a commitment to pay an hourly rate for services in disbursement. Many clients, therefore, simply cannot afford that initial retainer and cannot, on an ongoing basis, afford the hourly fees.

"As noted in the 1995 report"—just stated—"the cost of hiring a lawyer is commonly perceived as the single biggest obstacle to litigation in the Ontario Court (General Division). Another difficulty with hourly billing is that it creates incentives for lawyers to prolong cases"—some believe—"by ... conducting more interlocutory proceedings"—in other words, having a whole bunch of motions—"and extending discoveries."

Contingency fees mean that you don't pay unless you win and you don't pay your legal fees until you have a damage award from which to pay them. So it basically means that the risk is borne by the counsel, by the lawyer. It's because of that, really, that we will not have frivolous litigation in Ontario, simply because lawyers are not going to gamble on frivolous cases because they are going to want to be able to collect a fee for it.

Why else do we need contingency fees? "By increasing access to justice, contingency fees may save the public purse"—in many ways. "The purpose of the civil justice system is to enable those who have been injured or harmed by another to be compensated by that person." If people cannot afford to retain a lawyer in order to pursue their claim against another party, then they must turn to the public purse, in many cases, for assistance, instead of getting the person who ought to be paying for it to pay for it through the courts.

Next, "Ontarians should have the same right to enter into such arrangements as other Canadians. All of the provinces and territories in Canada, except Ontario, permit contingency fees with varying controls."

Last, we have right now in Ontario a legal assistance crisis, where fewer and fewer Ontarians simply cannot qualify for legal aid because it is so restrictive and so difficult. Contingency fees, outside the criminal law and family law context, which obviously is the main focus of legal assistance and Legal Aid Ontario, would provide for such funding for actions no longer covered by legal aid. Contingency fees in that sense are meant to fill the gap that has been left by legal aid cuts, particularly as they apply to the civil side.

In my bill and in this bill, it is made clear what is clear I think in the common law, namely, that contingency fee arrangements cannot be entered into for family law matters and for criminal law matters, which should be self-evident, but this must be spelled out, in my view, in legislation.

The arguments against contingency fees tend to focus upon the potential for abuse. Let me start out by citing Mr Justice O'Connor, who said of these abuses as follows, in the McIntyre case, on September 10, 2002: "While historically these concerns about the potential for abuse by lawyers or damage to the lawyer-client relationship were frequently expressed, there is little, if any, evidence to show that the fears were well founded. We do know that for years lawyers have acted in what they considered to be meritorious cases for clients of modest means with the realization, if not the express agreement, that they would be paid only in the event of success."

He went on to say, "We have the benefit of the experiences of the many jurisdictions that have enacted legislation permitting regulated contingency fee arrangements. This court was not shown any evidence to show that lawyers in these jurisdictions, properly regulated, are more likely to engage in the types of abuse to the administration of justice that were once feared to be the result of contingency fee agreements," which really addresses, typically, succinctly and brilliantly, the definitive counter-argument to the concern about abuses.

Mr Kormos: Brilliant?

Mr Bryant: I'm describing Mr Justice Dennis O'Connor as brilliant, not me.

Some of the reasons for a contingency fee bill are in fact to address the abuses, whatever abuses there may be, to provide for a cap; to provide for the circumstances in which contingency arrangements are not allowed; to deal with the question of double-dipping, getting both the award and costs and in what circumstances that might happen; and to deal with instances where the consumer feels ripped off and needs some recourse. All those issues are addressed in my private member's bill and also in this bill as well, and that's the purpose of this: to address those concerns.

Is it possible that we can improve on the bill? I have no doubt that at the committee hearing stage we will endeavour to do that, and we will hear from all the stakeholders and consumer groups and the like to ensure that in fact we have covered all our bases. I certainly would not suggest that my private member's bill is infallible. I look forward to improving it as a private member's bill; I look forward to addressing that in the context of a government bill as well.

Nonetheless, let me just quickly go to some of the potential concerns about contingency fee arrangements and try and address them. First, there is the concern that contingency fees may lead to excessive fees. Well, that's the whole point of putting caps in, the whole point of limiting double-dipping: that you address the ability of lawyers to obtain excessive fees. In the Canadian context, interestingly, statistics compiled by the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia showed, in a nutshell, that for cases involving damages worth 25%, most of the claims saw that the level of fees for the contingency contract are less than they would have been had the matter just been billed out. The next 20% of writs issued involved cases between $25,000 and $100,000, and at that level the lawyer's contingency fee is probably slightly higher than the hourly rate would be if the case did not have to go to trial. So it is written in the British Columbia access to justice report of the justice reform committee of 1998. It is only in the remaining 14% of cases involving more than $100,000 where contingency fees can be considerably higher than an hourly rate bill would be. Yet, of course, if we have someone of limited or modest or even just average means, they would never have the opportunity to bring that $100,000-plus case to court because they would never be able to afford the retainer and the hourly rates along the way.

The other concern is that of frivolous litigation. When I first put forward my private member's bill I found myself on CBC Radio debating eminent counsel Paul Morrison. Mr Morrison expressed a concern about frivolous litigation, although he was very, I think it's fair to say, balanced and complimentary in his remarks. I'll just say now what I said then. In Canada, unlike the United States, we have a party-and-party cost rule, which generally means that a losing party must pay a winning party's costs of the litigation. There is no similar requirement in the United States. It is generally felt that the concern of having to pay the other side's costs in the litigation is a significant deterrent to frivolous litigation.

The second check on frivolous litigation arises in our caps on what are called non-economic costs. In Canada, unlike the United States, there is a cap on the amount that can be recovered for non-economic losses. The Supreme Court of Canada has limited the amount of court awards for non-economic losses, meaning pain and suffering, loss of amenities, reduced life expectancy. It reduced that amount to $269,000 in 1999 dollars. No limit exists in the United States, and awards have run into the millions of dollars.

In other words, it is not the case in Canada, as it is in the United States, that you can bring a contingency fee action in what amounts to buying a lottery ticket. It's worth the investment because the lawyer may recoup millions of dollars because somebody gets multiple millions of dollars for having a cup of coffee spilled on them. Those kinds of damages just are not awarded and have been limited in our country, thanks to the Supreme Court of Canada, and as a result of that you don't have those huge damage award lottery cases in Canada, which again checks against frivolous litigation. As I also said, there's a certain lack of logic to the concern of frivolous litigation, and that is, lawyers are a lot less likely to accept cases of little merit when their fee is contingent upon success.

The private member's bill that I introduced did receive the support of some of the stakeholders and I just want to acknowledge it now because I appreciate it very much and time didn't permit me to do so during private members' hour.

The Advocates' Society wrote to say:

"The Advocates' Society continues to believe that permitting clients and their lawyers to enter into regulated contingency fee arrangements will serve the important objective of enhancing access to justice for the people of Ontario.

"It is clearly a concept whose time has come."

That is from Philippa Samworth, president of the Advocates' Society.

The Ontario Bar Association wrote that "the OBA has since 1988 advocated for, and supported the implementation and regulation of, contingency fees in Ontario....

"Mr Kidd"—who is the chair of the OBA committee on contingency fees—"... reviewed your bill to amend the Solicitors Act and believe that it accords with the key recommendations on implementation that we have consistently favoured. We approved of your efforts to formally recognize and organize this most important access-to-justice tool for the Ontario public." That is from Virginia MacLean, QC, president of the Ontario Bar Association.

Then the treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada wrote:

"As you know, the law society has for many years advocated for contingency fees for lawyers....

"In this context, we thank you for continuing to highlight this important issue." The letter goes on to deal with the McIntyre decision.

My time is running short. I will not have a chance yet to speak to, among other things, the limitation period consolidations, which were originally introduced by—who?—the Honourable Ian Scott, that great Attorney General, who I know wants those particular provisions to pass. I'll certainly look forward to speaking to that in the near future.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Kormos: Regrettably, we only have 20 minutes, but that's OK because we're going to make up for it the next time we address the bill.

The bill has three distinct parts. Let's deal right off the bat with certified general accountants. They've waited long enough. I know there are chartered accountants out there who aren't happy about the legislation. I know there are chartered accountants out there who are probably phoning the Conservative backbenchers and cabinet ministers, telling those backbenchers and cabinet ministers that this chartered accountant is revoking his or her membership in the Conservative Party, or that this chartered accountant has lost all confidence in the Conservative Party to uphold the hierarchical, tiered nature of accountants in this province.

New Democrats have for a long time advocated for the inclusion of certified general accountants in a public accounting regime that recognizes the skill that requires them to meet appropriate standards and, should they meet those standards, and I'm confident they do and will, permits them to perform the full range of roles that we call upon accountants to do. As a matter of fact, I was pleased that Bill 200, which of course predates this bill before the House this evening, is a bill that was designed to amend, among other things, the Public Accountancy Act.

Bill 200 makes "significant changes to the Public Accountancy Act. It restructures the Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario as the Ontario Public Accountancy Oversight Board, consisting of six members appointed by the Minister of Finance and one member appointed by each of the following professional bodies:

"1. The Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario.

"2. The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario.

"3. The Society of Management Accountants of Ontario."

It then further requires that a majority of the board "must not be public accountants." The board's functions of course are to set quality control and accounting standards and review accounting practices.

The bill further went on to indicate, "The qualifications for a licence to practise as a public accountant are amended to require an applicant to pass the qualifying examination approved by the board and to be a member of one of the professional bodies referred to above," including the Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario. Bill 200, introduced in this Legislature by Howard Hampton, leader of the New Democratic Party, on October 30, 2002, reflected a long-time commitment that the NDP has had to certified general accountants being entitled to utilize all of their skills in the practice of their profession, in the practice of public accounting.

There's some concern with the amendments to the Public Accountancy Act, schedule C of the bill, unlike Mr Hampton's bill, which very clearly spells out the makeup of the governing body: one from each of the three accounting associations—certified general accountants, chartered accountants and management accountants—and with a guarantee that the majority of the board must not be accountants. There was no suggestion, of course, that they had to be lawyers or anything like that. It provided a secure structure wherein there was no doubt by the affected bodies that there could and would be fairness.

I have to tell you, because this bill has only been here before the Legislature a couple of days—it has just been printed—I had one of our staff call the Attorney General's office, because I wanted this afternoon, knowing we were going to speak to the bill this evening, an opportunity to talk to ministry staff and get what we call a briefing around the bill. The Limitations Act, which is yet another part of the bill, is something with which all of us should have some familiarity because, heck, there have been two Limitations Acts introduced by this government, neither of which has ever proceeded very far. But I was grateful to the staff who came over from the Ministry of the Attorney General. I am grateful to them, and quite frankly they were extremely helpful in both the contingency act portion of this bill and the Limitations Act portion of this bill and in the acknowledgement of the expertise and skill of the certified general accountants portion of this bill—because that's really what it is, isn't it?

I want to thank the staff who joined me in the NDP caucus area today: Mark Leach, who is the director of the policy branch; William Bromm, counsel in the policy branch, Ministry of the Attorney General; John Twohig, senior counsel in the policy branch; Sunny Kwon, counsel, policy branch, business policy and planning division; Marie Irvine, counsel, policy branch, business policy and planning division; Abiodun Lewis, counsel, policy branch, business policy and planning division; John Lee, counsel, policy branch, business policy and planning division; and John D. Gregory, general counsel, policy branch, business policy and planning division. I really am extremely grateful. These are smart people; these are very competent people. These are civil servants who conduct themselves in the best manner of the civil service. They understand this legislation inside and out, and they were extremely helpful to me in ensuring that I understood the legislation as best it could be understood. They, of course, were joined by the warden, the political staffer. He was a pleasant enough young fellow too, Mike Langlois, MPP liaison, office of the Attorney General and minister responsible for native affairs.

It was a pleasure to meet with these folks this afternoon. I've had occasion to deal with them before. I have the highest regard for them. I want you to know, and I quite frankly want them to know, that I appreciate their assistance not only on this bill but on similar bills that have come out of the Ministry of the Attorney General.

One concern that we have with finally recognizing certified general accountants and their expertise in their capacity to perform public accounting, or public accountancy—far be it from me to inappropriately refer to that practice—is that we're still very much in the dark about the structure of the governing body. Unlike Howard Hampton's bill, which laid out the nature of the governing body—one from each of the three branches of accounting and then a majority appointed by the government who shall not be accountants—we don't have that structure available to us yet with respect to the amendments to the Public Accountancy Act. I'm advised that the matter has been referred to Professor Ron Daniels, whom most of us are well aware of, from over at U of T law school. The advice given to me today was that Professor Daniels has indicated that he will attempt to effect or facilitate a consensus between the three accounting bodies and present that to the government. Failing a consensus, he's said he is going to do what he thinks should be done and recommend that to the government to implement by way of regulation.

I also want to indicate the history of the Limitations Act. We had Bill 163 introduced on December 12, 2000, and it looks like that one got killed in a prorogation of the House. It just died a natural death as a result of the House being prorogued. Then we got yet another one. The first one was introduced by an Attorney General called Mr Flaherty, and the second one—I suppose that would still be the same Attorney General, as I recall it. I'm not sure; I don't have it in the note that was given to me, as to who the second Attorney General was who introduced yet another Limitations Act, Bill 10, on April 25. Bill 10 is the bill still before the House, the Limitations Act. Was it Mr Flaherty or Mr Young who introduced Bill 10? One or the other, obviously. It doesn't happen to be in my notes.

Here we have the Limitations Act again. This time I suspect it might pass, because the government has proceeded with second reading pretty promptly, and we've seen this before when they create a mini omnibus bill. I predict that this government will want this bill to pass before Christmas. Quite frankly, at the end of the day, if that's the case, if the government calls it and it proceeds through second reading, committee and then third reading, so be it.

I predict the government will not want to have anything by way of significant public hearings around this bill. I bet you dollars to doughnuts right now that the government does not want this bill to go to committee. It's not because we don't want it to go to committee. I'd love to hear from members of the various accounting professions. I'd love to hear from certified general accountants. I'd love the opportunity to meet with those certified general accountants and tell them how New Democrats have backed their interests for a long, long time. I'd also like to hear concerns expressed around the Daniels review and then the proposal to be done by regulation, because I'm a little fearful, as I suspect some of the members of these professions are, about the prospect of regulation being utilized to set up this governing body, this council.

I told you the other part of the bill dealt with the Limitations Act. Again, what lawyers and any number of professions have told me is that an overhaul of the Limitations Act is probably long overdue. It's nice, I suppose, in the total scheme of things to see a broad single limitations period of two years being created in this act, if only it were all-encompassing. I took a close look here, and I understand there are some lengthier periods, which are not inappropriate, the 15-year period, due to the circumstances that it contemplates.

But guess who had their cake and ate it too again. Guess who. The auto insurance industry. Those highway robbers are so deep in this government's back pocket, and this government is so deep in the highway robber insurance industry back pocket, that both of you are spitting out lint. Because sure enough, although the general two-year limitation period is considered fine for most people under most circumstances, what does the insurance industry get? Catch this. Section 39, a new section to the Insurance Act: "A proceeding against an insurer under a contract in respect of loss or damage to an automobile or its contents shall be commenced within one year after the happening of the loss or damage." You see, everybody figures, over on the Conservative side, that a two-year limitation period is good enough for regular folks, right? But oh, no, the auto insurance industry gets special consideration. I find that objectionable. Once again, what's sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander. I see once again that the insurance industry—I'm not suggesting they own this government, but it's obvious that from time to time they're renting it, at least for a sufficient period of time to get the amendments they want in bills like the Limitations Act.

Shame on you guys for succumbing, for taking a dive and biting the canvas so quickly. Shame on you. How come people in your caucus weren't standing up saying, "Tell the insurance industry to pound salt. If we're creating an across-the-board two-year limitation period, let it be an across-the-board two-year limitation period for everybody."

Understand what limitation periods are all about: they're there to protect the defendant. You understand that, don't you? Limitation periods are about protecting the defendant. In this case, it's about protecting the insurance industry. One of the rationales—gosh, there are probably people who could put it better than I can—is you can't expect a defendant against whom a claim is being made X number of years after the fact to be in possession of all the things that might be necessary to resist that claim. That's why the two-year limitation period, consistent and uniform, is not, in the total scheme, such a bad idea, because more than two years after the fact—let's say you loaned me some money, and then you decide I didn't pay it back. If you wait longer than two years after when I was supposed to pay you back, I could say, "I gave the money back, and you gave me a receipt, but how do you expect me to have the receipt after two years?" Heck, I can't keep stuff around for two days—look at my desk—never mind two years. It's designed to protect me as a defendant in that case from having to defend myself against a claim made against me, whereby the passage of time means that just time alone would cause little bits of evidence—my memory, my recollection, my possible witnesses—to have disappeared, flown the coop or moved on.

Why are we giving special consideration to the insurance industry? Haven't they picked enough pockets in this province? You gave them their amendments in Bill 198, which restrict the no-fault benefit medical rehab services that innocent injured victims are going to be able to access, and the insurance industry still promises double-digit premium increases. They had their way with you through Mr Sampson—shame on you, Rob

Sampson—in terms of Bill 198, and now they've had their way with you with respect to the Limitations Act.

When are people going to stand up to the insurance industry? They're not your friends. Well, I suppose they're your friends, because of course they cut cheques when it comes to making campaign contributions. Well, you heard Howard Hampton earlier today talking about Rent-a-Wreck, Rent-a-Chalet or Rent-a-Beach House—Rent-a-Government. Why do you guys keep biting the canvas, taking dives for the insurance industry? It beats me.

But there's more to come on the Limitations Act; there's more to be considered. I've got to move fast, because we've got to talk about the contingency act. I was particularly upset—again, the staff I referred to were extremely helpful in pointing out what changes had been made in this Limitations Act from the earlier two acts that have been introduced, most recently Bill 10, which the government never saw fit to proceed with.

I've had accountants on my back saying, "When is this government going to get off its duff and move along with the Limitations Act?" I said, "Search me. These guys aren't the most organized." The Conservatives—the over-the-hill gang, the shoot-themselves-in-the-foot gang. I've got accountants down where I come from who want this Limitations Act passed; they want it debated and passed. They've said, "Where is Bill 10?" I said, "Search me. I'm not the government House leader. I don't call the orders of the day for the government. I don't determine the government agenda. The government didn't see fit to proceed with its Limitations Act." Finally, by including it with two other bills—this mini-omnibus—it looks like we're going to move on. However, what's interesting is that with respect to claims by the government, there's no limitation period.

I want you take a careful look at this, because this is repugnant: a proceeding brought by the ODSP or Ontario Works has no limitation. ODSP and Ontario Works can bring the action 10 years after the supposed overpayment, 20 years, 30 years or 40 years. I've already had experience in my constituency office of Ontario Works calling up good folks down where I come from in Niagara Centre, saying, "What about the money you owe welfare from 15 years ago?" They say, "What are you talking about? How can I possibly, 15 years after the fact, argue my case? I'm saying to Ontario Works, 'You're full of it, telling me, 15 years after the fact, that you overpaid me. Why didn't you tell me then? Cause you sure as heck didn't tell me then.'"

There is no limitation act in claims being made by ODSP and Ontario Works. I think that is repugnant and I would hope that government backbenchers will take a look at this. I don't think it's fair. It's not decent; it's not just. How can you expect somebody who might have been on welfare, social assistance, Ontario Works, 15 years ago, who insists they didn't receive a penny of overpayment, and not only didn't they receive a penny of overpayment, they were never notified of a penny of overpayment, and 15 years after the fact, when they've moved on with their lives as people like that want to, they get hammered by ODSP or Ontario Works saying, "You owe us as a result of an overpayment"? It's not right. A two-year limitation period should be a two-year limitation period for all. This is nothing more than an ongoing effort to beat up on some of the poorest people in Ontario.

I hope you folks will take a look at it, and I'm referring very specifically to section 16. There is no limitation period in respect of that section of this bill.

I'm going to have to talk about the contingency act next time we come back. I'm going to want to talk about the McIntyre decision, the Ontario Court of Appeal decision by Mr Justice O'Connor. One of the things I'm going to be explaining to you is that we have had contingency in this province for a good chunk of time; Justice O'Connor said so. We'll get to that next time this bill is called.

Thank you very much for your patience with me tonight.

The Acting Speaker: In accordance with the agreement made earlier tonight, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 pm on Monday, December 2.

The House adjourned at 1952.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 2 December 2002

*The House met at 1330.
Prayers.*

WEARING OF RIBBONS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale):

On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent to wear red ribbons in the Legislature today in recognition of World AIDS Day.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

CENTRAL NORTH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I rise in the House today to respond to a statement from the member for Simcoe North last week about the Central North Correctional Centre in Penetanguishene. I was appalled to listen to the member praise Management and Training Corp Canada for operating a "correctional centre that has represented a win-win situation for everyone involved, including the inmates."

Obviously the member is quite ill-informed when it comes to actual occurrences at CNCC, where over the past year there have been countless problems with many areas at that super-jail. Besides security breaches, which I witnessed on an unplanned tour, guards working entire shifts without meal breaks, a riot which caused severe damage to a whole section within the jail and questionable medical care practices tell me this private prison experiment has not been a success, as the member opposite wants everyone here to believe.

I was outraged this past week when it came to my attention that a male inmate had been sodomized while in custody at the jail last weekend. I have recently been contacted by a former inmate who has recently filed a lawsuit against the province of Ontario and Management Training Centre, the operators of the jail, for an incident which occurred while he was incarcerated at that super-jail. Another inmate bit off his earlobe in a lengthy scuffle in a video-monitored common room. This man suffered numerous injuries before a guard entered the room and is now having problems obtaining that surveillance so that he can do his court case.

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lundi 2 décembre 2002

This raises a number of questions on the procedures at CNCC and the measures taken to protect those within its walls and the community surrounding it. It's my hope that the Harris-Eves government will soon realize that private, US-based prisons are out of the question in the province of Ontario.

AMYOTROPHIC LATERAL SCLEROSIS

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington): ALS, or amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, sometimes called Lou Gehrig's disease, is a rapidly progressive, fatal neuromuscular disease. There are an estimated 1,500 to 2,000 Canadians who are living with ALS. This disease knows no social or economic boundaries and affects men and women in equal numbers. ALS can strike at any time. Generally, there is little impairment of the intellect, sight, touch, hearing or smell even as the disease progresses.

The average life expectancy from the time of diagnosis ranges from three to five years. There is no treatment that prolongs life significantly, although research is looking at possibilities. During the latter stages of the disease, when there is extensive paralysis, home and nursing care are required to assist with the tasks of daily living. The type of care needed can be costly. While provincial health care systems cover some of these costs, patients and families must bear any remaining costs, including some equipment purchases and private nursing.

The recently released Romanow report recommends that the federal government set up a national home care plan. Canadians with ALS know how important this recommendation is, especially for palliative care.

The ALS Society provides advocacy and support to ALS sufferers. Today the ALS Society has been at Queen's Park. I want to welcome the ALS Ontario president, Deborah Lavender, and her team, and encourage them in their important work.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I rise today to ask the Minister of Finance where our economic and fiscal outlook statement is. It is customary that the government prepare this document. Last year, it was released on November 6. It is a key document for the province of Ontario to understand the state of our economy and finances.

Since the Premier has become Premier, frankly, we've seen a series of these things. This year's budget was the latest it has ever been. In 1995, Mr Eves promised that the budget would be released before the fiscal year started. This year's budget was presented in June, three months after the fiscal year started. The public accounts were released about two weeks ago—these are the audited statements—seven and a half months after the fiscal year closed, the latest we've ever seen them.

By the way, if you look at the public accounts, we still find two sets of books. There's a $1-billion difference between the financial statements and these financial statements, both issued at the same time. We still have two sets of books, in spite of the fact that the Premier, then the Minister of Finance in 1995, promised that would be eliminated.

I say again to the government, the business world and the province of Ontario looks for sensible, strong leadership. We're not getting that. The latest example is the fact that we still don't have our fiscal and economic outlook, several weeks later than it has ever been.

WEARING OF FLOWERS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent to wear the flower which depicts awareness of ALS, Lou Gehrig's disease.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

COAL-FIRED GENERATING STATIONS

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): It's my hope today to get a clear answer from the Liberals across the floor about whether or not they plan to close coal-fired electricity-generating plants by 2007.

I understand that there has been a great deal of indecision about this issue within the Liberal caucus. One day they were for closing the plants, the next they were for keeping them open, and then again they flip-flopped. Now, as I understand it, they are for closings, at least for the moment.

It seems that some Liberals believe their leader is blowing smoke on this issue. Understandably, they do not comprehend how Ontario would replace the lost power from the coal-fired plants. I understand that the coal-fired plants contribute approximately 35% of Ontario's electricity, yet Dalton keeps us in the dark about how he would counterbalance this shortfall.

I ask Liberals to come clean today. I ask them to tell voters that they really have no plan to replace the lost generating capacity. Alternatively, I ask them why voters would ever support blackouts and brownouts across Ontario.

Should we call the Liberal leader "Blackout Dalton"? Possibly so, since Dalton's policy will lead to blackouts and people freezing in their homes. Frankly, it's very hard to imagine voters supporting a party that has so clearly failed to do their homework on such an important issue.

SCHOOL BOARDS

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): There are times in which I feel this government operates the theatre of the absurd, when black means white and white means black.

Last August, the Minister of Education replaced the Ottawa-Carleton District School Board with a supervisor because, according to the minister, the trustees broke the law by not submitting a balanced budget. Now the supervisor admits he cannot balance the budget, so he will borrow $13.9 million, even though he has just cut $3.7 million in special education, a clear classroom cut.

According to the Ottawa Citizen's Randall Denley, "Beyond the political guff, Beckstead's actual plan is pretty thin. A good portion of it involves money that wasn't going to be spent anyway. Just as curious was the reaction of our local Tory cabinet ministers (Baird, Sterling, Coburn) who praised Beckstead for his partial accomplishment. If the local trustees had done the same thing, the Tory thinkers would have had apoplexy. The three cabinet ministers described the fact that the board has spent all its reserves and finished last year with a deficit as a 'shocking revelation.'"

"If that was a shock, then they've been on another planet. Wake up guys, and buy a subscription to the newspaper."

The other Tory MPP, Mr Guzzo, Ottawa West-Nepean, is quoted as saying, "Yes, I think he should be replaced."

I agree with Mr Guzzo. Mr Beckstead should be replaced by giving the board back to the trustees, who were totally vindicated by this process, and funding the board adequately, as Mr Beckstead himself has shown is much needed.

PRESS GALLERY CHARITY AUCTION

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): It's snowing in northern Ontario and people are skiing. Searchmont ski resort, in the mountains of the midwest, just north of Sault Ste Marie, opened up just in time for the American Thanksgiving weekend. Mike Brown and I presided over the official opening on Saturday.

Imagine fluffy snow everywhere and hundreds of people—families, children—shushing, skiing, snowboarding down the slopes. This phenomenon coincides with the annual press gallery charity auction on Wednesday evening this week right here in the pink palace, and yet again three Sault Ste Marie boosters, businesses promoting our city and region, have put together a package not to be missed. To be auctioned off: a two-night stay at Algoma's Water Tower Inn, two days of skiing at Searchmont Resort and, yes, airfare for two from Toronto via Air Canada Jazz.

So jazz it up and bid on two nights at a resort for the price of a room and ski till your heart is content at Searchmont ski resort. Get into winter. Get out in the snow. Come on up to the Soo and enjoy our unparalleled hospitality. Come on out to the press gallery charity auction on Wednesday night. Bring your friends, support the United Way and have a really good time at the same time.

MEGHAN LOHSE

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I am pleased and excited to rise in the House today to say that my wife, Peggy, and I are thrilled to announce the arrival of our first grandchild. Meghan Elizabeth was born Monday, December 2, at 6:30 am Australian time at Calvary Hospital in North Adelaide. Meghan weighed in at seven pounds, 13 ounces. Proud parents are our daughter Rebecca and our son-in-law David Lohse. I'm pleased to say that mom and daughter are both doing fine.

Meghan Elizabeth is the granddaughter of Jane and Roden Lohse of Lithgow, Australia. She is the great-granddaughter of Elizabeth Woods, Madge Hall and the late Claire and Ruth O'Toole, George Woods and Ron Hall.

Our other children, Erin, Marnie, Andrew and Rochelle, are of course thrilled to welcome this newest member of our family. I think each of us would agree that Christmas has come early for our family and our household.

It is at times like this, with the arrival of a new generation, that we understand more clearly the importance of the work we do here in this Legislature each day. We must continue to realize that our decisions are not just for today or tomorrow, but for a future that now includes our children and grandchildren.

My wife, Peggy, is excitedly looking forward to travelling to Australia on December 26 to visit Rebecca and her daughter, Meghan.

MARJORIE HOUSE

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): Last week, I had the opportunity to visit Marjorie House, a women's emergency shelter in Marathon which provides a safe haven for victims of domestic assault in the Marathon catchment area. Sad to say, but the cruel reality for agencies such as Marjorie House is that their occupancy rates are continuing to increase as more women and children seek the safety of these desperately needed services.

But what's so startling about that reality is that despite this increased need, the Ministry of Community and Family Services has brought forward a plan which not only recommends the closing of the community residence in Thunder Bay but would reduce the number of beds available at Marjorie House as well as the family resource centre in Geraldton from 10 beds to two by April 2004.

Not only that, but the plan also calls for one regional crisis line to be put in place, replacing the crisis lines presently run by the staff at Marjorie House—a truly stupid and bad idea.

Minister Elliott, I often feel that your government lacks the necessary awareness of regional realities and distances in the north, but this particularly insensitive plan truly boggles the mind. Let me be very clear, Minister: this is a bad plan that must be stopped in its tracks. You can do that today by instructing your ministry staff to withdraw this plan immediately.

At a time when needs are increasing and your own government wants to brag about its so-called increased commitment to address domestic violence, all of us in the Thunder Bay district are at a loss as to how you can possibly justify these massive reductions in service. Women and children who are fleeing domestic assault in Marathon or Thunder Bay should not be punished because they live far from downtown Toronto. We demand that you understand that as well by stopping this ill-thought-out and remarkably insensitive plan right now.

HEALTH CARE

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): Roy Romanow has released his long-awaited report on health care reform in Canada. The report, released on November 28, 2002, validated the Ernie Eves government's long-standing belief that more health funding is needed from the federal Liberal government. It's quite telling that while Ontario Liberal leader Dalton McGuinty tries to create fear around Ernie Eves's innovations to provide universally accessible, publicly funded MRI services in independent health facilities, McGuinty's federal Liberal cousin, Anne McLellan, the Minister of Health for the government of Canada, disagreed with McGuinty, saying, "I think" independent health facilities "do play an important role in terms of providing advanced diagnostic services. My view has been that if clinics are providing medically necessary services they should be covered by the Canada Health Act."

After seven years of saying the feds spend enough on health care and refusing to stand up to his federal Liberal cousins, Dalton McGuinty now says he supports Romanow's call for more health care funding from the federal government. Where was Dalton years ago when the Ontario PC Party began the national debate, brought premiers from coast to coast on board, brought the issue to the top of the national agenda and forced the federal government's hand to create the Romanow commission in the first place?

Dalton McGuinty has not released a health care plan for Ontario. He's simply not even part of the dialogue. The entire Dalton McGuinty health care plan on the Liberal Web site, all 147 words of it, is ideas cribbed from this side of the house. Leadership takes courage. Ernie Eves and the Ontario PC Party team have it and have led the way with innovative solutions and unparalleled health care funding for the past seven and half years. Dalton McGuinty? He's still not up to the job.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly, pursuant to standing order 109(b).

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mrs Marland presents the committee report. Does the member wish to make a brief statement?

Mrs Marland: No, it's a very straightforward report. I won't make a statement.

The Speaker: I thank the member. Pursuant to standing order 109(b), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

REDEEMER UNIVERSITY COLLEGE ACT, 2002

Mr Wood moved first reading of the following bill:
Bill Pr14, An Act respecting Redeemer University College.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Pursuant to standing order 84, this bill stands referred to the standing committee on regulations and private bills.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SITTINGS

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I move that the standing committee on finance and economic affairs be authorized to meet to hold pre-budget consultations on January 27, 28, 29 and 30, 2003, and February 3, 4, 5, 6 and 20, 2003.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member, I believe, needs to ask for—

Hon Mr Stockwell: I apologize. I ask for unanimous consent.

The Speaker: Consent to move the motion? I can't keep track. Is it the pleasure of the House? Consent.

Mr Stockwell has moved the motion. Agreed? Carried.

WORLD AIDS DAY

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): On a point of order, Speaker: I seek unanimous consent to allow statements by the parties for up to five minutes on the occasion of World AIDS Day.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed. The minister, to start us off.

Hon Mr Clement: I rise in the Legislature today in light of the World AIDS Day 15th anniversary, which has been entitled Live and Let Live.

By the end of 2001, an estimated 40 million people were living with HIV. That number is expected to escalate by another five million cases per year. Furthermore, in 2001 alone an estimated three million people lost their lives to AIDS. That's over 8,000 deaths per day. The disease knows no boundaries. There are a reported 22,000 people right here in Ontario who are currently living with HIV.

That's why World AIDS Day is so important. It's a day to affirm our support for people living with HIV and an important opportunity for us to demonstrate our high regard for the doctors, nurses and other health care providers throughout Ontario who have responded to HIV/AIDS with such skill, compassion and dedication.

Past government initiatives include the establishment of the Ontario HIV Treatment Network, the Community-Linked Evaluation AIDS Resource Unit and the injection drug user outreach program. I want to assure the House at this time that HIV/AIDS prevention, care, treatment and support will continue to be priorities for the Ernie Eves government, and we'll be spending almost $50 million in 2002-03 for HIV- and AIDS-related programs.

The government's 37 boards of health collaborate with school boards to provide education to students about HIV and AIDS, in addition to providing needle and syringe exchange programs as part of our harm reduction program. As well, our government provides funding for supportive housing for people living with HIV and AIDS, and programs that provide volunteer-based in-home hospice care.

Ontario HIV diagnostic testing ensures that a very high standard of testing is maintained, and approximately 300,000 tests per year are conducted. Through our province-wide AIDS hotline, people can access information and counselling in both English and French. Approximately 90,000 calls are answered annually.

We're all proud of Casey House, a 12-bed residence and hospice program for people at the end stages of AIDS, which offers medical and nursing services, counselling and nutrition services.

All these initiatives demonstrate that health promotion and disease prevention have to be at the top of this government's health care plan.

We have come so far, but there is still so much more that has to be done. That is why I have directed that our AIDS strategy be renewed and reviewed in the months ahead. I learned a lot by attending the International AIDS Conference this past July, where it was absolutely clear that Ontario is at the forefront in both research and treatment. But we simply cannot rest on our laurels.

I'm proud of the outstanding achievements of the Ontario HIV community: people living with HIV/AIDS, the health providers, the researchers, the clinicians and the community workers throughout this province. I'd like to take this opportunity in the House to thank the Ontario Advisory Committee on HIV/AIDS and its co-chairs, Dr Don Kilby and Mr John Plater, for their absolutely outstanding and uniformly excellent work in providing me with expert advice on all aspects of HIV/AIDS. I'm eager to learn more about the issues from this advisory committee when we sit down next in January to review our proposals for change.

On behalf of the Ernie Eves government, I would also like to thank those individuals as well as the many volunteers whose tireless efforts have lightened the burden of people living with HIV/AIDS and their loved ones.

I think it's accurate to say that a society is judged in large part by how it takes care of its sick and its infirm, simply those who cannot take care of themselves. That is why I am so proud that we in this government are working with the people of this province to help make an Ontario that is a better place for all people living with HIV/AIDS.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): As a gay man, it is with a heavy heart that I stand on behalf of the Liberal caucus and my leader, Dalton McGuinty, to offer some words on this the 15th annual World AIDS Day.

I want to start by paying tribute to three individuals—Louise Binder, Jim Wakeford and Ron Rosenes—who all have AIDS and who continue to be incredibly passionate spokespersons and do such an effective job of making sure I'm aware of the issues that are affecting that community.

I want to pay tribute to the courage of those people in my community and in all of our communities living with HIV and AIDS, for the courage they show in confronting health battles that I think many of us are so fortunate not to have to deal with, and especially to those caregivers, to those people who work in voluntary capacities and as our paid medical staff, who do such an extraordinary job of extending the quality of life and helping to find new advances in treatments, services and pharmaceuticals that really have done so much to improve the quality of life for people living with HIV and AIDS.

I note that the theme of this year's World AIDS Day is Live and Let Live, but the unfortunate reality for those living with AIDS is that too many of them find early death. The stunning statistic that three million people last year succumbed to AIDS is a wake-up call, if one were ever needed on this issue.

The numbers in the world demonstrate that AIDS is a growing pandemic: some 42 million infected people worldwide, 75% of them in Africa. In Botswana, 39% of all of the people living in that country have HIV or AIDS. It's a growing concern in Russia, India and China.

I was looking back on some of the past statements that have been made. Two years ago, Frances Lankin, speaking on behalf of her party, noted that 33.6 million people then were affected worldwide by AIDS. The number is now 42 million and growing in a very serious way. Here in Canada, an estimated 50,000 people are living with HIV and AIDS, 4,200 new cases annually.

In my own community, we're forced to confront the reality that while medications have extended the lives and the quality of life for people living with HIV and AIDS, that they've turned that disease into a chronic and somewhat more manageable disease, this has created an artificial sense of security for many younger people. We need to continue to enforce the message that this is something where personal responsibility needs to be the bottom line, that people have to take responsibility for their own lives, that we need to address that artificial quality of life.

In 2002, AIDS has touched me in a very, very personal way. The AIDS Committee of Toronto lost one of the most inspirational people I've ever met, a man by the name of Charles Roy, who was a world leader in the fight for better treatment, the fight against HIV and AIDS.

This Liberal caucus has a staff person by the name of Markus Wilson. Earlier this year we gathered around as a community, the family of a caucus, and raised money, and a bunch of us have been very involved in helping Markus while he continues to fight a valiant struggle. He has pretty good health, as I spoke to him this morning. It reminds us all that this is something that has touched so many of our families.

In my own political world there's a young man who moved to Toronto from not too far outside of Toronto, who is 20 years old, and earlier this year he tested positive for HIV. This helps underline that we have a lot more work to do.

I think this is one of those issues where leadership from political parties who were the government of Ontario, all three of them, means that as Ontario legislators we should be proud of the work we've done but should commit ourselves as well to make sure we continue to do all that is necessary: support for the kind of education that makes sure people understand that while treatment has improved, this is still a huge, huge risk.

We need to make sure that things like ODSP and the Trillium drug plan are working properly for people. We need to get back to the point where the province of Ontario supports nutritional supplements for people living with HIV and AIDS. We need to make sure that the work we've done on prenatal HIV testing, which works very hard to ensure that HIV is not passed from mother to baby, reaches out into more rural and isolated parts of our province to make sure there's a high level of awareness and that OB/GYNs and midwives in more rural parts of our province are aware of the best treatments and are making sure that those are effected.

By continuing to work together, I think we in Ontario can continue to be proud of the work we've done to preserve the lives of those living with HIV and AIDS.

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I find no pleasure today in rising to acknowledge World AIDS Day, but we do so out of a need that we have, particularly on this day but frankly at all times, to ensure that we are addressing and providing a response to this disease. UNAIDS, the United Nations agency that is charged with combatting the spread of HIV, reports that there now are 42 million HIV-positive people worldwide. There will be five million new infections this year around the world—800,000 of them children—and 3.1 million people will die.

Here in Canada, six people under the age of 25 are infected every day. Indeed, despite growing public awareness, HIV/AIDS infection rates have remained steady. Today there are nearly 50,000 Canadians living with HIV or AIDS. AIDS and HIV touch all of us in all our communities. For many of us, they have touched our families and our friends.

The HAVEN outpatient clinic at the Sudbury Regional Hospital estimates that about 300 people who live in the Sudbury area now have AIDS or HIV. Today, that outpatient clinic is launching a campaign to raise awareness, challenge the HIV/AIDS stigma, end discrimination and promote HIV prevention methods.

Communities across this province have rallied large campaigns to increase public awareness and build government support for HIV and AIDS prevention and treatment. We should not forget how many ways other people in those communities take action by providing support to people in those final days.

I want to talk for a moment about what barriers people living with HIV and AIDS still face here in Ontario, because frankly, the government record on removing those barriers is truly inadequate. While each year this government talks a good line, the reality is that they have not acted to remove the barriers to people living with HIV and AIDS. For example, drugs: over the years we have mentioned in this House on numerous occasions that in our conversations with doctors treating patients with HIV and AIDS, they are overwhelmed by the mountain of additional paperwork and bureaucracy the government creates. At a time when people living with HIV and AIDS need timely treatment, the government has created a double standard. It is just obsessed with red tape for these individuals.

The NDP government introduced the Trillium drug plan, but we know right now that there are some very significant issues with respect to the drug plan. There was a CTAC alert that was released on November 21. It said: "Ontario Formulary Coverage at Risk...."

"There are increasingly unacceptable delays and a refusal to add important new medications, formulations and vaccines for children to the provincial formulary. Also, section 8 requests for exceptions to the formulary rules are either being denied or languishing in the system without reply."

I ask the government, why is it denying people with HIV and AIDS reimbursement for life-saving medications? Why is the government refusing to pay the cost of meningitis, chicken pox or pneumonia vaccines for HIV-positive children? We have about 110 perinatal HIV-infected children in the province. At a cost of about $600 for these three vaccines, surely the government could make an exception and pay for vaccines for these families.

Nutritional supplements: Frances Lankin stood in this House in 1999 and demanded that the government reverse the policy to refuse funding for nutritional supplements unless they are a person's sole source of nutrition. We have to rise and demand that the government do the same again today. The government made a choice to enforce a policy that was not intended to apply to people who have a medical need for nutritional supplements, but that's just ridiculous. Supplements are just that: supplements. It's no answer to say that people can buy them off the shelf. They're far too expensive, and many of these people are on disability benefits and don't have the income necessary to do that. We also know that when this government made that decision, they must have known this would directly affect HIV and AIDS patients, but they have still refused to change this policy.

We're also very concerned that this government, in downloading public health costs, has also downloaded concerns from many consumers, many people who deal with HIV and AIDS, that some municipalities don't recognize the need for ongoing AIDS prevention programs. Some municipalities, overwhelmed with the costs that this government has downloaded in so many other areas, aren't addressing those concerns, aren't paying for those programs, and they should.

On this day, World AIDS Day, we call on the government to do a number of things: get the necessary drugs covered under the Ontario drug formulary in a timely fashion; fund vaccines for HIV positive children; get rid of the red tape that doctors are facing; bring back the nutritional supplements; and get back in the business of funding public health.

Today we need more than words. We need some action from this government in reducing these barriers.

VISITORS

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I am very proud of the fact that I have one of my residents, Nicholas Butte, as a page in this place. I'd like to welcome his mom and his brother, Alistair, here today in the gallery.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We're advised, and if this is incorrect I'll be corrected, I'm sure, that the Premier has to leave at 2:55 this afternoon. That puts us in some difficulty. By way of resolving that problem, might I—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Yes. Might I suggest that the government consider agreeing to standing down the government backbench questions so that the opposition has availability to the Premier?

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I believe the member is asking for unanimous consent for that. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): My question is to the Minister of Energy. To the minister who during estimates committee could not read a typical energy bill, who referred to energy bills as gobbledygook, to the minister who referred to energy bills as "confusing" today in an announcement that the government was retaining a $1,000-a-day consultant to try and make energy bills comprehensible, my first question is this: why weren't the bills made comprehensible before you opened up the marketplace on May 1?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): First, let me correct the member opposite. His facts are wrong, and this is not the first time that has happened. The individual in question has agreed to provide services over the course of not just the first 30 days where they'll make progress, but for the two or three months that they'll spend conducting a review at a capped rate of up to $25,000; so it could be less. I hate to take the bluster out of the question of the member opposite, but in fact he is wrong; it's not the case.

I think it is appropriate that we look at not just the presentation of the bill to consumers but why there's such a huge differentiation on the customer charge. In the city of Thunder Bay it's a rather modest charge. In the city of Toronto it's rather high. In Hydro One, which is owned by the government of Ontario and the people of Ontario, it's considerably higher. We want to ask ourselves why this is the case, and also to look at the IMO uplift charge. I think that's the responsible thing to do.

Mr Bryant: I thank the minister. I hadn't realized what a bargain you have struck: $25,000—wow, 25,000 taxpayers' dollars to clean up incomprehensible bills that should have been comprehensible before you opened up the marketplace on May 1. Oh, I'm sorry; I hadn't realized what a bargain this was.

I want to ask you this, Minister: last time I checked, you had a lot of people working over there at the Ministry of Energy, and I understand you struck a real bargain at $25,000. But I'm wondering why the people who are already on the public payroll aren't out to fix this. Second, you didn't answer my first question: why wasn't this done before the marketplace was opened?

Hon Mr Baird: I was pleased that the member opposite remembered that he had to put a question into that. We did undertake some comprehensive reform with respect to electricity, recognizing that the former Ontario Hydro was the Titanic of utilities and an iceberg was in sight, that we couldn't sit back and watch debt continue to accumulate to the tune of $38 billion.

With respect to the efficiencies at the Ministry of Energy, it is a group of people made up of extraordinary public servants who do an outstanding job for the people of Ontario. We have one deputy, one assistant deputy minister and just two directors. It's a small, lean machine, but I think it does a phenomenal job for the people of Ontario. That's why we wanted someone who could bring a fresh perspective to the table to look at these charges.

I was pleased that the member opposite attended the press conference and said he was supportive of the process.

Mr Bryant: Nice try. We have been calling for the cleanup of these bills for some time.

Not only did you announce this $25,000 consultant to clean up bills that you should have cleaned up before May, you also announced that you were going to spend $1 million on an ad blitz—$1 million. So not only have you shipwrecked the electricity system, not only are there enormous incompetence costs for what the government has done, but you are now going to spend $1 million of Ontarians' money to spin you out of political perdition.

My question for you is, why on earth are you spending Ontarians' money to clean up the mess that you created in the first place?

Hon Mr Baird: This was a figure that we had released more than two weeks ago, so it won't come as a surprise to many. We feel we have a responsibility. There were a whole lot of working families throughout Ontario, struggling small business people and farm operators who were concerned about the bill on the kitchen table and who were also tremendously concerned with respect to what the future held. I think we have an important responsibility in government to report back to the people we serve and to let them know of the initiatives that the government is presenting for consideration. In doing that, we want to ensure that the people of Ontario are fully aware that their government is taking action to deal with a significant public policy concern in the province.

CONFERENCE FACILITIES

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question for the Chair of Management Board. Minister, across the street in the Macdonald Block there are more than 20 conference rooms available for use by your ministries. Oftentimes, those rooms sit empty. It turns out that they're empty because your government is spending millions of tax dollars on expensive hotel meeting rooms instead. Public accounts documents show that last year you spent $4.2 million on expensive hotel conference rooms. In fact, while publicly owned conference rooms sat empty, you spent $80,000 at the Sutton Place Hotel, just across the street. You also spent $800,000 at the Delta Chelsea, just a few short blocks away.

Can you explain today how it is that your government, a government that has preached restraint on so many others, has been able to find $4.2 million in the last year for conference rooms while our own conference rooms have sat empty many days?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): First of all, I think the individual questions should be addressed to individual ministers. But let's take a look at past records as well. I don't question the fact that things need to be tightened up in many areas, but let's set the record straight here. For example, this is from the public accounts, 1989—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: No, I want to just compare things, if I can. In fact, in 1989, the public accounts set the bar, so to speak. Let's just take a look at the Minister of Labour. Let's look at 1987-88 for another year. In 1987-88, the Ministry of Labour spent $35,059 at the Witness Box Restaurant and Tavern, which sets up a kind of pattern because in 1988-89, the Ministry of Labour spent $38,367 at the Witness Box Restaurant and Tavern. Of course, in the year 1986-87—once again, a Liberal government—they spent $107,192 at the Inn on the Park.

There must have been—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up. Supplementary?

Mr Duncan: In fact, Minister, your government spent four times more than any previous government in the history of this province. Your government spent four times more. In fact, it was your ex-Premier who criticized former governments, and within a few short years he quadrupled those expenditures.

Last year the Ministry of Education, while it was telling Toronto schoolchildren they had less money for their classes, spent $150,000 at the Delta Chelsea. Last year, while seniors were expected to go with one bath a week in nursing homes, the Ministry of Health spent $500,000 on expensive conference rooms. Double-cohort kids are being packed three to one into dorms, but the Ministry of Training, Colleges and Universities spent $350,000 on luxury hotel conference rooms like the White Oaks conference room. In fact, your government, which preaches restraint, spent four times more than any previous government on outside hotel conference rooms.

How can you justify those types of increases—four times what any previous government spent on the same thing? How can you justify that in the context of your rhetoric about restraint that you've imposed on so many others?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Unless the member across is totally blind, he would understand that these conference rooms are being used not simply by the government but by many organizations, as they were under your government and the NDP government. These are offered to many non-profit organizations and many good organizations that come and utilize these meeting rooms. You can't fail to walk by and see them being utilized all the time. Let's be fair about this. This practice is no different than under your government—I'm not saying it's good.

Now let's talk again about apples to apples. Here's another ministry—I guess this was the consumer ministry. They used the Sutton Place Hotel in 1988-89, for a total of $54,000, 1987-88; $47,000, 1989-90; $44,000; and the Four Seasons Hotel, $86,517. Let's deal with the consumer ministry.

I've got a huge list of these things—public accounts, clearly available.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Don't tell me how to do things. You guys have no idea yourselves

The Speaker: I'm afraid the minister's time is up. Final supplementary.

Mr Duncan: Your government spent $4 million to $1 million by the next closest government in the history of this province, four to one—your government, under your watch. Today, for instance, you have 22 conference rooms over there. Fourteen of them, 63%, were sitting empty this morning. When shelters for the homeless were overcrowded, the minister responsible said, "This isn't the Holiday Inn," and then she turned around and spent $104,000 on the Holiday Inn for various officials.

We also learn now that the Rozanski report on your flawed funding formula will be released next week. Where are they doing it? Are they doing it across the street? No. Are they doing it in the building? No. They're doing the lock-up at the Metro Toronto Convention Centre. How can you justify these kinds of expenses when your government has spent four times more—$4 million to $1 million—than any other government in the history of this province, all the while practising restraint?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: It's a curious thing that the member across is talking about. It's my understanding that this particular member worked for the Liberal Ministry of Labour under David Peterson. Let's talk about the Ministry of Labour while you were there, sir: 1986-87, $107,192, Inn on the Park; 1987-88, $35,059, Witness Box Restaurant and Tavern; 1988-89, $38,367, Witness Box Restaurant and Tavern; 1988-89, $119,489, Holiday Inn; 1989-90, $79,588, Holiday Inn.

Sir, you were at the Ministry of Labour. Come on; give me a break.

PRIVATE HEALTH CARE SERVICES

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Premier. I see from reading this week-end's newspapers that you have jumped on the private health care bandwagon. You've indicated you're going to continue with your plans for private MRIs, private CT scans, more private home care and privately built hospitals.

On Thursday, I asked your Minister of Health if he could produce one study, one shred of evidence that shows that bringing profit-takers into the health care system saves lives or saves money. He couldn't produce a study—not one study. So I ask, do you have an answer? Can you show the people of Ontario one shred of evidence that proves that adding profit-takers to the health care system will save lives or money in the health care system?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Surely the leader of the third party knows there are literally hundreds, if not thousands, of procedures that are administered by the private sector under the auspices of the public health care system in this province every day. Kidney dialysis, blood tests and all kinds of things are done by the private sector through the publicly administered, universally accessible health care system in the province of Ontario.

Anne McLellan, the federal Minister of Health, acknowledged that over the weekend. She is not suggesting, and she believes that Mr Romanow is not suggesting for one moment, that the 35% to 40% of the dollars that are private sector dollars in the health care system today be removed. If we did, the health care system not only in the province of Ontario but virtually in every province across this country would come to a grinding halt.

We on this side of the House happen to agree with the five basic principles of the Romanow report, because we are already practising them here in the province of Ontario, unlike some other jurisdictions in this country.

Mr Hampton: We're well aware that your government is trying to move more and more of the health care services into private or profit-driven clinics. That's not the issue. We can see that evidence. I'm asking you, can you produce a study for the people of Ontario, one shred of evidence, that says this saves money in the health care system or that it saves lives?

The Romanow report is very clear on cost. They say their studies show that public-private partnerships cost more. On patient care: "a comprehensive analysis of the various studies ... concluded that for-profit hospitals had a significant increase in the risk of death."

Premier, that's the evidence that the Romanow commission uncovered. Do you have any evidence whatsoever to show the people of Ontario that dragging in more profit-takers, more private clinics, is going to save any money or save lives? The Romanow commission says there isn't any. Do you have some?

Hon Mr Eves: The leader of the third party wants to talk about studies. We want to talk about actual results and what's going on in the real world out there every day, not just in the province of Ontario but across this country.

I have personally talked to Mr Romanow four times during the course of his deliberations, many times at length. He has indicated to me personally that nothing in the province of Ontario is offside with respect to the Canada Health Act or delivery of services under a universally accessible, publicly administered health care system in the province.

Indeed, in the province of Saskatchewan, where Mr Romanow was of course the NDP Premier of that province and where it is said that health care as we know it in Canada today was born, there are many private clinics operating in the same way they do here under the publicly administered, universally accessible health care system. Surely you're not suggesting that all those be closed.

Mr Hampton: What I'm suggesting is what Mr Romanow says. For example, on page 64 of his report, he says very clearly that, for example, private MRIs are totally out of whack when you look at the Canada Health Act and what's happening to patients. He's saying in his report that MRIs, CAT scans, should be brought within the public health care system and that if governments like your government want to promote private MRIs, then you should lose some of the federal funding.

Premier, you're the one who said you wanted to bring discipline to hydro by moving to the private sector. Well, you did that with Hydro One, and what did we see? Hydro ratepayers paying for yachts and Eleanor Clitheroe's expensive lifestyle. Can you tell the people of Ontario how moving to more and more private, for-profit health care is going to provide discipline, is going to save money and lives? Romanow doesn't think so.

Hon Mr Eves: First of all, the very facilities that the leader of the third party is talking about are administered under the auspices of the Canada Health Act. They are administered by OHIP, the publicly administered health care system in the province of Ontario. There are literally tens, dozens, maybe hundreds and thousands of private clinics, private diagnostic and treatment procedures such as kidney dialysis provided by the private sector under the auspices of the public health care system.

When David Peterson's government was in vogue, they introduced six MRIs into the province of Ontario. When your government, Bob Rae's government, was in vogue, you introduced six in five years as well. We have now introduced over 40, soon to be 47, MRIs in the health care system in the province of Ontario. That means more access for more people, who get quicker treatment and reduced waiting lists. There is no queue-jumping allowed. It is going to be administered under the publicly administered health care system in the province of Ontario, as it is in virtually every province across this country. Nothing is offside, according to Mr Romanow himself.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): To the Premier again: I take it the Premier still can't find the study showing that it saves money or lives.

We've been reading the details of your latest hydro legislation and we've discovered that it provides for increases to people's hydro bills through something called rate riders. We found that one rate rider will be to add to people's hydro bills the $500-million cost of implementing hydro deregulation. Why didn't you tell the hydro consumers of Ontario that just implementing hydro deregulation would add another $500 million to their hydro bills?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The Minister of Energy will be able to respond.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I listened with great interest to the leader of the third party's comments on Friday. With respect to the issue he raises, there's nothing new in the legislation. In fact, all local distribution companies and market participants had to make expenditures for new technology with respect to the market opening. That's still information technology that they require to operate in the future. They have to, in the future, before we presented Bill 10 to this Legislature, make application to the Ontario Energy Board to have those costs first assessed and then how they would be applied in the future. The legislation does nothing to intervene or change that process, beyond saying that this government has responded to the real concerns of working families and small business people to cap hydro rates until the spring of 2006.

Mr Hampton: I think I know why the Premier didn't want to answer the question. The Premier was the Minister of Finance in 1998, and nowhere in 1998 or 1999 did the Premier, as then Minister of Finance, tell the people of Ontario that just to implement hydro de-regulation was going to add $500 million in costs to the hydro bill. Premier, why didn't you tell people that? Why didn't you tell them that just to implement hydro de-regulation was going to add another $500 million to the hydro bill? Were you worried that they might then say, "Obviously, this is a bad thing. Don't do it"? Why didn't you tell them then, when you knew it was going to cost at least $500 million?

Hon Mr Baird: It's self-evident that when you moved from an old system that was racking up $38 billion in debt to the people of the province of Ontario, it would require some effort to try to turn things around.

I don't know why the leader of the third party didn't campaign, when he ran in 1990, saying, "My name is Howard Hampton and I want to raise hydro debt by $3 billion." When they presented successive budgets in this province of more than $10-billion deficits, why didn't they look at every child in this province and say, "You're going to be paying tens of billions of dollars in interest on these budgets"? The member opposite is not one to lecture anyone in the province of Ontario on fiscal accountability and responsibility.

We recognize that the old system that had racked up debts of $10,000 per household in this province was unsustainable. We recognize that it's immoral to ask a new child born this morning in the province to pay $3,000 in debt and interest with respect to hydro debt. That's why we had to change things. Our government has the courage to do that.

MINISTERS' EXPENSES

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question for the Premier. Last week, the Chair of Management Board, in referring to Bill 216 with respect to ministerial and leaders of the opposition expenses, said you had crafted expense legislation very carefully. That means it was either incompetence or intention that left Mike Harris's and Cam Jackson's expenses exempted from the bill.

Can you tell the House today why, under the ministers' and former ministers' expenses, Mike Harris's and Cam Jackson's expenses will not be subject to mandatory review by the Integrity Commissioner? And can you tell me why their expenses will not be released to the public under this proposed legislation?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, the honourable member surely knows, if anybody knows, being a member of the Liberal Party, that Mike Harris's expenses have been FOIed 12 times, and he certainly was an active participant, or his party was, with respect to some of those FOI requests. Similarly, Minister Jackson's expenses have been FOI'd and they have been there for everybody to see, as indeed have former Premier Harris's. So there is no contradiction. Those things are open and they are still FOI-able, as we go forward, under the freedom of information act. All the FOIs that are outstanding will be tabled tomorrow.

Mr Duncan: Premier, you're no doubt aware that the FOI process is expensive, slow and subject to manipulation. For instance, in the answer to my earlier question, the Chair of Management Board said that I worked for the Ministry of Labour in 1988 and 1989, which was wrong. I wasn't at Queen's Park.

Presumably you brought in the legislation to deal with that. So you have a mammoth review that's going on, not subject to review. You're making other people's expenses and staffs retroactive. Why weren't Mike Harris's and Cam Jackson's? You should amend the bill and demand that all former cabinet ministers and parliamentary assistants since 1995 release their expenses to the Integrity Commissioner. You should amend it so they'll be made public and reviewable, and if in fact they weren't allowable, they should be repaid. Why would you do that to Bob Rae, Lynn McLeod and others and not make your own ministers and parliamentary assistants subject to those provisions?

Hon Mr Eves: Who are the others he's talking about, other than Bob Rae and Lynn McLeod and of course his own leader and the current leader of the third party? I presume, silly me, that when the opposition members stand up every day in this House and ask about expenses of current and former cabinet ministers—all of which are FOI-able, all of which are obtainable under freedom of information—surely they want to hold themselves to the same standard that they expect of cabinet ministers and parliamentary assistants on this side of the House. I look forward to reviewing the expenses, not only of the leader of the opposition and the leader of the third party, but every single one of his 47 staff for the last seven years.

NORTHERN ROADS IMPROVEMENT

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. You announced on Saturday night that the government was increasing the budget for northern highways. I know your ongoing commitment to the north, I understand and respect that dedication and commitment, but I only hope the member from Sudbury hears this response today from home.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): Our government is committed to ensuring safe and efficient highways in northern Ontario. As a catalyst for growth and development and the creation of jobs, earlier this year we announced a budget of $255 million, which was a record at that time for northern Ontario highways for this fiscal year. On Saturday night, in conjunction with the Minister of Transportation, I announced an additional allocation of $11 million to cover highway improvements in the north-eastern part of the province. This additional funding is allowing for repairs to Highway 11 near Gravenhurst, Highways 652 and 668 near Cochrane, Highway 101 near Timmins, Highways 17, 535 and 144 near Sudbury and Highways 518 and 520 near Parry Sound, among others.

This past September, I also announced an additional $5 million for highway improvements in northwestern Ontario, including $3 million to cover emergency repairs in the Rainy River and Kenora districts following flooding.

This brings our highway allocation this year in northern Ontario to a record $271 million, or $1.6 billion over that since 1995.

Mr O'Toole: That's absolutely amazing—$1.6 billion. That commitment should not go unnoticed. I understand and appreciate, Minister, the ongoing commitment of you and your ministry to put the interests of the north first in your mind and in your heart. I understand also that there is funding for repairs to local roads, Carling township and the archipelago. Is this funding also part of the highway budget you just discussed with the House today?

Hon Mr Wilson: Also on Saturday night in Parry Sound we were able to announce additional funding for local roads in Archipelago and Carling townships. This money comes through the northern Ontario heritage fund and is in addition to the money provided by the Ministry of Transportation.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Wilson: I can hear that.

One hundred thousand dollars will go to help upgrade four roads at the south end of Archipelago township. The work involves repairs and resurfacing of nine kilometres on Kapiokog Lake Road, Crane Lake Road and Agaming Road.

Carling township will receive $200,000 to upgrade Snug Harbour Road and Dillon Road, two heavily travelled township roads. Normally the province wouldn't be involved in the rehabilitation of these roads, except through the heritage fund, but these are high-volume tourist roads. They help create a lot of jobs in these townships and in this northeastern part of northern Ontario. We're very proud that the northern Ontario heritage fund and our northern members, Mr Miller and Mr McDonald, we were able to participate in this decision in helping out the townships and helping the flow of tourist traffic in that area.

ANAESTHETISTS

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): My question is for the Minister of Health. Yesterday we learned that yet again your government is forcing the closure of four more operating rooms in downtown Toronto through the university network of hospitals. They're being forced to close their operating room doors because they don't have enough anaesthetists. You've known about this for over a year, and you've done nothing about it. Can you tell us today what your plan is to solve yet one more crisis in the health system?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): Let me first congratulate the honourable member for injecting herself into discussions and bargaining over pay, because that's exactly what she's done. There's a pay issue. There's a set of negotiations. We're in the midst of negotiations. Congratulations. You've fallen for it. You're now a party to the negotiations.

Mrs Pupatello: Minister, I don't think the people who are waiting even longer for cancer surgery care one bit about your smart-alecky responses in this House. What we demand to know right now is why one year ago you were made aware of the problem and didn't address it. What we think is a serious problem is that cancer surgeries are going to wait yet again. Are you telling me that after one year you still haven't managed to insert yourself into a situation and find a solution?

Hon Mr Clement: The fact of the matter is, if she paid attention to Premier Eves's IMG announcement a couple of weeks ago, she would understand that we have in fact extended the availability of physician extenders to take the pressure off anaesthesiology. We are concerned about this, and we are acting.

But the fact of the matter is that in this particular case, there is an issue about negotiations for pay. If the honourable member wants to discuss negotiations for pay on the floor of the Legislature, be my guest, but I'm not going to be a party to it.

How would you pay for it? That's what I'd like to ask you. Maybe you'll pay for it out of the $2-billion tax hike that Dalton McGuinty has promised and that he's spent six times over since this House came back into session. Maybe that's how she's going to pay for it. I for one am not going to be a party to this. I'm going to negotiate responsibly on behalf of the people of Ontario. That's what we on this side of the House were elected to do, and we're going to do it.

SITE OF EARLY PARLIAMENT

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): My question is for the Minister of Culture. We know that protecting provincial heritage is a priority of this government. In fact, I understand you recently held a round-table discussion with a broad range of your heritage stakeholders to address their priority issues and how your ministry can help to address them. At that meeting, I understand you also announced your intention to hold public consultations, commencing this month, to explore potential revisions to the Heritage Act.

Speaking of heritage issues, I understand that the city of Toronto and the province have been working in partnership to discuss possible options to acquire the site of the first Parliament for the people of Ontario. I'm wondering if you could tell this House about the historical and cultural importance of the first Parliament site.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): I'll use my hat as the Minister of Culture to answer that.

Yes, we did have a round-table discussion with many representatives from the heritage community. I was pleased to be joined by Julia Munro, my parliamentary assistant; Allan Gottlieb, the chair of the Ontario Heritage Foundation; and Jill Taylor, the chair of the Conservation Review Board. We had a wonderful discussion, but the question really dealt more with the site of the first Parliament.

The first Toronto Parliament site is one of those sites that is not only locally important and significant but certainly provincially significant and probably nationally significant as well. I give credit to the city of Toronto for taking the lead on this. We are working diligently with the city of Toronto currently. It's one of those sites that you have one opportunity in a lifetime to save. It's important to us. We are working very closely with the city of Toronto. We have a number of options on the table right now, and I'm very confident that we're going to be able to come to a good resolution as a result of this.

Ms Mushinski: Minister, I understand that there has been some concern with the December 1 deadline that the OMB imposed surrounding the issuance of a building permit for a proposed car dealership on the site that covers the first Parliament site. Artifacts and structural remains dating to the late 18th and early 19th centuries were discovered back in November 2002, and cumulative evidence from the archaeological excavations and archival research supports the conclusion that these remains are indeed from the first Parliament building of Upper Canada—Ontario.

We know that a find like this doesn't come along very often, and I can certainly understand that the Ontario Municipal Board's decision allowing the property owner to apply for a building permit from the city of Toronto planning department would bring about a great deal of concern to the heritage community.

Minister, I understand that, effective December 1, the property owner may apply for a building permit. Today being December 2, I'm wondering if you could tell this House exactly what this means for the preservation of this most important piece of our history.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: First I'd like to acknowledge some of the folks who have been working with us very closely: the director of culture, Rita Davies, from the city of Toronto; the deputy mayor, Case Ootes, has met with me on this; and I credit Councillor Kyle Rae for some leadership in the area as well.

We're less concerned right now in terms of the drop-dead day, which is no longer such a thing, because we've been having some very positive progress in terms of negotiations with the owners. The owners have voluntarily extended the date. They know we're at the table, and they know that we have had some very fruitful discussions. I've all the confidence in the world, with the co-operation of the city of Toronto—because this is a very complex situation. There are several owners here. There's the city of Toronto at the table; there is ourselves. I've heard support from both my side of the House and the opposite side of the House for this particular initiative. Once again, I'm very confident that with a little work, and I think we're doing that right now, we'll come to a good conclusion for not only the people of the city of Toronto but the people of this province as well.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): My question is for the Premier. Your government's welfare policies are the prime focus of the inquest into Kimberley Rogers's death. Your Ministry of Community, Family and Children's Services should have standing at the inquest so that you can ask questions and learn from the mistakes.

Premier, why has the Ministry of Community, Family and Children's Services not chosen to seek standing, when it's this ministry that needs to be there the most?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr Speaker, I'm sure the minister can respond.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): My colleague across the way will know that in any matter before the courts, it's inappropriate that we speak about any particular case.

We in our ministry have made it very clear that we are willing to co-operate in any situation where information is required by the courts or by the police in any case. We have said that in the past and will continue to honour that commitment.

With regard to welfare, we have made a number of changes in the welfare system. It has been entirely transformed under our government as an employment and supports opportunity that has been referenced to me personally by at least one person as being transformed into opportunities galore.

Mr Martin: Premier, a pregnant woman died living under the stifling effects of your welfare policies. You locked her up and took away her money and her food. Since then, instead of cutting people off for three months, you now cut them off for life. You not only lock the door, you throw away the key. You shouldn't be an absentee landlord at your own hearings, Premier, just as you shouldn't have policies that lead to the loss of life.

Will you raise social assistance rates to cover the minimum costs of living? At the very least, will you end your government's inhumane lifetime ban?

Hon Mrs Elliott: My colleague must understand—surely he understands, having been in this House for some time, that it's completely inappropriate that we speak about any individual case. More to the point, there is a very serious court case underway. There are people who are going to make decisions, and it's entirely inappropriate that we would, here in this place, prejudge decisions that would be made. I think he understands that, and certainly if he doesn't, he should, having been in this place for some time.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): My question is to the Minister of the Environment. After many requests, and when questioned about lax regulations on the Safety-Kleen Clean Harbors site, you have responded that the site has a full-time on-site inspector. The site manager last week in fact said there is no on-site, full-time inspector for the largest hazardous landfill in the country. What he said was that someone shows up from time to time.

You also claim that hazardous waste imports have gone down by 31% since 1999, but what you selectively forget is that the hazardous waste imports from 1995 to 1999 have gone up by 500%. So we're still a lot higher.

My question to you is, why do you treat this site with less monitoring than non-hazardous sites, and how do you justify to the people of Ontario making Ontario the toxic waste haven for the continent of North America?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): "They show up from time to time." I appreciate that's one way of phrasing the term of inspections, but showing up from time to time we call random inspections. Why they're called "random" is because they show up without notice, by surprise, and they show up there and ensure that the inspection takes place.

I understand you want to call it a—

Hon Mr Stockwell: They just show up from time to time.

It was an idea that I think everyone buys into, the fact that you have random inspections by surprise, and that they will go about inspecting the site on a regular basis.

I can only say to the member opposite, a 31% reduction over two years is a very significant reduction in importing of the hazardous waste. We're harmonizing with the American border communities. We've reduced it by 31%. We have random inspections that weren't there before. I think that's a fairly good record.

Ms Di Cocco: We still have 469% higher importation since 1995. Second, you and the former minister said that we had a full-time inspector on that site—"full-time, on-site inspector" is what you told me.

While other jurisdictions, such as Massachusetts, have taken steps to reduce and prevent the generation of waste, Ontario is not there. While other jurisdictions have strict treatment measures and leachate catchment—not here in Ontario. While other jurisdictions have rules for liabilities—not here in Ontario. While other jurisdictions are moving forward to treatment and disposing on-site, therefore making landfills extinct—no, not here in Ontario; we want to bring more and more toxic waste into our landfills. Since 1995 Ontario has regressed 10 to 20 years from other jurisdictions in the developed world.

My question to the minister is, why do you continue to turn a blind eye to this degradation caused by this province's hazardous waste disposal practice?

Hon Mr Stockwell: I don't think that's a fair analogy of the situation at all. I honestly believe the member opposite has paraphrased this in certain ways that obviously, being in opposition, is designed to cast light on the government that we are not concerned.

The fact of the matter is that we have reduced it by 31%. We have harmonized our process with neighbouring jurisdictions. We've worked very hard to ensure there's going to be a pre-treatment process before it's dealt with.

You suggest that we import more than we export. We import 74,000 tonnes of hazardous waste; we export 76,000 tonnes of hazardous waste.

This place has been open since the 1960s. So of the last three administrations to deal with this particular problem that you've come to find in the last couple of years, the Liberals did nothing, the NDP did nothing and we're doing everything to protect the environment. You shouldn't be criticizing us. You should be having a parade in Sarnia for this government.

MEDICAL AND RELATED SCIENCES DISCOVERY DISTRICT

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I have a question for the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing responsible for rural affairs. Minister, as you know, I proudly represent the people of Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant. Many of my constituents make their living either from farming or from an agriculture-related business. Agriculture is second only to the automotive industry in Ontario, creating more than $25 billion in sales annually and employing hundreds of thousands of good people across our rich province.

Minister, given the importance of agriculture to rural Ontario, and of course all of the outstanding work that our Ministry of Agriculture and Food is doing for our farmers, can you tell this House what you're doing as minister responsible for rural affairs to help create a healthy economic climate for Ontario's agribusiness?

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I thank the honourable member from Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant for his question. His constituents are well served by this hard-working, competent MPP.

I'm proud to announce that recently Guelph became linked with Toronto in a project that will have major economic benefits for rural Ontario. This link was made possible by provincial funding of about $2.9 million through our government's OSTAR RED program to make sure that rural and small-town Ontario have the tools and resources needed to develop research into commercial products.

The Medical and Related Sciences Discovery District in Toronto, or MARS as it's known, is establishing links between business, academia, government and the agri-food business cluster in Guelph. With MARS in Toronto, this will offer its knowledge and expertise of the medical and related science fields to enable Guelph to maximize and capitalize on that to promote new technologies and commercialization of made-in-Ontario academic research.

Mr Barrett: This MARS Landing project in Guelph sounds like it's got great potential for rural Ontario. I would like the minister to expand a bit on the project and, secondly, on how it will turn some of that potential into results.

Hon Mr Coburn: This project is a powerful example of how our government is bringing the public and private sectors together to forge new working relationships, to take advantage and capitalize on new and innovative opportunities and technologies to promote strong economic growth and leadership in our communities.

Rural Ontario biotechnology sector businesses and researchers will have vastly greater access to information and commercialization opportunities under this project in a variety of communities—certainly in Toronto, Guelph, Hamilton, Ottawa. This helps develop a database that will also be able to link Ontario's scientific expertise and equipment capabilities to maximize those scientific discoveries.

The private sector certainly has put their nickel in the drum and provided about $3 million in funding for this project as well.

All of the project partners are exceptionally excited, as we are, about the future and because of the opportunities that will be made available from this research in rural and small-town Ontario and that will benefit all of us here in Ontario in the future.

AIDS TREATMENT

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): My question is to the Minister of Health. On Saturday night at an event for Black CAP, the Black Coalition for AIDS Prevention, I had the opportunity to have a conversation with Dr Stanley Read, who is a noted pediatrician at Sick Children's Hospital who works in immunodeficiency, specifically with children who are born with HIV. There are 120 patients at the Sick Children's Hospital who require three vaccines that ward off opportunistic infections that can kill them. Your ministry refuses to fund those, Mr Minister, and Sick Children's Hospital has been forced to seek out donations of these vaccines, unsuccessfully in many cases, from pharmaceutical companies. I'm wondering if you could investigate this and make a commitment to the House that if these conditions are as I presented them, if you can confirm that these facts are as I presented them, you will begin to fund them.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): Let me thank the honourable member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale for the question. Certainly I would undertake to this chamber and to him personally to review the situation.

If I can say, just by way of explanation to this chamber, sometimes the issue involved is that we do not make available certain medications if they don't have a notice of compliance from Health Canada for clinical safety reasons. So I'll be checking that aspect of it as well, and perhaps the honourable member might have some contacts up in Ottawa that might shed some light on that aspect of the issue, if in fact that is an issue. But you certainly have my undertaking that I will review the situation.

Mr Smitherman: Thank you, Mr Minister. I'm always happy to help. Let that be noted.

I want to make very clear, for the purposes of this House, that we've had very good success in this province at prenatal screening, which tries to make sure that the disease is not passed on. While we should all share in the benefits associated with that, it's clear that some kids are slipping through. Diseases, things like the flu, that might be a hardship to us for a week or two can steal and rob kids of their lives.

So to press upon you the importance of dealing with this in a timely fashion, I'm wondering if in your supplementary you might give me some sense, if those issues in Ottawa are not at play, if there are not concerns around that, what kind of time frame it would be appropriate to expect you to confirm that you'll begin funding these vaccines.

Hon Mr Clement: I certainly undertake to work with the honourable member to review the situation. I think that's about as far as I can go in all good conscience without knowing a few more of the facts.

But I would at this time like to invite the honourable member, and indeed all honourable members of this chamber, if they have any particular thoughts about our AIDS strategy—after returning from the international AIDS conference, I became aware that our AIDS strategy, while it was groundbreaking at the time, perhaps has to be in some way innovated to make sure that it is dealing with the current issues as they now stand in this particular area of medicine and clinical practice. So I invite the honourable member directly, and I invite all members of this chamber, to assist me in the innovation and the improvement of the Ontario AIDS strategy so we can continue to be a world leader in this area.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): My question is to the Minister of Labour. In many of the urban sections of this province, if you drive around or if you talk to those who are in the building and construction industry, they will tell you that in spite of the downturn in the economy of late the building and construction industry has remained relatively stable and busy, which is good news because that's a large slug of the economic activity in this province.

But attached to that good news is a related issue that I believe your ministry needs to draw its attention to, and that is, if indeed there is increased activity on construction sites throughout the province of Ontario, how are you as a minister and how is your ministry dealing with the fact that that necessarily means an influx in more newly trained skilled trades to those sites? And how are you as a minister and how is your ministry dealing with making sure that those sites continue to remain safe and secure sites to work for these newly trained individuals who are now getting an earned income but a new one at that?

Interjection.

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): I thank the member for Hamilton East for cheering me on as I stood up there.

Our government is committed to enforcing occupational and health and safety legislation in all work places, including construction sites, and in Ontario our construction sites are the busiest around the province. Since 1995, Ministry of Labour construction inspections have increased dramatically. Inspections are up 25%, field visits are up 27% and, because of our inspections strategy, orders have been increased by 128%. As a result, the lost-time injury rate has decreased, from 2.06% in 1995 to 1.73% in 2001. Clearly, working with our partners and having the enforcement in place, we are making the construction industry the safest in Canada.

Mr Sampson: I understand that there's something called the Construction Safety Association of Ontario and that your ministry works closely with that association to achieve the target of making sure workplaces are safe and secure in the province of Ontario.

Perhaps when you stand on your feet next you can tell us a bit about how you do work with the Construction Safety Association of Ontario and how we, as a province, now compare, as it relates to other provinces across the country, in the category of safe work sites. Is there a way to measure that? Is there a way to measure, frankly, all your efforts in achieving a safe site? Are we above or below a standard? I think the people of the province of Ontario would like to know that you have some standard by which to measure your success.

Hon Mr Clark: Ontario accounts for 42% of Canada's construction workers. At the same time, the Construction Safety Association of Ontario's own statistics show that Ontario leads the rest of Canada in construction health and safety. This province's lost-time injury rate is 1.73%. That's about half the national average of 3.7%. The Construction Safety Association of Ontario's statistics also indicate that 90% of Ontario's construction firms had perfect health and safety records in the year 2000.

Because so many construction companies are doing so well, the Ministry of Labour is now able to focus on the bad performers, the ones that aren't up to snuff, so to speak. These improvements in the construction sector have been achieved, in part, through targeted enforcement by Ministry of Labour inspectors. We will continue targeted inspections on those that are not living up to what we would like to see in Ontario, and that's a safe work site.

SITE OF EARLY PARLIAMENT

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): My question is for the Chairman of Management Board. Mr Minister, on October 17, I stood here in this House and asked you a question about the first Parliament buildings. At the time you answered the question; you gave me a little bit of pause for hope. I listened today to the question from the member for Scarborough Centre, and again, there's a little bit of a pause for hope.

But my question to you is not just to have some hope. Quite frankly, my question to you is, will you direct that this site be purchased to save this province's greatest archaeological treasure? Will you act today to make sure it doesn't end up buried under a car dealership?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): If the member was listening, purchasing it is not the only option here. They're very complex negotiations. He should know, as a former mayor, as a former municipal councillor, that land transactions are a little bit complex at times. He's nodding his head in agreement here as well.

We're at the table. We have a lot of confidence that we can come to a resolution. Our team knows that I think it's very significant for us to come to a good conclusion on this, and I've given them instructions to do as much as they can to make sure this occurs. I don't know how much more I can say to you right now. We're in the middle of negotiations. The city of Toronto is co-operating 100%. We're working very closely with them.

You can see the deadline has passed. The owners have increased the deadline and let it pass because they know we're having very significant negotiations. I think that at the end of the day, all of us are going to be very happy.

Mr Prue: I'm hoping that at the end of the day we'll all be very happy too. But the people within the city of Toronto and the heritage community are getting very nervous because the deadline has come and passed. Granted, there has been an extension, and we're thankful for that.

There is a possibility here of a land swap—we've read about that in the newspapers—both the city and the province, but there have been no discussions to date.

An outright purchase, I would put to you, is a better option. Will you commit today that you will preserve our history, either by a land swap or an outright purchase, so that our culture, our history, our heritage, is preserved in this province?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: The member says that the heritage community is fairly nervous right now. I will tell him this: last week Julia Munro and myself met with representatives of most of the parts of the heritage community. Many people were there, including people from the city of Toronto. In fact, the city of Toronto was at the table when we were talking about this specific issue. Included as well were the Ontario Heritage Foundation and the Conservation Review Board, very significant players in the heritage community. Museums were there as well. We had almost every representative of almost every significant organization in the province there when I discussed this issue. When they left the room, they were quite pleased with the direction we're taking. They understand we're having very substantial negotiations. The city of Toronto was represented there as well. They're part of this discussion. So, with all due respect, I think we need to let these discussions, these negotiations, occur without taking any precipitous actions. They have my instructions already. They know I'm very interested in this. I want to have this resolved favourably for the people of Ontario. I don't know what more I can say today, but I'll tell you right now that this is important for all of us here.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): My question is addressed to the Chair of Management Board, and once again it relates to the OHIP building in Kingston. Minister, as you know, over 100 employees walked off the job, walked out of the building on Friday because they regard the building as being totally unsafe. Today, another 25 workers have joined them. The problem with respect to this building has been ongoing almost from the beginning. You and I know that we require not only air-quality testing but also that the GeoCor report, which was done for the union and was made public about two weeks ago, specifically recommends that there be soil testing done both inside and outside the building so we can find out whether or not the toxins that are alleged to be in the building come up through the foundation.

Minister, would you please instruct whoever is negotiating on your behalf to get together with the union and, in an open and completely frank process, determine which is the best engineering firm to do both of those tests, let those tests begin as quickly as possible and let the results of those tests be known to the people involved as quickly as possible? The safety of our government workers and of the people who utilize the buildings is at risk. We're asking you to get directly involved in this so this issue can be resolved once and for all, and the safety—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member's time is up.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): I agree with a lot of what the member is saying; I think his presumptions are incorrect. The preliminary report by that particular company actually had a proviso on it to indicate that it was a preliminary piece of advice and not to make too much of it; it was preliminary. Having said that, I think it's very important—the instructions I've given are to make sure the union and the many government ministries involved get together and pick a consultant that's acceptable to both. If we can't do that, I think the situation is urgent enough for us to press on to protect our employees. I've also told them that it matters not if it's air quality or soil quality; the situation has to be corrected, whatever it's found to be. So I've given them a very clear instruction. We have to make sure the environment is safe for our employees. If at the end of the day the report comes out and says, "Yes, we have to do soil testing; yes, we have to fix it," I think we have to do it. It's not that complex. We have to have a situation that's safe for our employees; that's it.

VISITORS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It's my privilege today to stand and recognize Sharon Crane and Billy McKinnon, who are visiting us from Nova Scotia, where my son lives. By the way, for those who are interested, Sharon worked for Mr Yakabuski, a former MPP for Renfrew. They're in the members' gallery. I'd like to recognize them. They're good friends of Barb Cowieson, from legislative services.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT OFFICES IN BRANT

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I have, again, a petition with over 250 signatures.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Brantford is a community of more than 89,000 people, and combined with the community of Brant county, the population exceeds 110,000; and

"Whereas the business community of Brantford and Brant county warrant and deserve the service they have come to expect from the Ministry of Finance Brantford district tax office; and

"Whereas the Mississauga regional tax office continuing business plan strategic priority number one is building a customer-centred public service that provides service when, how and where the customers want it;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We would like to propose that not only should the location and services offered by the Ministry of Finance be kept in Brantford, but they should be expanded to include a much-needed permanent location authorized to issue health cards"—in a multi-jurisdictional setting by all ministries—"by exploring the following alternatives: (1) maintain the status quo at 213 King George Road in Brantford; (2) relocate to 10 Fairview Drive, the former OPP station; (3) build a new office in a central location;

(4) investigate available vacant buildings that would be suitable.”

I sign my name to this petition and encourage the Minister of Finance to look at these options.

NATUROPATHIC MEDICINE

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): I've got a petition signed by 10,000 people—that's a whole lot of people—from the Ontario Association of Naturopathic Doctors that reads as follows:

“Whereas the government of Ontario has requested two separate reports five years apart from the Health Professions Regulatory Advisory Council on the regulation of naturopathic medicine; and

“Whereas the current regulation under the Drugless Practitioners Act is archaic and does not work effectively in the public interest; and

“Whereas the health and safety of the people of Ontario would be better served with improved regulation of naturopathic medicine; and

“Whereas the Premier's 21-step action plan outlines a commitment to make changes to the regulation of naturopathic medicine;

“We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows;

“Please include the practice of naturopathic medicine under the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991, by introducing a naturopathic medicine act which has the scope-of-practice statement and authorized acts consistent with the current practice of naturopathic medicine here and in other jurisdictions.

“This means an act that includes the attached scope-of-practice statement and authorized acts for naturopathic doctors in Ontario, and that includes allowing the use of ‘doctor’ title for NDs and ensures title protection for naturopathic doctor, naturopathic physician, naturopath and any other derivative thereof.”

I sign this petition in support.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): I have a petition signed by numerous individuals from the Glencoe area, and they are very concerned with regard to maintaining the only high school they have in the community. The petition reads as follows:

“Whereas the Ontario government led by the Harris-Eves Tories has severely damaged public education and created turmoil in our schools since they took office in 1995; and

“Whereas the current Toronto-based education funding formula is broken when it comes to rural schools; and

“Whereas our community secondary school in Glencoe is being threatened with closure; and

“Whereas rural schools are the heart and soul of their communities;

“Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that Education Minister Elizabeth Witmer address the funding formula in relation to rural schools and place a moratorium on rural school closures.”

PROGRAMME D'ALPHABÉTISATION ET D'INTÉGRATION COMMUNAUTAIRE

M<sup>me</sup> Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): « Attendu que les 44 personnes qui assistaient au programme d'alphabétisation et d'intégration communautaire de la Cité collégiale perdent en moyenne 2,5 jours par semaine de services directs et d'appui dans leur communauté dû à la fermeture de ce programme;

« Attendu que les agences de services du secteur de la déficience intellectuelle ne peuvent offrir de services de remplacement à ces personnes, compte tenu que leurs programmes sont déjà remplis à capacité;

« Attendu que les 44 personnes qui assistaient » à ce programme « seront maintenant insérées sur la liste d'attente à coordination des services, qui comprend déjà plus d'une trentaine de personnes francophones et que certaines d'entre elles attendent déjà depuis plus de deux ans;

« Attendu que nous considérons inacceptable de laisser les personnes ayant une déficience intellectuelle et leur famille sans ou avec trop peu de soutiens, de programmes ou de services;

« Nous, parents, familles, amis et intervenants, demandons au gouvernement Eves de collaborer afin d'assurer un financement adéquat pour la mise en oeuvre d'un modèle de services aux personnes francophones ayant une déficience intellectuelle qui répondra aux besoins, favorisera la mouvance dans le système de déficience intellectuelle, réduira la liste d'attente et reconnaîtra le droit à l'éducation pour les personnes ayant une déficience intellectuelle. »

J'y appose ma signature.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): I have a petition here that has been championed by my colleague John Gerretsen and it reads like this:

“Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care-facilities by 15%, or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

“Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month; and

“Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

“Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

“Whereas, according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors, who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

I will sign this petition and attach my name to it and give it to the wonderful Annelise to give to the desk.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr Bob Wood (London West): I have a petition signed by 25 people that asks the Ontario Legislature to bring fairness to the Ontario Disability Support Program Act, 1997, by amending it to provide regulations requiring annual cost-of-living adjustments to income support payments.

ADULT EDUCATION

Mr Joseph Cordiano (York South-Weston): I have a petition from Save the York Adult Day School, signed by many hundreds of my constituents. I'd like to read it.

"Whereas the Royal Commission on Learning reported in 1995, 'That, in order to ensure that all Ontario residents, regardless of age, have access to a secondary school diploma, publicly funded school boards be given the mandate and the funds to provide adult education programs';

"Whereas the current Conservative government drastically cut funding for adult students in 1996;

"Whereas in 1995 the Toronto District School Board had 16,662 adult education spaces;

"Whereas, due to the cuts, the Toronto District School Board has been forced to reduce adult education spaces to only 3,359 spaces available;

"Whereas the Conservative government's appointed supervisor plans to cut an additional 700 spaces with the closure of the York Adult Day School;

"Whereas adult day courses in the remaining five education centres have existing waiting lists and cannot accommodate additional adult students;

"Whereas the York Adult Day School provides members of our community the opportunity to complete their high school education, a basic requirement to succeed in the current knowledge-based economy; and

"Whereas the decision to close the York Adult Day School is short-sighted, shutting out thousands of people from the opportunity to better themselves and their families;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to instruct the Premier to restore the adult education grant, enabling the Toronto District School Board to save the York Adult Day School from closure and give the people of this community the opportunity to succeed."

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I have a petition here, signed by between 400 and 500 individuals, to the Ontario Legislature. It goes like this:

"Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion—that's with a "b"—from public education over the past seven years; and

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students; and

"Whereas district school boards around the province have had to cut needed programs and services, including library, music, physical education and special education;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors; and

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned members of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto district school boards."

I have signed my signature to this as well.

POLICE SERVICES

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas in 1956 the province of Ontario ordered the township of Atikokan to create a municipal police service because the township's population had exceeded 5,000; and

"Whereas the province of Ontario has since failed to make any provision for Atikokan to return to provincially subsidized policing when the township's population fell below 5,000 in 1980 (2001 population: 3,632); and

"Whereas since 1980 Atikokan has had to spend over $14 million on policing while the province was providing free ... or heavily subsidized ... policing to all 580 of the other small towns in Ontario; and

"Whereas this injustice has resulted in a significant municipal infrastructure deficit and an onerous burden on Atikokan ratepayers;

"We, the undersigned, call upon the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to right this injustice by negotiating a fair and equitable settlement with the representatives of the council and police services board of Atikokan."

This is signed by over 250 concerned residents of Atikokan. I affix my signature in full agreement with their concerns.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): One of the issues that has gotten lost in the shuffle as a result of the hydro debacle is the Union Gas retroactive delivery charge, but the petitions continue to come in by the hundreds and thousands. I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million;

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship;

"Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

"Therefore, we demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas; and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases."

This is very important to many people all across the province. I am very pleased to add my name to this petition.

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I have a bit of a cold today, so I'll just read:

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas; and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases."

This is signed by hundreds and hundreds of constituents from Chatham-Kent and Essex, and I too have signed my name to it.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): I have an important petition from the people of Marathon in my riding of Thunder Bay-Superior North.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the town of Marathon does not have a justice of the peace to serve our community and Heron Bay; and

"Whereas Marathon used to have two justices living here, however, they retired in 1995, and were never replaced;

"Whereas Marathon and Heron Bay residents are now forced to travel to Manitouwadge or Thunder Bay to acquire the services of a justice of the peace; this is unacceptable and unfair;

"Therefore, we want the Ontario government to appoint a justice or several justices of the peace in Marathon."

This was sent to me by Rose Marie Comeau in Marathon, who has started a great campaign. I am very grateful to her for doing that, and I'm very happy to add my name to this petition. I'll be reading it many times.

PENSION PLANS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): It's my duty to submit a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the citizens of Ontario are concerned over the implications of part XXV of Bill 198 as it affects pensioners and employees contributing to a pension plan; and

"Whereas we would like to bring this issue to the attention of John O'Toole, our member of provincial Parliament for Durham, and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows: that the Minister of Finance comprehensively review all sections of Bill 198 dealing with amendments to the Pension Benefits Act to ensure all current and former pension plan members are in no way disadvantaged. And we request that our Durham MPP, Mr John O'Toole, and all members of the Legislature not support any legislation that would reduce pension plan benefits."

It's my understanding that's the intention of our minister and our Premier. I will sign and support this petition.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

JUSTICE STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT DES LOIS DANS LE DOMAINE DE LA JUSTICE

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 28, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 213, An Act to improve access to justice by amending the Solicitors Act to permit contingency fees in certain circumstances, to modernize and reform the law as it relates to limitation periods by enacting a new Limitations Act and making related amendments to other statutes, and to make changes with respect to the governance of the public accounting profession by amending the Public Accountancy Act / Projet de loi 213, Loi visant à améliorer l'accès à la justice en modifiant la Loi sur les procureurs pour autoriser les honoraires conditionnels dans certaines circonstances, à moderniser et à réviser le droit portant sur les délais de prescription en édictant la nouvelle Loi sur la prescription des actions et en apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois, et à modifier les règles qui régissent la profession de comptable public en modifiant la Loi sur la comptabilité publique.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Further debate?

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I'm pleased to continue the debate, but I must make it very clear at the beginning that I'm sharing my time with the Attorney General of the province of Ontario.

I would like to just conclude, as I was speaking last week at the end of the sessional day, and I hadn't taken enough time to really make it clear on the record that I have the greatest respect for the difficult but necessary decisions that our Attorney General, David Young, has made. For those just tuning in, the table has just read a very comprehensive, rather succinct title for this bill, but for those viewing, I've encouraged our Attorney General to summarize the responses that he believes are being addressed in this legislation.

For those viewing, schedule A deals with changes to the contingency fee agreement, schedule B deals with the Limitations Act, harmonizing it to some extent, and schedule C makes amendments to the Public Accountancy Act. I believe that, in all cases, our Attorney General has consulted. I believe in all three pieces. It's long overdue and I firmly look forward to the comments that will be made by our Attorney General for the province of Ontario, the Honourable David Young. At this time, I will relinquish my time to the honourable minister.

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I thank the member from Durham who, today as with every other day in this Legislative Assembly, distinguishes himself. He does an exemplary job in representing the people of Durham. We are very pleased to have him here, and undoubtedly his constituents have good reason to feel the same way. He clearly understands this bill. He indicated that through his remarks, which began the other day and continued this afternoon.

I certainly am pleased to rise today to join this debate on the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002. This is indeed a very important bill. It is a bill that touches upon a number of issues that are important to the people of Ontario. It's a bill that is necessary to ensure that our justice system and various other aspects of this province continue to operate in an efficient and fair manner. A justice system that treats all citizens equally and fairly is indeed the cornerstone of any free and democratic society. Every citizen, regardless of social or economic status, is entitled to be treated with dignity, entitled to be treated with respect, and that is true at every step of the legal process. The Ontario government believes that fair and equal treatment of all citizens requires a justice system that is open and accessible to all.

The concept of accessibility is a multi-faceted one. There's no one answer; there's no panacea that is going to ensure accessibility to all. But we have come forward with the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002, and in it there are a number of initiatives that we believe will improve access to justice in this province. We have proposed important reforms that will make the law more clear, that will make the law understandable and will also ensure that the right of all to have access to the court isn't decided based upon one's financial standing in society.

I'll begin, if I may, by talking about addressing the affordability issue. Simply put, the cost of using the legal system should not act as a barrier to justice. That's why we have introduced an amendment to the Solicitors Act that is contained within the bill that we're here to debate today. If that amendment is passed, it would modernize the way legal fees are regulated, giving all Ontarians greater protection, greater flexibility and improved access to the courts across this province.

The proposed legislation would regulate the way individuals enter into contingency fees with their lawyer.

I will pause to note the member from St Paul's presence in the assembly at this point in time. I do want to say that that particular member has brought forward not one but two bills to the Legislative Assembly. As I have said to the media and I have said publicly, I do thank him for bringing this issue forward. I do thank him for the thoughtful way that he has introduced his initiatives, his proposals, to the Legislative Assembly, and for the level of dialogue that has taken place by reason on the introduction of those bills. I also look forward to hearing his comments later today with reference to our proposal that we have placed in the front of the members of this assembly. I do think that we must take a moment to acknowledge the excellent work that he has done in this regard. I thank you, sir, through the Speaker.

For those watching who may not be familiar with the terms "contingency fee" or "contingency arrangements," let me say that what they do is they tie legal fees to the outcome of a particular case. Under such arrangements, if the client wins a case, there was likely a pre-arranged fee. If the client does not win, in most instances the client does not pay. In this way, individuals would be given the option of negotiating a different financial arrangement with their lawyers at an early stage in the proceedings so that unpredictable legal fees and upfront costs wouldn't serve as a barrier to one having access to justice.

Lower- and middle-income Ontarians should not have to mortgage their families' future in order to exercise their legal rights, and this legislation is designed to ensure that they do not have to do so.

In September of this year, the Court of Appeal dealt with the issue of contingency fees in a case involving a plaintiff by the name of McIntyre. In a very thoughtful and well-reasoned decision, Associate Chief Justice O'Connor made a number of comments that are very helpful in understanding where and how contingency fees should work in this province. In his decision, toward the end, he included a paragraph. With your permission, I will quote from it.

He said, "Notwithstanding my conclusion that contingency fee agreements should no longer be absolutely prohibited at common law, I urge the government of Ontario to accept the advice that it has been given for many years to enact legislation permitting and regulating contingency fee agreements in a comprehensive and in a coordinated manner. There are obvious advantages to having a regulatory scheme that is clearly and specifically addressed in a single legislative enactment. There is no reason why Ontario, like other jurisdictions in Canada, should not enact such a scheme."

He goes on to say that his comments aren't intended to apply to family law matters, in which different factors should apply.

That was in September of this year. We listened to Justice O'Connor, began our consultation with various stakeholders and brought forward to the assembly a bill that we think addresses the very important issue that he spoke about in the McIntyre case.

We suggest that by modernizing the way legal fees are regulated and ensuring strong public protections, Ontarians would benefit from a new tool, contingency agreements, that would help them deal with the escalating costs of hiring a lawyer. In particular, the very complex cases that often involve very lengthy and costly preparation would be ones that in some instances, without contingency fees, might serve as a bar to a potential plaintiff, yet some of these cases are among the most important to bring forward to the courts of this province, not only for the individuals or organizations who happen to be directly involved in those cases, but to others across the province. One must remember that the law is an evolutionary process by which the common law adjusts to ever-changing realities of society. This further highlights the importance of affordability.

Decisions about whether to initiate a lawsuit must be made on the basis of justice and restitution, not on whether or not you can afford a lawyer. Allowing contingency fee agreements will help to ensure that such decisions are less the product of pocketbook considerations and are based to a much greater extent on the principles of justice.

Speaking of the importance of contingency fees as a means of enhancing accessibility to the justice system, Justice Cory stated a few years ago, in a case known as Coronation Insurance v. Florence, the following:

"The concept of contingency fees ... is to make court proceedings available to people who could not otherwise afford to have their legal rights determined. This is indeed a commendable goal that should be encouraged.... Legal rights are illusory and no more than a source of frustration if they cannot be recognized and enforced."

Contingency fee agreements in which clients incur costs only in the event of a successful lawsuit ensure that all Ontarians can have their legal rights recognized and enforced. As Justice Cory explained, recognition and enforcement help to ensure that rights are not illusions but are in fact real and effective protections and guarantees.

Ensuring that no one is left out of the justice system requires more than simply providing the public with new flexibility. We must also see to it that strong public protections are in place so that clients who win settlements are not burdened with what some may describe as unreasonable legal fees. To allow large portions of settlements to go to lawyers instead of to clients and victims would compromise the very principle of restitution. That's why we will consult widely before finalizing the regulatory framework that is contemplated by this legislation, and we will ensure that a fair and reasonable balance exists between the interests of lawyers and of their clients.

Contingency agreements are not new to Canada. I think as one is looking at this bill they should consider what has gone on in other provinces across this country. They should also consider what has gone on in this province. In fact, contingency fees are not new to Ontario either as they have historically been permitted in class-action lawsuits and in other non-litigious matters in this province. However, as a result of the Court of Appeal decision that I just referenced and another decision of Justice Cronk from the Court of Appeal that was rendered at roughly the same point in time, we in this province feel as though it is an appropriate time for us to come forward with a scheme that will help to regulate this area. Courts have said that contingency fees are legal. It is now our obligation to come forward and ensure there are appropriate regulations in place. If this bill passes, there will be appropriate regulations in place.

As I mentioned earlier, many of the provinces have had experiences with contingency fees. Some of them have permitted these arrangements as far back as the early 1970s. A very important ruling occurred in the McIntyre decision—we certainly are very cognizant of that—and as well by Justice Cronk in a case involving the Raphael law firm. We think that the bill we have brought forward will allow for this Legislature to appropriately respond to the public protection measures that are necessary and must be in place in order for contingency fees to operate, and operate well, within this province.

In addition, the Law Society of Upper Canada's rules of professional conduct regulate lawyers' ethical behaviour, and the law society's complaints and discipline process provides an accessible means by which those standards can be enforced. One must remember that there are a number of safeguards, checks and balances in place, some of which have been in place in the past and will continue in place, and some of which will be added to and enhanced if this legislation passes.

I appreciate there may be some concern about stories that they hear from south of the border. Indeed, contingency fees do exist in the United States. I would suggest to you that there are some very important differences between the law in this country and what we are proposing on the one side, and the experience in many states south of the border on the other side.

I would like to take a moment to explain some of the important differences between our legal system and the American system, differences that I believe will keep a lid on the settlements and will ensure the system operates well and to the benefit of the injured party and all the litigants in any particular matter.

In the United States, the concept that a losing party may expect to pay part of the legal costs of the winning party doesn't exist in most jurisdictions. Instead, parties are generally responsible for their own costs. The fact that an American plaintiff doesn't face that downside risk similar to the sort of risk that exists in Canada we believe has a significant impact upon the matter. In Canada, the general rule is that the losing party will pay the costs of the winning party. Now there are exceptions and there is discretion that can be and often is exercised on the part of the court, but the general rule remains the same.

Further, the Supreme Court of Canada, in a trilogy of decisions in the 1970s, I believe, limited the amount of court awards for non-economic loss, non-pecuniary general damages, losses such as pain and suffering and loss of amenities and reduced life expectancy. At that time, in three different cases, the Supreme Court of Canada indicated that there should be a limit upon the maximum amount that can be awarded for those losses. With the passage of time, there has been some increase to the original cap to reflect inflation and inflationary influences, but the cap remains in effect. It serves to distinguish us from the United States, where no such limit exists for non-economic losses and punitive damages often run into the millions of dollars. On the subject of punitive damages, in Canada punitive damages are rarely awarded and the awards are generally much lower than they are south of the border. The American system also makes more frequent use of juries that we do in Canada. Traditionally, juries have tended to award relatively higher damages.

These are just a few of the important differences that continue to exist between Ontario and the legal system south of the border. It is my respectful opinion that these differences will serve to limit the size and the volume of lawsuits in Ontario.

As the experiences of other provinces have shown, contingency fees do not lead to an increased number of nuisance or unmeritorious suits in Canada. The introduction of a regulated framework to protect consumers, while providing them with greater flexibility in negotiating financial arrangements with their lawyers, would greatly benefit the people of this province. These proposals that we have tabled in front of the Legislative Assembly would go a long way toward ensuring that no one is left out of the justice system simply because they cannot afford the cost of going to court.

Mr Speaker, with your permission I'll move on and chat about another important part of the legislation that we have brought forward, and that deals with limitation periods. Contingency fees reform the affordability of lawsuits. The limitation aspect of our bill serves to make the law more understandable and thus more approachable for most Ontarians. There is indeed a need to consolidate and reform the law on limitation periods in this province. Limitation periods are the time limits that exist for initiating legal proceedings in civil and family matters. It's the amount of time an injured or wronged party has from the time of the incident or whenever one starts measuring, as prescribed, until the lawsuit is started. The people and businesses of Ontario need to understand their legal rights in this area and they need to know the extent and the limits of their liability.

The current Limitations Act, the one that is the law of the province today as we debate the new proposals, is drawn from English statutes, and some of those statutes date back to the time of Shakespeare. Only a few minor amendments have been made to the current set of laws that control limitation periods in this province. Indeed, the current legislation dates back about a century. The need for reform of Ontario's limitation legislation has long been established. The need was highlighted by the report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission in 1969. At that time, they came forward and said that it was essential that government act in order to make the limitation periods more understandable and more uniform. The commission criticized the confusing mix of special limitation periods scattered throughout different statutes, and they noted that ordinary citizens ultimately suffer when they are unable to understand these laws.

The current patchwork of limitation periods not only causes confusion, it causes individuals and organizations to incur increased costs, which include insurance and additional paperwork. As one example of that, if you were to look at the Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Co, which is a group that insures lawyers, they reported that between 1989 and 2000, $80 million was paid out as a result of missed limitation periods—$80 million.

These multi-million dollar costs are caused by uncertainty about limitation periods, and indeed what they do is really hurt the economy of this province and cost Ontarians jobs. That's why the Ernie Eves government has come forward with these reforms that we believe will make our justice system more modern, more efficient, more accessible and more understandable.

We understand that one size doesn't fit all. That's why in our legislation we leave open certain special circumstances that should exist, and will exist if this legislation is passed, for victims and other vulnerable people.

The proposed changes include consolidating 69 limitation periods into one single act. The act would establish two clear and fair time limits that balance the interests of plaintiffs and defendants. These periods were established after exhaustive consultation with more than 100 organizations representing a range of interests, including consultations with the health and legal communities across the province.

Before we began drafting these proposed reforms, careful thought was given to the direction the bill should take. What should the new bill look like? How could it benefit the people of Ontario? How could it contribute to economic growth in our province?

What we did, Mr Speaker, was to establish six principles that make up the framework of these proposed reforms. With your permission, I will review those.

The first is that limitation reform should support a fair and accessible justice system. This is critical. An important focus of our government has been the modernization of the justice system to effectively serve the needs of all Ontarians, today and into the future.

The second reform we established was one that would serve to enhance public understanding of the law. As it stands, the current Limitations Act, as I've described it, is indeed a barrier to justice for many people across this province.

The third principle we established was one that suggested we need less confusion, that we need fewer limitation periods and fewer exceptions. So the number of limitation periods and the fact that they are spread across a number of statutes was identified as an issue that adds greatly to the confusion of a potential litigant.

The fourth principle was that limitation periods should reflect the circumstances associated with special types of claims. This applies particularly to claims relating to vulnerable people, whom this legislation is designed to protect.

Limitation reform should increase certainty about when liability ends. That represented the fifth important principle we established. In other words, there should be a clear, reasonable time limit after which no proceeding can or should be brought. We believe that all Ontarians should know that they are not liable indefinitely. This fosters the more efficient administration of justice.

The sixth principle is that except where there are compelling public interest considerations, the crown's interests should be treated in the same fashion as other parties'.

There was strong support for the reform of the Limitations Act and limitation periods across various statutes. That's what we heard over and over again through the consultation period.

The bill in front of the Legislative Assembly, if passed, would establish two key limitation periods. First, a basic two-year period after the damage has been discovered would exist to start a lawsuit. The basic limitation period would start from the date the person finds out, or should reasonably have found out, about the injury, loss or damage that was experienced and who contributed to it. This period would give plaintiffs adequate time to seek legal advice, consider the options they have and begin legal proceedings.

The second limitation period is an ultimate limitation period of 15 years that would commence on the date of the occurrence. This would mean that Ontarians would have 15 years to identify the loss or damage and to take legal action. This would balance the needs of the plaintiffs to have sufficient time to commence a legal proceeding with those of the defendants for certainty that after a fixed period of time further claims would be barred. Other jurisdictions have fixed or varied ultimate limitation periods ranging from 10 to 20 years. After extensive and comprehensive consultation, we were of the view that 15 years strikes the right balance.

The proposed legislation would also include certain exceptions to these deadlines—for example, to protect victims of crime and vulnerable people. No limitation period would run against a person who is a minor or is incapable of pursuing the claim because of a physical, mental or psychological condition if that person is not represented by a litigation guardian. There would be no limitation period on a claim of sexual assault if the defendant was in a position of trust or authority in relation to the victim or was someone on whom the victim was dependent financially or otherwise.

Our government believes that this makes a strong statement, encouraging those with a duty to protect vulnerable people to take all possible steps to carry out that duty. In other cases of sexual assault and cases of assault where there has been an intimate relationship between the victim and the alleged perpetrator, there would be a rebuttable presumption that the victim was incapable of commencing a civil proceeding earlier than it was in fact commenced. This recommendation would ensure that victims' claims are not unfairly barred by the general rules I spoke about a moment ago.

There would be no limitation period on environmental claims that have not been discovered. So that too would exist as another exception.

Lastly, the crown would be bound by the general limitations law. Having no limitation period would apply to any claim where the crown is trying to recover money owed to social, health or economic programs. We believe that the government is accountable for taxpayers' money. It must be able to continue to fund programs in the public interest and it must be able to collect money owed to the public purse without being barred by limitation periods. People who benefit from government funding should be held responsible for repayment, rather than further burdening the taxpayers of this great province.

Those are a few of the highlights that are contained within the legislation we tabled, known as the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002. In developing the bill, we have carefully reviewed similar statutes in other jurisdictions. In Canada over the past 16 years, at least four provincial governments have heard from law reform commissions that have examined limitation periods, and two provinces have acted upon those recommendations and have implemented comprehensive reform of their limitation law. The move to limitation reform has also occurred in jurisdictions including Ireland, western Australia, Queensland and England. All these jurisdictions have recognized the need to keep up with changing times, and we in Ontario are equally committed to maintaining clear and modern laws.

I spoke a moment ago about Mr Bryant, the member from St Paul's, and the initiatives that he has come forward with. I won't spend a considerable period of time talking about his bills. As I say, I am appreciative, as a member of this government, that Mr Bryant has come forward with these proposals. I think there are some aspects of his proposals that can and would be improved upon by the government bill that relate to where and how certain court proceedings would take place. It also relates to issues involving whether or not shares could be sold in a lawsuit. Our bill doesn't contemplate that. But I think Mr Bryant does deserve some credit and thanks for his hard work in this matter.

Our proposed legislation is quite clear when it comes to the maximum recovery arrangements that can be regulated. We're very clear that whatever the right regulation could or should be, it will be one that has a number of different options or potential results, including sliding scales or different recoveries based on different types of actions. We look forward to the consultation I mentioned earlier with stakeholders, a consultation that I am certain will result in this government striking an appropriate balance in setting a maximum recovery.

Improving access to justice also includes various other matters. We as a government have come forward to ensure that there are sufficient capital resources available in this province, because it isn't simply sufficient to have laws in place that allow for access. We must as well ensure that the bricks and mortar on which these cases are argued exists. The Ministry of the Attorney General's court operations are indeed located in more than 200 facilities across this province. Quite frankly, when we assumed office, we found that these facilities required renovation, maintenance and, in some instances, replacement. That's why since 1996 we have committed nearly $270 million to building and renovating court facilities in every corner of the province. Over the past six years, we have opened new courthouses in Brampton, Cornwall, Hamilton and Windsor. Other major capital projects are currently under development, including construction in Brockville, Chatham, Owen Sound and Pembroke. The new courthouses work for the people of Ontario, making justice services more convenient and accessible. Better utilized resources allow the justice system to operate more smoothly and more quickly, and they do a great deal to enhance public safety and to promote justice.

Capital investments like these are necessary to promote access to justice. But, as we know, bricks and mortar alone are not enough. That's why we have taken action to reform the civil justice system, making it more efficient and accessible. We've acted on the recommendations of the Civil Justice Review, which proposed a number of ways to reduce delays and streamline processes to better serve Ontarians. For example, we came forward with our case management program, rule 77, and the mandatory mediation program, which is rule 24.1. They have been successfully implemented in Toronto and Ottawa, and we will be expanding those programs to Windsor this month as well. Both these initiatives have resulted in marked improvements in access to justice. These improvements have been verified by a two-year independent evaluation of the mandatory mediation program, which found mediation to have a positive impact on the speed, costs and indeed on the outcome of litigation.

Another recommendation of the Civil Justice Review, the simplified procedure under rule 76 also improves access to justice by reducing the number of pre-trial procedures in cases involving relatively small amounts. This reduces the cost to litigants and the time required to get to trial. The simplified procedure rule came into effect in 1996 as a pilot project involving cases up to $25,000. Its success encouraged our government and allowed us to come forward with rule 76, which made permanent across Ontario this procedure and also served to increase the monetary limit to $50,000 as of January of this year, 2002.

These represent concrete examples of the way this government has acted to improve access to justice in Ontario. I submit to you that this legislation, the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002, will serve to further improve access to justice. It will do so by modernizing outdated legislation and by modernizing the ways that legal fees are regulated across this province. We as a government are always looking for new and better ways to ensure that justice is available to the people of this great province. Clarifying and consolidating limitation periods and appropriately regulating contingency fees will help access to justice while protecting the public.

Unfortunately, I don't have a great deal of time remaining, but I do want to take some of my remaining time to address what is the third major component in the bill we have tabled, and that deals with Ontario's public accounting system. Public accounting is the practice of preparing audited financial statements and other reports upon which investors, lenders and shareholders may rely.

On October 30, 2002, our government retained Dean Daniels, the dean of the University of Toronto law school, to hold consultations and to advise the government on how best to reform the public accounting licensing regime. At that time I came forward, along with my colleagues Minister Hudak and Minister Ecker, and announced our intention to broaden the eligibility for public accounting to include members of the three major accounting bodies—those are the chartered accountants, the certified general accountants and the certified management accountants—if, and only if, they meet prescribed high standards, and the proposed legislation does just that. It proposes a principled framework for the work of Professor Daniels. He is trying to develop and will undoubtedly succeed in developing recommendations that he will give to the government which will allow for a more modern, effective and transparent licensing regime to exist within this province, a system that is based on high, internationally recognized standards. The new competency based licensing system would protect the public and maintain investor confidence in Ontario by ensuring that only the best-qualified individuals are allowed to practise public accounting in this province.

I want to stress that while this legislation would broaden eligibility for public accounting licences, CAs, CGAs and CMAs would still have to meet the prescribed high standards that will be put in place after Dean Daniels reports to me. I look forward to receiving Professor Daniels's report. I would like to take this opportunity, if I may, to once again thank him for undertaking this very important assignment.

Taken together, the legislation that we have tabled with this honourable House will do a great deal to enhance access to justice, make the law in this province more understandable and protect the people of this province. These are important steps we're taking to ensure that the justice system works for the people of this province. I know that opening the doors of justice is a goal we share on both sides of this Legislative Assembly.

Mr Speaker, in a brief time I'll have an opportunity, together with you, sir, to hear from my colleagues across the floor how they feel about what is, in my respectful opinion, a comprehensive piece of legislation dealing with a number of very important matters. It is my hope that the members of the Liberal Party and of the New Democratic Party will take this opportunity to not only put forward their views about the proposed laws we have tabled, but that they will also come forward and announce their support for the legislation and, by their words and indeed by their actions over the next short while, ensure its passage.

One of the things we do sometimes in the Legislative Assembly is that we take positions, and all parties are guilty, for want of a better word, of this, that are contrary to those of the other side because we believe it is our job to have a different position, to offer different views and opinions. I think this bill is an opportunity for us all to get beyond what might be a partisan approach to politics and to behaviour within this Legislative Assembly and to really do the right thing, to step forward and say, "This is good government. This is what we should be doing as legislators to improve access to justice, to protect the people of this province and to make sure that the laws in this province are understandable to men and women wherever they might live in this great jurisdiction."

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I invite all members of the House to join with me in welcoming Lynn, Henry, Sebastian, Emily and Julianna Miller. They're the family of Victoria Miller, who is the greatest page from Toronto Centre-Rosedale.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Questions or comments?

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): While I will have 40 minutes to follow up and end the leadoff for the official opposition, I just want to say to the Attorney General that I listened closely to his speech and appreciate very much his words of acknowledgement. This isn't the only time it has happened, but when the health minister acknowledged the efforts of Mr Patten on the mental health bill, I remember thinking that just made sense. I wish we could all give credit where credit is due here more often. But I really appreciate it from the Attorney General, and I'll just say in a nutshell that I do actually believe, as I have said before, that I was always open to improving upon whatever modest effort my private member's bill might have been. I do believe that this government bill has improved my private member's provisions on contingency fees and it has made some important decisions with respect to the concern of double-dipping, with respect to the concern of supervision by the courts.

I have 40 seconds left—I'll have 40 minutes to talk about this—but I think the important decisions were made. Many things will be covered by regulation. While ideally we always put things into a statute, in some cases it may be best for some of these matters to be dealt with in that fashion. What anybody would want for a matter like this is for there to be ample consultation, which the Attorney General has quite rightly committed to and has continued to consult with the major stakeholders. So I look forward to working with the government on that and to making any other further improvements to the bill.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): We have here but yet another omnibus bill. I listened to the minister with great intent because this is a very complex bill, and it is particularly complex to those of us in the Legislature who are not lawyers. I would caution that in a bill of such complexity, a bill that will affect so many people and affect so many jurisdictions, a bill that will affect chartered accountants and lawyers and professional people in this province who have had an opportunity over many, many years to run their own affairs, there needs to be an opportunity for some considerable debate before this bill is passed.

To date I think there has not been sufficient debate either within this Legislature, because it has just been introduced, or out in the wider community, where the impact will be very, very strongly felt. So I am suggesting that although my initial feeling is that much of what is contained in this bill is timely, much of what is contained in this bill is good and much of what is contained in this bill is important to the people of Ontario, we need to ensure that there is a full range of public hearings before this bill is actually passed into law.

It is not clear to me from listening to the minister whether or not it is the intent of this government to allow for the extensive public hearings or whether this bill will be, as so many others, rammed through the Legislature in the minimum period of time, with closure invoked.

I am just suggesting that there may be a will, as the minister has said, from all sides of this House to see this bill passed. But there is much too much left in this bill to regulation, much too much that needs to be discussed by the broader public, and I'm hoping that some of that is clarified today with the next speaker from the Liberal Party. Most especially, I'm waiting to hear Peter Kormos, as always, to entertain and enlighten me.

The Acting Speaker (Carolyn Di Cocco): Questions and comments? The member from Scarborough Centre.

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's nice to see you in the chair.

I'm pleased to join in this discussion regarding Bill 213, the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002, on behalf of my colleague the great Attorney General, as he is, and very good friend, Mr David Young. I think it's important that we do put a couple of matters on record with respect to this particular Bill 213. For example, the president of the Stormont, Dundas & Grenville Lawyers' Association, Guy Willis, is already on public record as saying, "I think it's a step in the right direction. It improves access to justice."

Another quote that I have here is, "It doesn't matter to me who gets the credit for this law, we just need it in place. It's about time that the province of Ontario joins the rest of the country in getting contingency fee regulation and hopefully this will be a good day for consumers." That's Mr Michael Bryant, MPP for St Paul's.

Also, Michael Eizenga, who is an executive member of the Advocates' Society, is quoted as saying, "It's a very positive step forward in generating access to justice for the people of Ontario."

Just very briefly, to get to the point of the public accounting component of this bill, which I know is strongly supported by the NDP caucus, I would add, "The government's actions today are yet another important step in raising accounting standards and making Ontario a great place to do business." That's from Glen Schmidt, president of CGA Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: The Attorney General.

Hon Mr Young: I appreciate the opportunity to have another brief time to speak to this important bill. I want to thank the members from St Paul's, Beaches-East York and Scarborough Centre.

Let me start with the comments made by the member from St Paul's. He is quite right that there are a number of aspects of our bill that are different from the bill he brought forward to the Legislative Assembly. He's also right that he has always been open to discussing those differences. Indeed, we've had some chats about some of those items that he talked about, euphemistically called double-dipping, the idea of selling shares and just what the cap would look like. I do want to say that he has always been open to the notion of modifying his proposals. As I said before, he brought forward some bills that allowed for a reasoned debate. We believe this is the next logical step. But I do thank him for his comments.

I thank the member from Beaches-East York as well. My colleague the Minister of Labour indicated to me that he agrees with much of what the honourable member has said, with the possible exception of the anticipation that exists in relation to Mr Kormos, the member from Niagara Centre. We may not share our interest in Mr Kormos's presentation in quite the same way. But I thank him for his comments.

For the member from Scarborough Centre, I will say to this honourable assembly that there is no member in this Legislative Assembly who feels more passionately about issues involving justice. She believes that the courts in this province are a very important part of what makes Ontario a great place, and she works tirelessly every day to protect those institutions.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Bryant: Let me first address the Limitations Act reform provisions and start by saying these changes are necessary. I think the Attorney General rightly said they are long overdue. I know the Limitations Act changes were initially introduced by that great Attorney General Ian Scott, and have been successively introduced by Attorneys General in the NDP government. I know they were introduced by Attorney General Harnick, Attorney General Flaherty and Attorney General Young, and they're here again in this bill. I said then and will say now, we need these changes for many of the reasons the Attorney General articulated; namely, we have in Ontario an almost absurd situation where there are, I think he said, over a hundred statutes and dozens of common law rules addressing the issue of limitation periods.

Many Ontarians—many consumers, if you like—might go to see their MPP because they feel they have been wronged. If they find the Legislature, their MPP or the government of Ontario cannot assist because it is a private dispute between private citizens, we often advise them to call the Law Society of Upper Canada to get some advice from the free referral service. They may decide to do some of their own homework, but at some point they've got to go to counsel to find out whether they can bring an action.

In many cases, the first thing the lawyer has to determine is whether a statute or common law bars the action, whether for some reason the plaintiff, the person suing, can't bring the action against the defendant, the person being sued, because too much time has passed. The argument is—well, there are many arguments, but the factors involved are whether the evidence is too stale and, probably as importantly or more importantly, at what point does it become mischievous to bring an action decades down the line?

Among other things, there needs to be a certain level of certainty out there among those who do transactions that after a certain date there is no longer an ability to bring an action or to be sued, both for the defendant and for the plaintiff, so there's a realization among consumers or people who feel they have been wronged that they can't sit on something for decades on end. So over the centuries, the courts have refined and developed principles of limitations on particular actions.

In Ontario, depending on the particular issue, whether it be a contract matter or something involving the building of a home, a tort or wrong by one against another, a liable action or slander, there needs to be some minimal level of certainty in terms of what the rules are. Yet an enormous amount of time is spent before the courts filling up our dockets, an enormous amount of money is being spent by consumers trying to afford a brutally unaffordable justice system and an enormous amount of time is being spent by counsel on that issue, which is not really the driving issue in a particular case; that is, can the matter be brought? Is it statute barred, is it barred by the common law, is some limitation period involved here? A lot of that time, money and court time is spent because we don't have that certainty, because the Legislature has not clarified the rules.

The courts have tried to clarify the rules as best they can, but they're all over the place. As I said, there's a consolidation of limitation periods here that permits people to have more certainty, that permits the commercial sector to have more certainty, that ensures there is more transparency and accountability in terms of whether one can bring an action. I think ultimately it will mean our courts are that much more accessible, because there isn't that first hurdle or at least that first hurdle isn't as onerous; namely, people don't have to spend a whole bunch of time and a whole bunch of money litigating the issue that, in many cases, will be resolved with this particular legislation.

There have been Court of Appeal cases, Supreme Court of Canada cases and Ontario Superior Court cases on this subject. It's battled out, and it takes months and sometimes years to get that answer. There are committees set up within the law society, the Ontario Bar Association and, I believe at one time, the Advocates' Society, and there are experts out there on this issue of limitations. I can tell you that even those people who are real experts on this issue—in other words, they get retained and make money off helping people get the answers to limitation period questions—even those people who stand to gain from the continued uncertainty nonetheless have said to me, and have said publicly, that we need more certainty because that's in the best interests of our justice system and it's in the best interests of Ontarians, thus the need for the consolidation.

There are some particular areas that require clarification. Many of those on the limitation period front are addressed in this bill, because there are some particular areas in which there are really no rules. That uncertainty, among other things, really wasn't in the interests of consumers, because the service provider was having to, in effect, hedge the uncertainty over the absence of a limitation period by passing along that cost to the consumer. In that sense, in the long run the hope here is that greater certainty will end up benefiting consumers in every way.

There is a basic limitation period set forth in the statute. We have, obviously, very specific questions we want to address—ideally in second reading debate or, if time does not permit, in third reading debate, if time permits—very particular provisions, because there's a lot here. We look forward to getting answers from the government on those and look forward to working with the government on this particular issue.

That basic limitation period is two years from the day the claim was discovered; in other words, realized. If somebody fell off the bus and injured their shoulder, they know right away there is a potential claim. There's also the issue of discoverability; in other words, are there injuries that the person didn't discover at the time of the accident, that the person determined some time later? That is addressed in the ultimate limitation period of 15 years for most claims.

The bill does not address limitations for real property. When I get around to talking about my questions and concerns that must be voiced, as the official opposition is duty bound to do, we have questions and concerns about the absence of one of the most complicated areas involved in limitation periods, and that's real property. But I understand it probably isn't in here because it's so complicated, but that's probably all the more reason why we did need a little more certainty here.

There are no limitation periods, however, Ontarians should know, with respect to undiscovered environmental claims, and that just makes sense. For undiscovered environmental claims, we ought not to have limitations in place, because of the public policy concerns and interests in ensuring that Ontarians should be able to have justice redress, no matter when those environmental concerns or claims are in fact discovered. That's important in this particular area, because often the science on environmental claims is such that it would be contrary to public policy to put any limitation period in place for those undiscovered environmental claims.

There are also, of course, no limitations being placed here on sexual assault claims, again for public policy reasons that should be self-evident. A limitation period doesn't run while a person is incapable of commencing the action because of their physical, mental or psychological condition. There is, under the law right now, a rebuttable presumption that a person is incapable of commencing the action prior to the time the action is commenced.

There's also no limitation for sexual assault where one of the assaulting parties had charge of the assaulted person or was in possession of that person's trust or authority. Again, for self-evident public policy reasons, we need to give victims of sexual assault their day in court and not limit them by way of limitation periods for the very straightforward reason that this is just far, far, far too egregious an injustice to statute-bar.

Minors, no limitation period, as addressed. Why? Well, because it is assumed that minors might not discover the particular injustice they have met until they are at an age to appreciate that. The assumption is that whatever limitations may be there ought not to be doubled as it applies to minors.

For persons incapable who are not represented by a litigation guardian, I'd say that the same principles apply, and there's no limitation period there.

In declaratory judgments, where there's no claim for relief but rather just a declaration from the courts, we need to give the courts the ability—rarely used, by the way, on the public front; used to be used quite often in the day of Attorney General Roy McMurtry. He would often bring a declaration or a reference to the Ontario

Court of Justice, as it's now called, or to the Ontario Court of Appeal, or to the Supreme Court of Canada, for that matter, and have the court pronounce upon what the law of Ontario is. There are opportunities to do that. I would urge the Attorney General to avail himself of those opportunities where they arise. But certainly neither the Attorney General nor private litigants should be statute-barred from bringing such declaratory judgments.

The enforcement of court orders: we can't have limitation periods for the enforcement of court orders, if only because victims of deadbeat dads would never receive relief, because far, far too often the perpetrators who are ignoring court orders would want to take advantage of limitation periods and statute-barred actions to enforce court orders. So we certainly can't let those deadbeat dads who are currently not paying what they ought to be paying victims of deadbeat dads hide behind a statute limitation clause.

There's also no limitation period for proceedings to recover money owing to the crown in respect of fines or taxes. I was interested to see that the crown didn't put a limitation period on its own ability to reclaim welfare overpayments and the recovery of defaulted student loans. In the interest of reciprocity, I have no doubt that the government will speak to that issue. It is for not unthinkable and quite plausible public policy reasons, I have no doubt, the crown did that. But we hope to get answers from the government on that.

I know that the people of Ontario wouldn't want the government to have the right to be dilatory in enforcing its legal interests, and along those lines, I look forward to the government addressing that particular issue, although, as I said, it may be for very good reasons that the crown is doing that. Certainly it makes sense that the crown is doing it with respect to no limitation periods for proceedings to recover money owing to the crown in respect of fines or taxes.

The same applies to no limitation period for proceedings by the crown to recover monies paid in social assistance, health or economic programs, student loans, awards, grants and contributions. I spoke to that.

"A proceeding to obtain support under the Family Law Act or to enforce a provision for support or maintenance." Well, same issue with respect to deadbeat dads here. No limitation period for proceeding under the Remedies for Organized Crime and Other Unlawful Activities Act. That is because, just as there is no limitation period or limited limitation periods on a number of crimes, similarly for organized crime, we don't want to permit organized crime to hide behind statute bars and hide behind limitation periods and to benefit from those limitation periods. So I think it makes sense that if we are going to go the route of using the civil courts to enforce orders against organized crime, there be no limitation placed on the crown's ability to do just that.

Obviously we support the increased clarity in the law in the area of limitations. The existing system is archaic and confusing, and that confusion has been allowed to exist for too long. As I said, we have some questions and are duty bound to ask them of some particular provisions, because when the bill was put on my desk it was about yay high because there are so many provisions that are involved.

1630

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): How high?

Mr Bryant: I don't want to use jargon here; the Minister of the Environment is here. "Yay high."

The ultimate limitation period of 15 years for latent defects in buildings: currently there is no ultimate time limit for bringing such actions. Of course, homeowners who have poured their savings into a home only to discover construction defects after the fact deserve to have their concerns addressed. Many of our constituents deserve to have our questions answered in that regard. Right now, the limitation period does not start to run until the defect is discoverable, meaning, in essence, that if a defect in a home was discovered after 10 years, then under the current rules, if one brought an action at that time, it would not be statute barred.

Clearly, a number has to be set and a line has to be drawn somewhere. The ultimate limitation period of 15 years makes sense for a lot of the matters dealt with in the courts and in this particular act. Does it make sense that architects and engineers can be sued 50 years after building a home? Of course not. Interestingly, that is the current state of affairs, which doesn't make much sense at all. But whether or not that bright line at 15 years makes sense is going to be something that is the subject of debate.

The experts say the bill does not address one of the most complicated areas of limitation period law, involving real property. I recognize that this is because, in part—obviously the government will have to answer this question, but I know that many people, many experts who have spent time on this issue in the interests of the administration of justice and access to justice and in the interests of serving consumers and achieving some certainty on these particular matters, have said that it is really because this area is so complicated that we do need some certainty.

Graeme Mew, speaking for the Advocates' Society, said in a published report, the Law Times of January 8, 2001, because at the time there was a limitations bill in place that didn't address real property, "Real property will be left with the same hodgepodge of 18th and 19th century provisions inartfully melded together. Certainly I know it is one of the most difficult areas, and I could see why consolidation would be intimidating. That's probably more reason why it should be attempted." It's a fair comment. I think obviously that issue and question needs to be answered and addressed by the government. I look forward to hearing from them on this in the debate as we move forward on that particular issue. It takes nothing away from the clarity that ought to be and will be provided under this particular bill.

In any event, I was certainly very open to the contingency fee bill improvements that I've spoken of already. I hope the government is open to the same.

Breach of fiduciary duty is not excluded. Previously, there was no limitation period for actions involving a breach of fiduciary duty, including the duty of doctors to patients, directors to shareholders, and trustees to beneficiaries. This is obviously a public policy concern. The question is, is that relationship—that is, between doctors and patients and between trustees and beneficiaries—of such importance that it ought to have been excluded? That is something that we look forward to discussing as this debate goes forward.

For contractual disputes between parties in an ongoing business relationship or parties trying to preserve their relationship and resolve the matter between themselves, two years is a very short time period and may encourage increased litigation between contracting parties. Having said that, the limitation period doesn't run where parties sought a third-person arbitrator. The concern is just this: if contracting parties have 10 contracts amongst themselves and there is, after two years, a sense that there are disagreements as to the way the contract is being enforced, the concern is that, rather than negotiating those concerns and dealing with those contractual disputes on an ongoing basis as it develops between the clients, instead it will necessarily mean that they'll have to drop the writ and pursue the matter in court, even though it could be addressed through consultation, notwithstanding what I said about arbitration before.

Again, one has to draw the line somewhere. My concern would just be in terms of the extent to which this might start fights, if you like, on this particular issue, rather than avoid unnecessary litigation. In any event, it's a matter that ought to be addressed by the government as the debate moves forward.

Also, as I said, the bill provides this curious immunity to the government with respect to limitation periods not applying to the crown seeking to reclaim welfare overpayments and the recovery of defaulted student loans. I think everybody would agree that the crown ought not to be dilatory in enforcing its legal interests. I would certainly urge the government not to do that. At the same time, immunizing itself from that particular limitation period does raise that question. We wanted to raise that as we debate the bill.

Moving from limitations over to contingency fees, I would say this—and it's important for the clarity that the Attorney General spoke of, which I would echo and support. He also made reference to bricks and mortar. I can tell you, the analogy in the riding of St Paul's is this: in letters in October and November to the Premier and to the Minister of Housing, the issue of the Ontario Municipal Board's decision regarding the Minto appeal for 51- and 37-storey skyscrapers at 2195 Yonge Street was at issue. What I asked of the Premier in November—I've raised this issue before and I'll raise it again now—is to address the concerns that have been raised in those letters by the Oriole Park Association Development Committee, the Federation of North Toronto Residents' Associations and the United Residents for Improved Planning. Those residents' organizations have been actively involved in opposing the development at 2195 Yonge Street and have set forth their concerns and letters that are deserving of a response.

I just want to say how much our community owes all of these community activists and organizations a great deal of credit for what they are doing on behalf of our community, and the enormous amount of expertise and energy they are expending in the interest of trying to get some justice here. I'm totally supportive of their efforts. I think the community has realized that we have great shortcomings taking place with respect to the current mandate and jurisdiction of the Ontario Municipal Board. I would echo the concerns raised by the Oriole Park Association Development Committee, the Federation of North Toronto Residents' Associations and the United Residents for Improved Planning and say to the government that their concerns must be heeded in the interests of achieving justice on this particular issue, on addressing livable communities and that very important part of St Paul's at Yonge and Eglinton that is currently at issue. I look forward to continuing to fight with all of those organizations just listed in trying to right the wrong that has taken place here.

I would also say to those many residents of St Paul's who have called my office, met with me on this issue and with whom I have spoken on this issue that Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals have put forth alternatives. It is the job, surely, of the official opposition to put forth alternatives. I think we have put forth a very clear alternative to the status quo, which is unacceptable; namely, we'll ensure that developers play by the rules and that the Ontario Municipal Board is supposed to ensure that developers follow provincial policies in areas such as greenlands preservation, rural protection and affordable housing.

Under this government, the Ontario Municipal Board has consistently overruled democratically elected local officials, giving the go-ahead to projects that only made sense to developers. One of the real concerns here is with respect to the enormous amounts of money that have been paid in litigation fees over the past five years, which is the subject of this debate, appealing decisions of democratically elected officials. In the past five years, municipalities in the GTA spent more than $20 million fighting OMB decisions. Does that make any sense? Of course not.

So we will give the Ontario Municipal Board clear planning rules to ensure that it follows provincial policies, we will prevent developers from forcing unwanted municipal expansion and we will give municipalities more time to consider development applications. That is in the interests of due process and justice, and of livable communities, which is exactly why I'm talking about it in the context of this bill.

I know the contingency fee issue will be debated at length in this Legislature, but it also has been debated on the talk-show circuit. One of the great concerns raised on the talk-show circuit is that contingency fees are going to lead to the Americanization of our system. It is really a myth that that would happen in Ontario, firstly, because we do not have the kind of damage awards in Canada that would encourage the kind of frivolous litigation we see in the United States. That's because the Supreme Court of Canada has capped damage awards in particular areas. So lawyers aren't going to be bringing frivolous cases, because they know they will have very little chance of collecting fees for those frivolous cases. They won't take the risk that they might win the lottery, in effect, by getting a humongous judgment like you might get in the United States, because you're not going to get that lottery-like windfall in Canada.

At the same time, I should also refer to the direction given on this point by Mr Justice Dennis O'Connor in the McIntyre case in the Court of Appeal, a watershed decision that completely changed the landscape in Ontario. I'll speak to that in a moment.

In his study, Wages of Risk: The Return of Contingency Fee Legal Practice, Herbert Kritzer argues, "Many contingency fee clients probably do pay more for legal services than they might if they paid by the hour. However, many of those same clients would probably never seek redress if ... not for the insurance function provided by the contingency fee. In a sense, clients pay a premium for eased access to the civil justice system. Furthermore, many, perhaps most, clients are able to have access precisely because of the availability of a system like the contingency fee. In a fundamental sense, there is a trade-off between access and cost, where the access issue is a combination of risk shifting from the client to the attorney and the availability of funds up front to purchase a needed service."

Well, that trade-off between access and cost is exactly why we need legislative regulation of this activity, because how much of a trade-off is it? Is it a trade-off that would permit both double-dipping, in terms of receiving a share of the contingency fee and receiving costs of the client plus a 50% award? Of course not. I think anybody who believes strongly in the integrity of our justice system would say that would be preposterous. At the same time, are you going to create a situation and regulate something to the point where you end up, in effect, prohibiting the activity and limiting access to justice? No.

So the question becomes, where do you draw the line, and how do you regulate it? I know there are some who say that ought to be done purely through the Law Society of Upper Canada and through law society regulations.

I understand and I appreciate that view, but I believe, on the contrary, that we need something in the laws of Ontario that will permit consumers to have confidence in a contingency fee system. The importance of bolstering that confidence through legislated regulation of this activity in order to ensure that we do hit that right balance is a necessity. It is one, as I will speak to in a moment, which has been urged upon this Legislature by Mr Justice Dennis O'Connor and Mr Justice McPherson and Madam Justice Abella in their decision in McIntyre, which has received wide acclaim I think across the country.

We ought to give great credit to all the work that has been done by the joint committee to the Attorney General, struck by Attorney General Flaherty, although he ended up rejecting their recommendations. Many of those recommendations are now being heeded, and my effort, the private member's bill that I introduced in the spring, was an effort to in effect legislate the recommendations of the joint committee to the Attorney General. It might seem odd that the Attorney General critic is attempting to do that, but we now see many of those recommendations in this bill introduced by the Attorney General himself.

All those who participated in that joint committee, from the Ministry of the Attorney General, the Ontario Bar Association and the Advocates' Society, among others—the joint committee was struck at the request of the Attorney General, Mr Flaherty, in March 2000. Environics was retained to conduct a public opinion survey concerning contingency fees—very astute, I would have thought; something of interest to some. The survey found that 46% of respondents said a lawyer's fee had a major impact on their decision to hire a lawyer. Less than 20% said it had little or no impact. The support for contingency fees was quite overwhelming.

I should also, and I'd be remiss if I did not, credit Professor Trebilcock, who was on the said joint committee and who had the courage to publicly lend his support to my private member's bill for contingency fees last spring. It has since become the law of Ontario that contingency fees are legal. It is now in a government bill that we are going to regulate them. But last spring it was neither legal nor a matter that the government seemed interested in pursuing, although I do believe it's more than fair to say that there was no suggestion from Attorney General Young that in fact he was opposed to them. He always said that he's not philosophically opposed to them.

Professor Trebilcock was there front and centre (1) to explain the issue and the bill to the public, but (2) also to lend his support to something that he felt very strongly for. I am very grateful to have such an eminent scholar in support of it and standing shoulder to shoulder with me in my effort to pursue better access to justice for Ontarians, which is very much the hope and the motivation with this bill.

In addition to Professor Trebilcock, before my private member's bill went to debate and my bill did receive the unanimous support of this Legislature, the Advocates' Society provided a helpful submission which I've already read into the record.

Time has cut me off yet again, but I want to thank the Ontario Bar Association and acknowledge their efforts in this regard. They have been fighting, like the Advocates' Society, for a very long time for the legalization and regulation of contingency fees.

In the letter which the president of the Ontario Bar Association, Virginia MacLean QC, wrote on behalf of Donald Kidd, the chair of the OBA committee on contingency fees and the former chair of the Attorney General's advisory committee on contingency fees, and of the OBA executive, she said this:

"As you are aware, the OBA has since 1988 advocated for, and supported the implementation and regulation of, contingency fees in Ontario. The OBA reinforced that support by its resolution of September 1, 2000 (made in conjunction with the law society and the Advocates' Society) approving of the implementation of the recommendations in the report of the then Attorney General's advisory committee on contingency fees. Our only caveat was that there should be a further review of how access to justice could be affected in smaller cases by a capped or maximum percentage.

"Mr Kidd and I have reviewed your bill to amend the Solicitors Act and believe that it accords with the key recommendations on implementation that we have consistently favoured. We approved of your efforts to formally recognize and organize this most important access to justice tool for the Ontario public."

That caveat that was added by the president of the Ontario Bar Association, I know, will be one the Attorney General has endeavoured to address in this bill and will continue to as the matter moves forward.

Professor Vern Krishna, the treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada, also wrote on the occasion of my private member's bill on October 10, 2002, and I'm grateful for his doing that. He writes:

"As you know, the law society has for many years advocated for contingency fees for lawyers. Now that the Court of Appeal has removed the legal impediments to contingency fees, we are more intently focused on seeing appropriate regulation implemented. Our recent recommendations for contingent fee regulation, which you have noted, are an effort to bring some definition to a regulatory scheme.

"In this context, we thank you for continuing to highlight this important issue."

Also, obviously, the great jurisprudential product that is the McIntyre decision, released on September 10, 2002, is really a brilliant addition to jurisprudence of Ontario, and the work of Mr Justice Dennis O'Connor and Justices MacPherson and Abella continues. It's interesting that the Attorney General took the position in that case before the Ontario Court of Appeal, the gist of which was not that the Ministry of the Attorney General or the government of Ontario was opposed to contingency fees, and that is self-evident from this bill, but rather that it is for the Legislature and not the courts to make that determination—probably the position to have taken, particularly in the circumstances where the common law, some thought, was that contingency fees were prohibited.

This is what Mr Justice O'Connor says in his reasons: "The Attorney General's argument is not that sound public policy does not favour contingency fee agreements for all civil proceedings, nor that contingency fee agreements do not provide significant advantages in promoting access to justice. The Attorney General also does not argue that the types of abuses that underlie the negative views the courts historically took to these types of agreements cannot be managed within the existing regulatory framework. Rather, the Attorney General contends that any change in the law relating to champerty in Ontario must come from the Legislature, not the courts."

Justice O'Connor disagreed with that particular position. Nonetheless it was not one that was in any way opposed to contingency fee agreements; it was rather a matter of process. I should say to this Legislature, though, that the words of Justice Dennis O'Connor are ones that I hope are being heeded not to be heeded when he says: "While it is clearly open to the Legislature of Ontario to reform the law of champerty as it relates to contingency fee agreements, I am satisfied that it is also appropriate for the courts to address this issue as part of their function in developing the common law." That finding meant that contingency fees are legal in the province of Ontario. He certainly goes on to commend the necessity for legislated regulation of contingency fee agreements for all the reasons just discussed.

That is exactly why we are here today, to provide that kind of confidence in our justice system, protection to consumers and certainty. I think that particularly the provisions in this bill that require judicial supervision of the agreements and the enforcement of the agreements are going to ensure that if the balance is tipped in anyone's favour, it is tipped in the favour of ensuring that consumers are protected.

Mr Speaker, I am done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Questions or comments?

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): Mr Bryant says, almost with some sense of relief, "I am done." For 40 minutes he has regaled us with a thorough discussion.

Hon Mr Clark: Be positive.

Mr Kormos: I am.

Mr Bryant: Sixty.

Mr Kormos: Well, it was 20 minutes last time and 40 minutes today, virtually unscripted, off the top of his head, with the briefest of notes that he referred to, just to make sure he got Justice O'Connor on McIntyre and a couple of dates right. But my God, Mr Bryant, it's five to five and I fear we've lost our audience. I fear we've lost the audience.

Look, I simply want to explain to people that this is but my two-minute response to Mr Bryant's substantial commentary on contingency fees. I'm going to have a chance to talk, though, in just a few minutes with Mr Prue, from Beaches—

Mr Prue: East York.

Mr Kormos: East York. They keep changing the names of the ridings.

He's going to have two minutes for questions and comments, but then I've got my 40 minutes. And while I want to talk about the contingency fee aspect of the bill, I want to talk about the Limitations Act and who's getting stiffed. Yes, the government's sticking it to a few communities out there, you can rest assured.

I also want to talk about certified general accountants, CGAs, and explain how this government appears to have turned its back on chartered accountants. Far be it from me to suggest that the numerous fundraisers the government has invited the chartered accountants to have been to no avail for the chartered accountants, but it seems like the CGAs have prevailed. I'm going to talk about that. New Democrats happen to be on the side of ensuring equality for CGAs, mind you.

Ms Mushinski: I'm pleased to join in this discussion, especially as it pertains to the presentation by the member for St Paul's. It's interesting, because the member for Niagara Centre actually does raise some interesting points. You see, we have indeed heard a lot this afternoon from the member for St Paul's on Justice O'Connor and the OMB and the McIntyre decision, but all that has to do primarily with contingency fees. Yes, he has been speaking for about 60 minutes, but I don't recall—and I was sitting in the Chair on Thursday evening and listened very intently to the submissions by all members of the House who spoke. I believe it was for 20 minutes from each member. I certainly heard very strong arguments on behalf of the member for Niagara Centre with respect to public accounting. I don't think I heard any persuasive arguments whatsoever from the member for St Paul's with respect to CGAs. So it's difficult to know exactly where he stands on this issue. Does he support the public accounting component of this bill or not?

I would hope we could extract some kind of comment, I suppose, from the member for St Paul's, because it really would be interesting for us to know where the Liberals stand on something, and we happen to believe, as do the NDP, that the point on public accounting is a very good part of this bill. Where do you stand, Mr Bryant?

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): I would suggest to the members of the government that they don't get their knickers in a knot. Unless you cut off debate like you usually do, there will be some comments about the public accounting aspects of this bill. Unlike the government, we don't tell our members what to say over here. We want to hear what they and their constituents want said. Certainly, I will have the opportunity at some length to address the issues that concern the Public Accountancy Act. So don't be afraid, member from Mississauga. You're going to hear from us, and you'll hear lots from us.

As far as what Mr Bryant did speak to, and that's what questions and comments are usually about, I thought the member would have made at least some introspective comments as to what my colleague from St Paul's has discussed this afternoon. I'm not so sure she was listening so closely or she might have had some comments on what he had to say.

As for what he did have to say, I take it that in Ontario there has been some limitation to access to legal services by those who can't put a great deal of money at risk. If this legislation is passed, those of us who don't have deep pockets when it comes to legal expenses will be able to go to a lawyer and say, "Here's my problem. What are the chances of this going forward?" I expect we'll get good advice from those lawyers because their time, their effort, their money and their investment will be at risk.

If we can be sure this government won't choke off debate, we will all have ample opportunity to speak to all issues of this bill. I for one look forward to doing that.

Ms Mushinski: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent that the member for St Paul's have one hour to explain his position on CGAs.

The Acting Speaker: Agreed?

Mr Bryant: No.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Prue: I would like to commend Mr Bryant for his really hard work on this issue over a long period of time. The government did talk about private bills that he tried to introduce in the past. He seems to have a very solid foundation, at least in one section of the bill, around a couple of key issues. He spoke eloquently and passionately—well, maybe not passionately—eloquently and perhaps a little dryly to the average layperson who is not acutely involved in the law, but he did deal with issues that are of importance to all of us: the issues of contingency fees and a limitation period.

With respect to the limitation period, I share some of his concerns around the two- and 15-year limits. One seems to be overly generous and the other seems to be quite limiting to people who find themselves in legal difficulty.

I too share the opinion of the member from Scarborough Centre that much needs to be said about the public accountancy aspect. Certainly in my office that's the overwhelming concern in the hundreds of e-mails and letters that are being written, and not the part related to contingency fees and limitation periods. But we will resolve all that, I'm sure, when the government has 10 or—

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Response, the member for St Paul's.

Mr Bryant: I thank the members for Niagara Centre, Scarborough Centre, Beaches-East York and especially the member from Essex for their comments.

If I could sum up, the suggestion from the third party was that my speech was too dry and probably a little too long. The suggestion from the government member was that my speech was too short and that I should go on for another hour. According to the NDP I'm too dry. According to the government I'm too wet. I'm probably exactly where the people of Ontario are—

Mr Kormos: Damn.

Mr Bryant: Yes, I know.

It is unfortunate that the member from Scarborough Centre, in the midst of a non-partisan debate, in the midst of an effort by both the Attorney General and the Attorney General critic to put down their swords and join together shoulder to shoulder to fight for access to justice, would be critical of that effort. That is a shame. I will not be baited into engaging in a partisan debate.

I would just commend to the member the recommendations made by Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals in our democratic charter, which would provide freedom to members of provincial Parliament to speak their minds, which would provide for an ability for the people of Ontario to have a meaningful voice in their democracy, but we will have to leave that debate for democratic reform for another day. We are, rather, speaking today on this incredibly important non-partisan issue, and I won't be dragged into that partisan mudslinging that I'm often accused of on the energy file but I will not pursue on the justice file. I thank the members for their comments.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Kormos: Speaker, I want you to know that I have regard for Mr Bryant's legal analysis.

Mr Bryant: It's mutual.

Mr Kormos: Well, no. I have regard for Mr Bryant. I wouldn't think of asking him about electricity, and I wouldn't recommend anybody else listen to him on hydroelectricity either. But his position on legal matters is sound. I do want to congratulate him for having been at the vanguard here at Queen's Park, almost, on the issue of regulating contingency fees.

I make note, of course, of the fact that Howard Hampton, when he was Attorney General, introduced the concept of regulating contingency fees in the introduction of class actions. That has demonstrated itself to be manageable—not without criticism and not without concerns. So I'm grateful to Howard Hampton, the leader of the New Democratic Party, for bringing regulated contingency fees in that instance, in the instance of class actions, by way of having court-approved contingency agreements by way of class actions, back in the early 1990s.

So I appreciate Mr Bryant picking up the banner that Mr Hampton carried. I appreciate that, and Mr Hampton, I'm sure, is grateful to you too. I have no doubt that that reflects your regard for Howard and his introduction of contingency fees in the instance of class action—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Well, that's what the history is. I mean, if you want to rewrite history, I suppose you can, but let's not deny the reality.

The problem is, yes, this bill should go to committee. There are concerns about the Limitations Act. There are concerns about the provisions of the bill that deal with regulating contingency fees, and I'm going to speak to those. I know there are a whole lot of folks out there who aren't pleased with the government for opening the doors of public accountancy to trained professionals other than CAs.

I've been getting a lot of letters. Just, I suppose, as much to illustrate that I do read this mail—and that may be to the dismay and disappointment of other members in the Legislature who could say, "What in the world is he doing reading all his mail?" I was opening this mail today and there were four envelopes all addressed to me from the same firm. So I opened them up, of course. There's letter number one from envelope number one; letter two from envelope number two; letter three from envelope number three; letter four from envelope number four—all from the same firm up in Collingwood, as it is—chartered accountants, of course. All signed by different people, but the text of the letters is identical. Damn those PCs and Word programs.

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): Oh, computers—I thought you meant us.

Mr Kormos: No, that was a double entendre. I thought it was quite right—I got away with it, you'll notice.

I just want to tell people, this is not the way to lobby, OK? Because, in fact, it detracts from the case being made, because ministers get these kinds of correspondences from any number of people. Opposition members do, of course, as a matter of fact. But when you have a form letter, whether it's mimeographed—see, that dates me—and then people are asked to fill in the addressee and sign their name on the bottom, or whether it's done in this particular manner, I just put to you, and put to those folks, that it's not the most effective form of lobbying because it then becomes tedious and it implies that the individual authors of each letter, who didn't really author the letter, have put precious little thought into it.

Sure, it's part of a campaign, I understand it, but in that regard, look, folks, you've got to understand, New Democrats have always supported CGAs' entry into the realm of public accountancy, with adequate standards that have to be met by everybody. So don't write to me; we didn't introduce the bill. Our position has been clear for a long time now, and don't send letters to Queen's Park. You know, it's far more effective to send them to the constituency offices.

If you really want to make an impact on the Attorney General—you see, up here at Queen's Park he's got staff coming out of his ying-yang. Down in his constituency office, though, is where your letters and, more important, your faxes are going to have more impact, because there are only two or three staff in the constituency office—

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): But I have another suggestion.

Mr Kormos: Whoa, we're getting there, Rosie.

When they get deluged with faxes on the fax machine, then they report back to their boss—to wit, Mr Young—in a way that the bureaucracy doesn't here at Queen's Park. You see, I was indicating I read the letters. Most ministers don't read most of their correspondence. They've got little people, personnel, bureaucrats, minions, to not only read the correspondence but, just as these lobbyists have Word programs, whatever—what's the name of it?—on their machine—you cut and paste, stuff like that—and send out the same letter. Ministerial staff who are in charge of correspondence not only are the only ones who read the correspondence but they're the ones who draft the response, and the ministers in many instances don't even sign them. They go through an Addressograph, that pantograph machine.

Some ministers—I see them in here with their—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Well, some ministers get so little mail, Mr Clark, that they can sign them themselves.

Hon Mr Clark: You've wounded me now, Pete.

Mr Kormos: Look, your ministry is so inactive in terms of workplace inspection, things like that, that I understand they need something to keep you occupied. They give you the Crayola and they say, "Here you are, Minister. Sign these letters."

The fact is that most ministers don't read the mail that's sent to them, they don't read the mail that's sent in reply, because if it is vetted by a political person—it's vetted by an EA, etc—sometimes the EA will run it past the minister. That's what the late-night expense account things are all about, when EAs are running, you know, the draft response course.

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: You think I'm on to it, there, when the EAs are running the draft—anyway, look, David Young's constituency office—get a pencil or a pen and piece of paper. You want impact? You want to get David Young's attention? Get a pencil or a pen and a piece of paper. David Young's constituency office fax number: 416-733-7709. David Young's fax number, constituency office—not down on Bay Street at the ministry office, right? Constituency office: 416-733-7709. That's an interesting one. David Young, fax number, constituency office: 416-733-7709. You want to get his attention? Fax to his constituency office. Fax early, fax often. And if you want to go to the top dog, if you really want to leave an impression, we've got a Premier who has a constituency office up in Orangeville. Ernie Eves's fax number—this is the fax number for Ernie Eves at his constit office, because, you see, here at Queen's Park the Premier has two offices, one here in the Legislative Building, another over at Whitney Block, which they refer to as working office, and that's where he meets with all the upscale—the bankers and the corporate bosses and the people with the cheques, that sort of stuff. They get in through the back door, thinking, "We don't want to bring them here to Queen's Park because people are going to see."

If you really want to make an impact on the Premier, Mr Eves: his constituency office. Not his Premier's office at Queen's Park, because he's got staff coming out of his ears at Queen's Park who deal with this stuff. Just slide it through the pantograph machine. Here's the secret: you know those scrolls you get signed by the Premier? Trust me, friends, the Premier doesn't sit down once a week saying, "Isabel, pour me a hot chocolate," put his feet up on the ottoman and say, "I've got to sign all of these congratulatory scrolls." It doesn't work that way. The letters from the Premier? No. The ones that really get me are the letters that say, "Dear Mr Smith," and then they take a pen and they scratch out "Smith" and write in "John." Why didn't they just dictate the letter saying,

"Dear John," "Dear Jane"? No, no. They've got to go through this phony stuff to try to make like you and me are tight, like we're going to be good buddies. The person doing the typing types "Dear Ms Pushkilowski," and when the signer goes through, scratch, "Joan." Give me a break. It doesn't impress a whole lot of folks.

Those are the numbers to remember. Premier Eves's constituency office fax number: 519-941-3246. Honourable David Young's constituency office fax number—because when that fax machine is choked up with incoming faxes, trust me, it gets staff attention. People start scurrying. Here you go, David Young's fax: 416-733-7709. Fax those letters to Mr Eves and Mr Young.

The problem is that I don't think this bill is going to get to committee. I'm not sure the bill's going to be passed. It's been suggested to me by people who have been around here longer than I have that this government may actually play the game and delay the passage of this bill to get one more fundraiser out of both the CAs and the CGAs.

Hon Mr Clark: You are such a cynic.

Mr Kormos: I want to indicate that that is not my theory. It is a colleague of mine here in the chamber who's had significantly more experience here than I have, who predicts that the game being played is this: the government will not give this bill third reading so that it can ring X number of dollars out of both the CAs—talk about a cynical game. It'll give the CAs and the CGAs another kick at the can with the frommagio

Mr Marchese: The payola.

Mr Kormos: The payola. We shall see.

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: I'm going to explain to you in just a minute.

I suspect that this won't go to committee because I just got served with two notices of motion. Can you believe it, Speaker? My heart aches to see time allocation motions served with respect to Bill 209, An Act respecting Funeral, Burials, Cremations and Related Services. That's the one that's going to open the door, create loopholes big enough to drive a Mack truck through for the big, corporate, US-based, mega-commercial funeral parlours/cemeteries; the type that are listed on the Dow Jones.

I know the families who operate the funeral homes down where I'm from in Welland, Thorold and Pelham and south St Catharines. My own family has utilized those services as loved ones have died. Regrettably, all of us have been to far too many funerals. As we get older, we go to more and more of our friends' and peers' funerals rather than their parents' funerals. But I know the folks who run these small, family-operated funeral homes. They take care of families. Some of them have been taking care of families for generations. They don't scam, they don't rip off. Sure, they have to make a profit and they know it's a tough business, but money is not the bottom line for them. They have an investment in the firm's reputation and in their community.

When you've got the big, mega, US corporate, for-profit-only, "rip 'em off, scam 'em any way you can" funeral home/cemetery operators moving in—you see, those funeral plots are not going to be made available to the small, family-run funeral homes that deliver that highly personalized service that's so sensitive to people's needs, sensitive to ethnic needs and sensitive to various religious needs. So the funeral and cemeteries bill is very contentious.

I've sent out copies of that legislation to all the funeral home operators down in Niagara Centre—Welland, Thorold, Pelham and south St Catharines. I've asked them to review the bill and make comments. But regrettably it looks like all their review and all their commentary is going to amount to diddly-squat—zip, nada, zero, not a thing—because this government's going to be ramming it through with time allocation. No committee hearings, and it could be ordered for third reading with no debate on the same day it receives second reading.

What are you guys trying to pull off? Are you afraid of public commentary? Are you afraid to let the public scrutinize this kind of legislation? Or are you just so arrogant and disdainful of the people of this province that you've not only diminished—you have; you've diminished debate here in this chamber. But you have absolutely no regard for the public interest that may be under attack in any given piece of legislation, specifically like your funeral and cemeteries act.

That wasn't the only notice of motion I got just 45 minutes ago. I got two of them. I've got another one. Yes, a time allocation motion; this one on Bill 210. We know Bill 210. That's the "You can fool some of the people some of the time, but you can't fool all the people all of the time" bill. It's the so-called hydro rebate—let's cap your hydro prices by making you, the taxpayer and electricity consumer, subsidize the private electricity marketers and producers to guarantee that they can still get paid three and four times the historical rate of the price of hydro per kilowatt hour and make huge profits. Well, the government, with this little alchemy-style legerdemain—how'd I do, Rosie?

Mr Marchese: Legerdemain.

Mr Kormos:—will try to fool them with a $75 rebate. Seventy-five bucks doesn't even begin to cover the cost of one month's increase in hydroelectricity rates for even the most modest household.

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: With all due respect, I thought we were debating the Attorney General's bill here.

The Acting Speaker: You are perfectly correct, and I'm sure the member for Niagara Centre will relate all of this.

Mr Kormos: Thank you kindly. This truly is an exceptional moment, one of those rare occasions when Mr Spina is correct. It's one of those rare occasions when he's been paying attention. I guess you've already coloured all the pages in your book. Mr Spina is one of the leading intellectual lights in this chamber, of course.

The Acting Speaker: Order. You will relate your comments to the matter before us.

Hon Mr Clark: Not to mention the fact that you're impugning someone's credibility.

Mr Kormos: Not their credibility, their intellect.

The Acting Speaker: Perhaps we shouldn't go down this path.

Mr Kormos: Now that we've gone that far down, I've got to find my way back, and the way back is going to be a circuitous and weaving route.

So, a second time allocation motion, which takes us to where we're going to be with this bill in short order, because I get yet another time allocation motion on this government's Bill 210, the hydro scam bill; second and third readings with no further debate and no committee hearings. It's sad, beyond regrettable, disgusting, disgraceful, and contemptuous of the people of this province and of this House. I tell you I look forward to the next election, when those members of the public who understand, who can feel the sting of this government's contempt for them, look forward to the opportunity to respond in kind.

This bill, I have no doubts about it, should go to committee. The Limitations Act provisions—I spoke about them the last time we addressed the bill; Mr Bryant has spoken about them for some 40 minutes in the Limitations Act part of his comments—contain some glaring exceptions. The auto insurance industry had its way once again with this government.

Let's understand why we have limitation periods. It's to create some fairness for defendants in civil actions. The argument is basically this: that 10, 15 or 20 years after the fact, I'm hard-pressed as a defendant—if I'm being sued, let's say, for some money you loaned me, Speaker, and then 15 or 20 years later you say, "Kormos, you never paid me back that 100 bucks I loaned you," and I say, "Yes, I did; you gave me a receipt," how after 15 or 20 years am I reasonably to be expected to have a copy of that receipt? It's absurd. How, after 15 or 20 years, could I reasonably be expected to be able to find my witness who was there when I gave the money back to you—Mr Marchese, perhaps, or Mr Prue? How, after 20 years, could I expect them, especially at their ages now, to have an accurate recollection of what happened 20 years prior?

Mr Marchese: And it's getting worse.

Mr Kormos: That's why we have limitation periods, so that there is a reasonable capacity on the part of the defendant—

Mr Spina: We can remember. We don't do drugs like you do.

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): That's unparliamentary.

Mr Spina: And what he said earlier about me is parliamentary?

The Acting Speaker: The member for Brampton Centre will come to order.

Mr Kormos: So the reason we have—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: It's remarkable how some people can draw more attention to themselves than really is warranted or appropriate, and at the end of the day is less than desirable.

The reason we have limitation periods is to create some fairness in the system. What I find remarkable is that the two-year limitation period as a general rule is one that creates some uniformity because lawyers and their clients have always—and many defendants who don't have counsel have always been caught in the maze of limitation periods that are all over the place. That has caused scenarios where plaintiffs, innocent victims, have been denied their right to proceed with a claim because they've missed the limitation period, which may be grossly out of sync with what is the norm. Creating a general standard is a reasonable approach.

What I find strange is how come the two-year limitation period—in other words, the plaintiff has two years in which to launch an action for most actionable causes—is only one year when they have to go after their own insurance company?

Guess who engineered that little section of the Limitations Act? It was the insurance companies, who know that if they can shorten the limitation period in actions against insurance companies, they'll reduce the number of cases in which they owe people money, the people owed their own first-party insurance money, yet because the limitation period is half of what it is for most other causes of action—but what this does is, this imports even more confusion because if you adopt a general rule of two years, most people out there are going to say, "Oh, it's two years," and then they're going to get caught in the trap because it's one year plus a month. "Oh, I'm well within two years," but not if you're going after your own insurance company that declines to pay out, as they so often do. That's how insurance companies make money, by charging the greatest amount of premiums and paying the least amount of benefits. As Emeril on TV says, "It's not rocket science," is it?

The other interesting exception in the Limitations Act is a particularly egregious one. I'm sure if my colleague Tony Martin from Sault Ste Marie has a chance to address this bill—and it's going to be tough for him to address it because the government, I'm sure, is going to impose time allocation with respect to this bill too—he will express some profound concern about it because it creates no limitation period, none whatsoever, when it's the government going after a former ODSP recipient, a former social services/welfare recipient or a student loan recipient for monies that may or may not have been paid to that person, but they can go—never mind not only within two years, not within 15 years—forever.

You know and you know and you know, if you've been paying attention to what's going on in your constituency offices, that when the minister hired that private firm to go through social services' books, we had call after call from former welfare recipients, people who, 15 years ago had been on welfare for six months, as it should be and then moved on with their lives, who say 15 years after the fact, "I've got these wackos calling me saying I owe them money. How the heck am I supposed to recall what went on 15 years ago? I'm telling you, I never received a notice at the time." In fact when we followed through, there was no suggestion that notices had been sent to those people at the time, but 15 years after the fact, 100 bucks, 200 bucks, 300 bucks, 500, 1,000.

The reason we have a Limitations Act and the reason why they should be reasonable is so that plaintiffs' interests are protected, but also so that people who can be named as defendants have their interest protected too, so that they're sued within a reasonable period of time, so that they can gather up the evidence 15 and 20 years after the fact, 30 years after the fact.

Not only has this government cut a sweet deal with the auto insurance industry, oh, once again, but they've cut an even sweeter deal for themselves. I don't think that's fair, reasonable or just. I think this bill should go to committee so that that particular section as well can be addressed.

Contingency fees: let's make one thing perfectly clear. We've had contingency fees, informal—underground, as was put to me by one observer—for years and decades. The general rule of thumb on a personal injury case, a motor vehicle accident back when we had tort—we've had some restoration of it—was if there was a settlement, 15% of the lawyer's fee came from the insurance company and 15% came out of the award, the settlement paid to the plaintiff. That's a contingency fee. It was never articulated in writing, not a contract that was—oh, I suppose enforceable.

Much reference has been made to the Court of Appeal decision, a very competent one, of McIntyre. You may well have heard this from the previous speaker, but McIntyre is about a woman whose husband dies—I hope I've got this right; if I don't, somebody is going to stand up and correct me—as a result of smoking. She wants to go after one of the big tobacco companies. She retains a law firm. That law firm is prepared to do this on a contingency fee basis; however, they want to make sure that they are contravening neither the Solicitors Act nor the law of champerty.

It was fascinating to read the McIntyre judgment in the Court of Appeal. You should read it, and I'm sure you will, before you make your comments, Mr Marchese, because of course Judge O'Connor reviews this antiquated law of champerty and maintenance. It was incorporated, as a matter of fact—interesting, fascinating, and I'll bet you dollars to doughnuts right now that other than Mr Sterling, who knows about these things, there isn't a single member of the Tories present who knows what's unique about the law of champerty and maintenance, and that is that it's not included in the RSOs. You can't find it when you look up the 1990 RSOs.

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: You didn't know that. I know you didn't. Mr Sterling did.

There is an appendix to the RSOs that deals with these antiquated but still very much alive and well statutes, because of course when the common law was effectively repealed, the law of champerty and maintenance common law—the common law wasn't repealed, but there was affirmation of a statutory law.

Anyway, Judge O'Connor goes through the law of champerty and maintenance, which took me back many years to a couple of now-hazy days in law school discussing champerty and maintenance. But at the end of the day he says, no, there's nothing illegal. Among other things, times have changed, and there isn't the sinister quality, the unsavoury quality, to contingency fees that was being contemplated by the law of champerty and maintenance.

But just as other people have referred to the judgment, I marked a couple of sections, because I'm going to tell you right now that I do not take kindly to this Attorney General and this government saying, "We are introducing contingency fees to the province of Ontario," because you're not.

Hon Mr Clark: We're not?

Mr Kormos: No, you're not. Don't be silly.

First, Mr Hampton acknowledged them in his legislation dealing with class actions, but even before that, contingency fees were legal and being practised. Look what Mr Justice O'Connor said—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: No, no. Listen to me. Jeez. You guys are never going to learn anything if you don't pay attention for just a few seconds.

Mr Justice O'Connor: "... we do know that for years lawyers have acted in what they considered to be meritorious cases for clients of modest means with the realization, if not the express agreement, that they would ... be paid in the event of success." Judge O'Connor then goes on to talk of these as "informal" arrangements.

He does go further, though. It's very clear: Judge O'Connor, in this very competent analysis of the history of the law of champerty and maintenance, and considering the contingency fee agreement that the parties to this matter—as you heard, the Attorney General of Ontario was at it, although even Judge O'Connor's references to the province of Ontario indicate that the province's lawyers really didn't contribute much to the case. But again, the history of these Attorneys General for the last seven years, especially in court, has not been remarkable. They've been more notable in terms of the number of cases they've lost. Have they won any? I appreciate—listen, I of all people understand lawyers can't win all their cases. Sometimes the facts and the evidence just aren't with them. But this government's Attorneys General I think have a batting average of zero. Is there such a thing, a batting average of zero?

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Yes, there might have been a small claims court case somewhere, Mr Clark is suggesting; you know, they got themselves a default judgment because the defendant never showed up. Those are easy ones. Thanks—a default judgment because the defendant doesn't show up in small claims court. Yes, what was that for, $87 or something, plus costs?

In any event, the Attorney General, according to Mr Justice O'Connor's judgment, doesn't appear to have been particularly helpful, but they were there.

It goes on, "I urge the government of Ontario to accept the advice that it has been given for many years to enact legislation permitting and regulating contingency fee arrangements in a comprehensive and coordinated manner. There are obvious advantages to having a regulatory scheme.... There is no reason why Ontario, like all the other jurisdictions" shouldn't have it, and he reiterates that this shouldn't apply to family matters. I do point out that the contingency fee section of this bill makes it clear it does not apply to family matters or to criminal matters. Fair enough. However, that's why criminal lawyers like to get their money up front, because if your client gets convicted and sent to jail, the likelihood of being remunerated or having that account honoured is marginal. That's just the reality of that.

What concerns us, though, is not what's in the bill but what isn't, and we appreciate that there has been a growing tendency on the part of this government to delegate more and more things to regulatory schemes. We suspect part of it is just sloppiness, lack of preparation; that part of that tendency is the urgency to whip up a bill, get it together, and produce just the barest of bones and then say, "We'll worry about it later." But what happens then? How many bills have we seen that have received third reading and royal assent but not been proclaimed? More than a few, because that's where the matters were referred to regulation and somebody's just sort of killing some time, ragging the puck, saying, "Oh, that bill, that bill. Well, mention it to me once again next week." I know the syndrome, "Yes, that phone message or the letter I've got to respond to? Mention it to me again tomorrow." I know what that means. It means I'm not particularly eager to have to get around to it, and staff people have to sort of twist my arm and follow me, bird-dog me, all day to get me to do it. I've got a feeling that's what's going on in some ministries.

We're concerned about what isn't here, and particularly concerned about the ability expressed in the bill of a lawyer to go to court to seek—because the bill talks about the proposition of a cap, maximum fee. Fair enough. We don't know what that's going to be yet. That's not so fair. Two, the bill talks about a lawyer's right to go to court to seek an increase above and beyond the cap. However, it doesn't specifically articulate the right of a client to go to court and say, "Look, I know I signed this agreement and I know the agreement was for 30%, but at the end of the day I discovered that my lawyer or law firm spent"—this was a done deal from the get-go, do you know what I'm saying, that they ended up spending—and I'm just picking numbers out; don't take me literally. But they ended up spending 10 hours on it. "So is it fair that they take $300,000 of my million-dollar judgment with really what was in effect a done deal at the get-go?"

Now, in the briefing that I got from a number of outstanding ministry staff—Mark Leach, William Bromm, John D. Gregory, John Lee, John Twohig, Sunny Kwon, Marie Irvine and Abiodun Lewis—all under the watchful eye of the minister's police officer, Mike Langlois—not that he's really a cop, but he was there to keep an eye. It was sort of like the Soviet Union, you know, during Stalinist times? He was there to make sure he could rat out on any of the bureaucrats if they said anything inappropriate—not that any of the bureaucrats would have said anything inappropriate.

In the briefing I had with them, they said—

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): Careful, Peter. You came close.

Mr Kormos: Close don't count.

A client doesn't have the express right to go to court and say, "This is ridiculous that that lawyer should get 30% of my settlement when at the end of the day they did relatively little." A client, according to the briefing I got, could still have an assessment, but what does that say or do about the contingency agreement? We've either got a regime where we have contingency agreements where you have a signature, a contract, an agreement that surely lawyers should be able to rely upon, and clients—this does not improve access to the courts, not one iota, because just as plaintiffs in the past were able to have law firms represent them and carry the cost of their case if it was a meritorious case where there was a likelihood of settlement, they'll have that right now.

The suggestion that this improves, increases or enhances access to the justice system is naïve and inaccurate. We have always had contingency fee systems for as long as I've been alive, which is more than 22 years and change. We've always had contingency fees. Let's not pretend that they aren't here, just as they were in the past.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Marchese: I'm surprised that the Tories don't want to take up their two minutes to respond. I certainly liked my friend's speech, the member from Niagara Centre. I thought it was a great speech. I was particularly fond of the fact that he was informing the public of how best to reach their local members and ministers. That was important. He took a lot of time to make sure the public knows how to reach you guys, because it's often very true that many of you don't come to the meetings when we have them, where often the Liberals and the NDP are debating amongst themselves because we have a member that's absent over there.

I want to add one piece of information to what the member from Niagara Centre has included, and that is to say, if you want to reach the ministers, write on the envelope "private and confidential." I'll tell you why. If you don't write "private and confidential," the civil servants get the letter and by the time the minister gets it, they're out of office. You've got to write "private and confidential" because no one else can touch it except the minister and/or his handlers. Usually the handlers say, "Minister, this says 'private and confidential'; I'd better give it to you." I want to add that to the list.

I want to add the matter of the limitations issue because what they have done is to help the insurance companies by reducing the limitations from two years to one. Why would they that, except for there's big grease going on there? It's the payola, it's the grana. It isn't Joe Blow from my riding, a little guy from my riding, calling in; it's the insurance companies that send the 750 bucks, the 1,000 bucks, the couple of thousand bucks—that's what it's about.

We need to fix it. That's why we need to go to committee hearings: so we can expose the problem, so that people can be heard. They don't want hearings and they don't want the public to hear.

Hon Mr Clark: I have a hard time not laughing at your conspiracy theories. If everything you said was true, we'd be doing nothing over here on the government side. What a joke.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Clark: Now the Liberals want to join in on this. Give me a break. You're telling people that nobody signs letters and nobody reads letters. I have numerous ministers as colleagues here and we all read letters. We read letters that come from you, honourable member from Niagara. I even read your letters. I can't believe I actually read your letters, but I do read your letters and I respond to them with my own pen, not a computer-generated monitoring system. You must believe in the X-Files. You must think the X-Files are true.

All this nonsense about computers, that the minister never sees it, they never look at anything, the minister doesn't touch anything, the minister is not involved—give me a break. The last time the ministers weren't involved was with the social contract.

No one wanted to take any credit for the social contract. That's the last time the ministers of the government were not involved. That, by the way, was the last time they didn't sign letters. They didn't respond to any letters on the social contract. At that point in time, they didn't want to talk to the union leaders any more because you were elected to look after your union leader buddies, and you ignored them. You just kind of shut the doors and locked them out. That's what you did.

I can understand why you're bitter about it, but the reality is that on this side of the House, when we get correspondence, we respond to the correspondence because we want to hear from the constituents. We don't take this nonsense from you, the member from Niagara.

1750

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I am particularly pleased to hear of the brand new policy that they will respond to all correspondence. That's been a struggle for three and a half years. If that's a ministerial statement, thank you.

Interjections.

Mr Parsons: I'd like to speak to the bill, if I could, for a minute, if that would be OK. I know the member for Niagara Centre actually touched on this—

Interjections.

Mr Parsons: When you don't have anything worthwhile to say, evidently volume makes up for it.

On the bill, as it was presented—the member from Niagara Centre touched on it, though there weren't many things he didn't touch on: on the limitations portion of it there's one area he mentioned that I would like to support. It says there is "no limitation period for proceedings by the crown to recover monies paid in social assistance, health or economic programs, student loans, awards, grants...." That means the time never runs out; if the government made a mistake, for a social assistance program time never runs out.

I contest that. About a year ago the federal government indicated that a recalculation of their numbers showed that they had sent too much money to Ontario. Premier Harris at that time said that it was their mistake. "We're not giving it back, ever. If it's their mistake, we get to keep it." That's quite a different philosophy from what they put in this bill. I think it has to do with an attitude of the government that there is one standard for others and a different standard for the government. Certainly, that is not consistent with, "Ottawa made the mistake. It's our money. We're going to take it and run with it." I think a lot of people in Ontario, though they understood the implications of paying it back, still felt that the morally correct thing to do was to pay it back to Ottawa, but not this government.

The other concern I have about this bill is the limitation of 15 years on buildings. Buildings are designed to withstand such things as tornadoes and hurricanes, which may not show up in the 15 years.

Mr Prue: As I prefaced my comment the last time, I was looking forward to my colleague from Niagara Centre, as always. Even though he raises a few hackles, he is interesting and eloquent. He did make a very good point in terms of getting to your MPPs, which I think was lost. That good point is that if you send it to a minister, if you send it to the Premier, there is a whole legion of people that you have to go through first. Very often, I would suggest, it would be very difficult for this Premier, for any Premier, to handle the enormous amounts of correspondence one would get on any given issue.

My own office has received over 100 e-mails from CAs and CGAs on this very topic. We are responding to every single one of them; it's not that difficult to do so. It's not that difficult, with an e-mail, to simply put "reply." The answer, since they're form letters, will be in form responses. People have to expect, when they send a form letter, that they'll get a form response. But Mr Kormos made exactly the right point: if you want to get through, get through to the constituency offices. That is the place where MPPs, whether they are cabinet ministers or backbenchers, whether they are in the Liberal Party or in the New Democratic Party—you will hear it there.

He also made some other very good points about people on social assistance 15 or 20 years after the fact having to defend actions, having to defend how much money they were given or not given. I will tell all of you that students contact our office quite regularly who have paid off their student loans eight, 10 and 12 years ago and are suddenly being asked for money. How do you defend that? How could anyone defend it? This bill needs to be brought to be fair to everyone. The statute of limitations should apply to all.

The Acting Speaker: Response.

Mr Kormos: I've got to tell you I'm overwhelmed. I appreciate the affectionate and supportive comments that were made to my brief discourse on this bill. I am impressed that government members could set aside their partisanship and be as warm in their response to me as my own colleagues are here in the New Democratic Party caucus. It's rare for me to get praise from government members, including a cabinet minister, but the warmth of your comments inspires me. It's what gives me the strength to carry on for another day and keep up the good fight.

I want to tell the Minister of Labour that his warm comments, his compliments about the observations I made about this legislation are appreciated. Some day I hope I have the opportunity to sincerely respond in kind.

The problem is that there's a lot in this legislation: (1) incorporating of CGAs, among others, into public accountancy; (2) introduction of a regulatory scheme around contingency fees; and (3) a major revision of the Limitations Act. My concern is that not as many members as want to and as should be speaking to the bill will be allowed to because of time allocation. My concern is that this won't go to public hearings and therefore won't have the valuable input of any number of people out there who can provide constructive criticism with respect to the contingency fee regulatory regime and the Limitations Act, particularly the self-interest the government has used in giving itself no Limitations Act, the government once again being the snivelling lapdogs of the auto insurance industry and giving them everything they want, to the detriment of innocent victims.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate.

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): It's unfortunate that I only get about four minutes, so I'll try and be concise. I will, contrary to the people in the opposite benches, be talking just about the bill and nothing else.

For the people at home, I think it's important to let them know what we're talking about this afternoon because a lot of times members go away from the actual bill and talk about all sorts of other things, about their constituencies, and that's important as well. It is important that we talk about constituencies and their concerns. I think the Minister of Labour mentioned just a second ago that he directly, as all of us do directly, touches the constituents in terms of signing letters. I've seen him at many of my events where he comes in, lays it on the line and explains to the people directly.

Coming back to today's bill, Bill 213, Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002, that our honourable Attorney General David Young spoke briefly on and that many members of this House have spoken on, I'm also pleased to join in this debate today about the justice statute act.

One of the things this bill basically does is that it brings fairness and equal treatment of justice for all citizens of Ontario. It is important that the people of Ontario first of all understand the legal system, the justice system and, secondly, they should all have the right to use the system, even if one's financial means are not there. Therefore, I briefly want to address affordability.

Simply put, the cost of using the legal system should not act as a barrier to justice. I think that's very important. No matter what your level is in society, whether you have money or not, the justice system should apply equally, and it is important that everybody should be able to access that. That is why this legislation includes an amendment to the Solicitors Act. If this legislation is passed, it would modernize the way legal fees are regulated, giving all Ontarians greater protection, flexibility and improved access to the courts.

The proposed legislation would regulate the way individuals enter into contingency agreements with their lawyers. Contingency agreements style legal fees to the outcome of a case. Under such arrangements, if the client wins a case, the client pays a prearranged fee. If the client does not win the case, the client does not pay. That's pretty simple. I think that makes a lot of sense. In this way, individuals would be given the option of negotiating a different financial arrangement with their lawyers so that unpredictable legal fees and upfront costs do not serve as barriers to justice.

Middle- and lower-income Ontarians should not have to sacrifice their families' futures to exercise their legal rights. This legislation is designed to ensure that they don't. By modernizing the way legal fees are regulated and ensuring strong public protections, Ontarians would benefit from a new tool, contingency agreements, to help them deal with the escalating costs of hiring a lawyer. In particular, the very nature of complex cases often necessitates lengthy and costly preparation, so that the cost of complex cases may be prohibitive to many Ontarians. Yet these types of cases can be among the most important, not only to the individuals or organizations involved—

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lundi 2 décembre 2002

The House met at 1845.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ELECTRICITY PRICING, CONSERVATION AND SUPPLY ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR L'ÉTABLISSEMENT DU PRIX DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ, LA CONSERVATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ ET L'APPROVISIONNEMENT EN ÉLECTRICITÉ

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 28, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 210, An Act to amend various acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity / Projet de loi 210, Loi modifiant diverses lois en ce qui concerne l'établissement du prix de l'électricité, la conservation de l'électricité et l'approvisionnement en électricité et traitant d'autres questions liées à l'électricité.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Rosario Marchese): Further debate?

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I'm pleased to continue where I left off. When I was speaking to this matter the other day, I was talking about the kinds of conservation measures that need to be put in place and that this Conservative government has not only failed to put in place but in fact eliminated upon taking power in 1995-96. They eliminated them, of course, because the private hydro companies do not want to see conservation programs. They do not want to see a deliberate and thorough strategy, in terms of conservation, implemented as a matter of public policy. What they would like to see is greater consumption of hydroelectricity at a higher price. That way, they can make a profit.

I want to now turn again to what this legislation is really all about. What it's really all about is the government's desperate attempt to hide from the public the very high cost of deregulated, privatized electricity. What people will see on their hydro bill is 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour, but because there is a deregulated wholesale market, the actual price of deregulated and privatized electricity is much higher.

Let me give you an example of what's going on. The Minister of Energy and the Premier will tell people, as they tried to tell people today in question period, that the price now is 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour. This document I have is today's market, by the Independent Market Operator of our hydro system. This is the current price of hydroelectricity—the deregulated, privatized price. It is $208.97 per megawatt hour or 20.9 cents per kilowatt hour. The actual cost of privatized, deregulated electricity in the province today is almost 21 cents per kilowatt hour, but the Conservative government is going to try to tell people it's only 4.3 cents, which says to us that virtually 17 cents per kilowatt hour now has to be subsidized. It is being paid, but it's being hidden from hydro ratepayers.

How is the government doing that? They're going to do it in a number of ways. One way is that they're going to force some of these costs on to municipal hydro utilities. The bodies like Toronto Hydro, Ottawa Hydro, Hamilton Hydro, Sudbury Hydro or London Hydro etc are going to have some of this cost pushed on to them. That's why the municipal hydro utilities are very angry. They were not the instigators of hydro privatization and deregulation. They were quite happy to continue working in a not-for-profit, regulated, publicly owned hydro system. It was this government that launched everyone in the province toward the hydro privatization/deregulation disaster. But now that it's becoming increasingly apparent how incredibly expensive privatized, deregulated hydro is, this government wants to force at least some of the cost of that on to the municipal utilities and put them in a very difficult financial position. That will pay for some of this nearly 17 cents per kilowatt hour that has to be subsidized today. The government is simply going to put the rest on the hydro debt.

Speaker, I ask you and people across the province to remember that this is a government that railed and said there was a debt, and therefore they had to sell off hydro. Now, when it's apparent that privatized, deregulated hydro is going to be very expensive, that people's hydro bills could easily double in the short term but triple further on, what are they going to do? Add to the debt.

This is a repetition of Conservative government bad decisions in the past. A Conservative government decided to build the Darlington nuclear station, telling people, "It'll only cost $4 billion." Then the final price tag comes in 11 years later, and it's $15 billion.

This is a government that again is trying to rent a vote, trying to buy people's votes with the people's own money. And what are they going to do? They're going to jack up Hydro's debt in an attempt to do it.

But the true cost of hydroelectricity right now, as I speak in the Legislature, is 20.9 cents per kilowatt hour. That is how pricey, how expensive, how costly, private, deregulated hydro is, and this government is now trying desperately to hide that from the public.

There's some other very interesting information in this report from the IMO, and I want to quote from some of it right now. This is the system advisory summary. First of all, the operating reserve shortfall: "An operating reserve shortfall has been forecast" for market participants. "Market participants are requested to submit new/revised offers and bids that will arrest the shortfall.... Mandatory bid/offer windows are now open." This was at about 5:30 this evening.

Then there's a system emergency advisory, which says, "The market is currently experiencing an operating reserve shortfall. Market participants are requested to submit new/revised offers and bids that will arrest the shortfall. The potential exists for the declaration of an emergency state."

Later on there's a system emergency advisory. The IMO says, "IMO is currently in an emergency operating state."

This is the government's own body, which it put in place. What is it telling us? It's telling us that the price of deregulated, privatized electricity right now, at 7 o'clock in the evening, is four times what the government is willing to admit to the public—more than four times what the government is willing to admit to the public. And it says, in terms of the sufficiency of supply, that Ontario "is currently in an emergency operating state."

What does that mean? It means that right now, tonight, we could have a blackout in Ontario. That's what it means. It means that the IMO, any minute, could be advising people that it is going to reduce the voltage in the lines because it cannot sustain the system. That's where this government's privatization and deregulation has gotten us. That's where eight years of telling people, "The private sector will look after you," has gotten us: higher prices and the government having to cover up the price from people just before an election, and still the IMO, at this time in the evening, says Ontario "is currently in an emergency operating state." There is a risk of a blackout.

Just to complete the picture of what the government is trying to hide, this Conservative government said, "Yes, Ontario's hydro system has a debt." Well, do you know what? All hydro systems have a debt. Do you know why? Because it costs billions of dollars to build these systems, to build the generating plants, the transmission facilities, the distribution facilities.

One of the ministers who was sitting at the cabinet table when they made the decision to build Darlington, one of the cabinet ministers who should hang his head in shame over the $10-billion cost overrun, dares to say something tonight.

Just to illustrate the issue of debt, I want to quote from an article from Dow Jones Business News of Friday, November 8. These are the privatized, deregulated hydro utilities in the United States: "NRG Energy Incorporated ... following months of financial triage, offered to surrender full ownership of the company to creditors in the United States through a chapter 11 bankruptcy filing, according to people familiar with the matter.

"A bankruptcy filing by the unregulated power generation subsidiary of Xcel Energy ... would be the first in what is expected to be a string of energy company bankruptcies in the coming months" in the United States.

"NRG—which owes about $10 billion to its banks, lenders and bondholders, and has missed a string of debt payments since September—presented the proposal to its lenders and bondholders earlier this week.

"NRG, Minneapolis, is one of a slew of energy firms pushed to the brink of failure by plunging power prices, the collapse of the energy trading business"—after Enron, this government would know something about Enron; it was holding meetings with Enron. In fact, the former Minister of Energy said, "Enron was a model company." Enron helped plan the so-called privatized, deregulated market in Ontario, which the government is now trying to cover up.

"NRG, Minneapolis, is one of a slew of energy firms pushed to the brink of failure by ... the collapse of the energy trading business, and questions about the industry's accounting. It is among the most beleaguered of the unregulated utility arms set up by energy companies in the wake of deregulation to sell power into the wholesale markets." Pacific Gas and Electric Corp's "unregulated arm, National Energy Group Inc, is also in restructuring talks."

Get this, Speaker. Here's the critical part: "Earlier this week, Standard and Poor's noted that about two dozen" private "power companies" in the United States "need to refinance about $90 billion in short-term debt by 2006, and that many won't be able to get new financing." This is just short-term debt and these characters are going under. "Among those identified by S&P as most at risk are Reliant Resources Inc ... Calpine Corp ... Mirant Corp ... and National Energy Group."

I thought this government said that the answer to having a hydro debt was to privatize. But when we look south of the border, all the companies that this government wanted to emulate, all the companies that it is so hungry to crawl into bed with, are going broke: US$90 billion in short-term debt. That's not even their long-term debt; that's just short-term. Ninety billion dollars US: let me see. That would be C$145 billion. But according to this government, private sector companies, private hydro providers, would get us out of debt. There's something terribly wrong with this government's story.

In the three minutes I have, let me tell what the real story was. You wanted to sell off the most fundamental part of our economy, that which underbridges everything in this province in terms of industrial and manufacturing production. You wanted to sell it off to your private corporate friends. They would make the profits, and the people of Ontario get stuck with the debt. That was your scheme. You said that it would reduce power prices. It hasn't. If anything, if you look at what's going on in the United States, this has been a disaster financially, and in states like California, Montana, Pennsylvania or Nevada, it has been a disaster for consumers.

If this government wanted to do the right thing, it would admit what California has admitted, what Montana has admitted, what Nevada has admitted: deregulation of hydro doesn't work. You should never deregulate and privatize a service which is essential to the public on a daily basis. You shouldn't privatize and deregulate hydro. You shouldn't privatize and deregulate water or water-testing. Do I need to remind you again? You shouldn't be privatizing health care. You shouldn't be moving toward the privatization of education, either.

These are essentials for the public. They are essentials on a daily basis. Turning these over to private corporations that are only interested in how much money they can make, are only interested in what profits they can make and, frankly, couldn't give a hoot about the public interest, couldn't give a hoot about whether or not people receive this necessary service, to do that, to turn it over to a private, profit-driven corporation is, frankly, against the interests of the industry of this province, against the interests of consumers in this province, against the interests of the environment and, I would say, against the interests of everything the people of this province hold dear.

You people think you can cover this up. You think you can cover it up until the next election. You think you can finesse your way through Ralph Klein. I've got to tell you, from one end of the province to the other, New Democrats are going to point out that this is nothing but a cheap and cheesy scheme to rent people's votes for the next four or five months and then, should you people be re-elected, up will go the hydro bills again, up will go the hydro rates and the people will get screwed even worse. We're not going to let you do that.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): It's always a pleasure to stand and try to make a few comments on the words said by the leader.

We have lots of concerns. I'm certainly concerned about hydro prices and about how governments of all political stripes, including the New Democratic Party, have dealt with hydro over the past 30 years.

As a government, we are trying our very best to work with what we consider to be a very important issue here in Ontario. I look at the way we've tried to support the economy with the creation of tax cuts—over 200 tax cuts in the last seven years. Of course, you voted against every one of them. You know those tax cuts have generated about $15 billion in revenue, and those revenues have created about a million jobs here in Ontario. I know you don't want to hear that. That's after these gentlemen, the NDP, have voted against every one of them. What I'm trying to say very clearly is the fact that we as a government try our very best in every decision we make to keep the economy of this province strong so that we can have the revenues to do everything we need to pay for the medical system and the education system we have, whereas this party over here left us with a deficit of $1 million an hour, and now we hear they're actually experts on hydro.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I have just a brief comment on the presentation by the member from Rainy River, a member who knows the hydro issue very well. He always speaks with passion when it comes to issues that affect the general public.

I think the government has finally come to realize that they couldn't hold on any more with respect to doing something about the high hydro rates, and they did—I don't know if what they did was too little, too late, but at least they have shown some sympathy for the seven years of inaction that have brought us to this particular situation.

At this time I think the general public out there—and when I say that, I mean the business community, the farmers, seniors, a range of people—want a little bit of a break, a little bit of a respite from this particular situation. They have been bombarded in the last few weeks—not even months; a few weeks—about the aggressive campaign that we have both sustained in this House with respect to the hydro situation. Now they have introduced this bill that deals with the pricing, if you will, the conservation and the supply of hydro. I don't know which one is more important than the others, but I think all three go hand in hand and I don't think we can obtain one without the support of the others.

The government must be seen to be doing something, and not just subtly by introducing another bill in this House. We would love to go out for public hearings and give the opportunity to those people out there to really have their say. But having gone through the last few weeks, I think we know extremely well, both on this side and the other side of the House, where the people stand with respect to the hydro issue. It's about time we did something about it.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I listened, as always, with great pleasure to the leader of the New Democratic Party. When he speaks about hydro issues, he always does so passionately and he does so with a knowledge that sometimes makes people on the other side uncomfortable. But the reality of what he had to say today is that the municipalities are starting to suffer. Start to listen to the mayors of some of the municipalities in the GTA, and they will tell you what is happening to their individual hydro companies. They will tell you that the profits they have made in the past are not going to be made again, they will tell you that the debt is going to accrue to them and not to you, and they will tell you as well that the profits that used to flow to the municipalities will no longer do so. This is of very grave concern to those municipalities which are suffering a great deal due to lack of financial control, which are suffering a great deal because there is no money and which are suffering a great deal because this government, and the federal government as well, will not give the necessary monies to handle the downloading of services that have been given to them.

I listened as well to the leader of the New Democratic Party talking about adding to the debt. My God, we know that we should not be adding to any debt. The debts are horrendous enough as they are, and they are the responsibility of all previous governments; not just the NDP government, as some of the hecklers opposite would say, but of your government in the past too, when bad decisions were made to build nuclear plants, and they were bad decisions. They were built at enormous cost overruns. The taxpayers will pay for them forever.

We cannot add to the debt and we should not add to the debt. Your pegging the price at 4.3 cents will only add to the debt on nights like this, when the electricity bills are going up to 20 cents. You have a choice of higher debt or higher taxes and you've obviously chosen the higher debt. You should be ashamed of what you are doing.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): The Chair recognizes the Minister of Labour from Stormy Creek.

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): Stormy Creek? It's Stoney Creek.

For three and a half years now I've listened with interest to the NDP, whenever they spoke ill about privatization and how, when they came in here in the last three and a half years, it was always "Private sector: bad." Yet, when you were in government, I can recall your allowing the privatization of sewer and water treatment in Hamilton. I can recall Ruth Grier cancelling water inspection schools, the schools that actually taught water inspectors across the province. They eliminated that. I remember these things vividly, but for some reason, when they're no longer in government and they're in opposition, they stop thinking rationally and pragmatically. They start thinking like the opposition and they just criticize everything.

But I will give you credit. You've been consistent on hydro since day one, consistently there with your position on hydro, travelling around in your environmentally friendly bus—I'm sure it's environmentally friendly; I have no doubt it's environmentally friendly—travelling all over the province, scaring people, telling them all summer long that the lights were going to go out and there were going to be brownouts, blackouts and the world was coming to an end. You didn't offer any solutions other than going back to the past.

Yet on this side of the House, where the Liberals are, they didn't have any solutions at all. As a matter of fact, the day we rolled out our solution of a rebate, the day we rolled out our solution of a price cap, the day we rolled out our solution of conservation and investment incentives, what did the leader of the loyal opposition say on 900 CHML? He said, "It's better to do nothing than to do what they've done." He'd rather have higher prices. He would rather have the consumers paying through the nose. That's what he wanted. He didn't have any solutions. All he wanted to do was criticize. He had nothing to offer. At least they give you consistency.

The Deputy Speaker: The leader of the third party from Kenora-Rainy River has two minutes to respond.

Mr Hampton: I want to thank all members for their comments. I want to go back to the IMO report, the Independent Electricity Market Operator's report, on today's market. I want to read just a couple of other things into the record.

"Adequacy note": this is the IMO talking about, first of all, the capacity shortfall in terms of electricity supply. The IMO says that capacity shortfalls for the hours of 5 pm, 6 pm and up to 10 pm are 322 megawatt hours. Then in another adequacy note they note an "energy shortfall of up to 391" megawatt hours in hours 6 pm until 10 pm. This should cause great alarm to people. What the IMO is essentially saying is that there is not the transmission capacity right now and there is not the generation capacity to meet demand. In other words, Ontario's hydroelectric system, as we meet here in the Legislature tonight, is, as the IMO says, operating in a state of emergency.

In some parts of the province tonight it is more than 20 below Celsius. People who have to rely upon electric heat or people who need to rely upon access to electricity in order to ensure that the natural gas system works or the oil system works are at risk tonight. That is what this government is trying to hide. I say to this government that it is still not too late. Do the right thing: cancel deregulation and privatization outright instead of trying to—

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Moving in rotation for debate, the Chair recognizes the member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale.

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): Thank you. In fact, it is a pleasure to speak on this bill, which is on electricity prices and consumer protection. We have spoken to our constituents. I'm sure your constituents called you and I'm sure every member of provincial Parliament had calls and it was important to take a decision. I stand before the House to address an issue that has been, and continues to be, on the minds of many Ontarians: the price of electricity in our province.

Over the past four months many Ontario families, farmers and small businesses have experienced significant increases in their hydro bills. I think we, all of us, as consumers have also felt the same. The government is listening. They have listened. We've always put electricity customers first, from designing our new electricity market to consumer protection to safeguarding our future electricity supply, thereby ensuring that safe, reliable power will continue to be supplied to consumers. With this in mind, the government has introduced this proposed legislation to lower hydro bills.

We have certainly heard from people. They were quite anxious, and they were waiting to see if the government was going to do the right thing. I'm pleased to report that people are happy. No matter where they stood on the spectrum of things, they're quite happy with the proposed legislation.

This proposed legislation, if passed, would lower the price that families, farmers and small businesses pay for power to 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour, effective December 1, 2002, and freeze it there until at least 2006. Many people in the opposition have sort of accused us, as they always do, that perhaps this is a smokescreen. Somebody could construe that to be so if this was a temporary, one- or two-month measure. It's not. It's a long-term, well-thought-out solution up to at least 2006, and it could go on.

Interjection.

Mr Gill: I think the member for Trinity-Spadina even agrees with that. He knows it's not a temporary solution. It says it could go on further.

Four point three cents per kilowatt hour is the price consumers were paying before May 1, 2002. In fact, depending on what day of the week or month it is, Liberals have been all over the place in their position, but I think they also accept now that 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour is the right price, and they agree with that. Now, tomorrow they might change their minds; I don't know.

We have also proposed to refund the difference between the 4.3 cents and what consumers actually paid, retroactive to May 1, 2002. Just a few minutes ago in what we call two-minute hits, the member for Beaches-East York—I was going to say Beaches-Woodbine, but I guess that has changed—was saying that because we are going to be regulating the price at 4.3 cents, municipalities may not be able to make a profit. That was quite interesting, because it may be about the only time he's said profit is good. He always thinks profit is a bad thing in Ontario. He's saying municipalities should be able to make a profit. We're saying the same thing. We're saying that if they want to, they should come forward and say, "Do you know what? We're going to run our utilities for a profit."

We've heard the concerns of some who were afraid their power would be disconnected because they couldn't pay their bills. Should this proposed legislation be passed, no one would have their power disconnected until March 31 next year, 2003, for failure to pay their hydro bills. There was another issue the other day that people thought they could get away with not paying their bill. As I understand it, they must live up to their obligations. If they have the means to pay, I certainly urge them not to go into any kind of arrears, because that means more interest charges. They're not going to be able to get away with it anyway.

Anyone disconnected after November 11 would have to be reconnected at the utility's expense, and the utility would have to pay any direct costs incurred by the consumer as a result of the disconnection.

We are putting forward these measures to protect the consumers of Ontario. Under this proposed legislation, not only the price of the power itself but the price consumers pay for delivery of electricity would not be increased beyond current levels. Many people have asked, "Why should I pay a monthly charge just for being a customer?" I suppose that's a good question. Why do fixed monthly charges for residential electricity consumers range from $5 to $25 per month?

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder, member for Trinity-Spadina, if you have your Christmas cards or something that can keep you otherwise engaged, because I'd like you to stay around. But you're testing my patience. Get somebody to get your Christmas cards or something. I'd like you to stay around.

1920

Mr Gill: I guess you're a little further away than I am. He is writing Christmas cards. He is doing that. Maybe somebody can pass him more of them. He's going to leave now, I guess. He's going to see me on television.

To answer this question, to ensure charges are reasonable, the government is ordering an independent review of how the charges on electricity bills are calculated.

Somebody said to me the other day—and this is something for the government, the utility companies and power distribution companies to think about—that perhaps there's too much information on the electricity bill. Even though the purpose of having enough information is so that the consumers understand what they're really paying for, many people have complained that maybe there's too much information.

It's like going to a garage to get your car fixed. You look at the bill and say, "Well, $20 for an oil change, $40 for tire installation, $2 each for tire disposal, $1.50 for the environmental fee to dispose of the oil." A lot of times consumers say, "I don't need to know. Just tell me what my bill is: $85, $90, $100." Sometimes, with that much of a breakdown, people say, "I don't know if I'm being burdened by all this," even though the intent is quite the opposite. The intent is that consumers should know what they're paying for.

We have listened to the people of Ontario and recognize that there's confusion regarding the format of electricity bills. In order to remedy that situation, we would create a standard province-wide electricity bill that all of us could read and understand, just like we did with school report cards. I think that's a very important point.

Just a few minutes ago, I had the pleasure of meeting people from the Ontario universities. Minister Dianne Cunningham is having some working meetings with these people. A lot of members opposite have been fear-mongering, as they have been about electricity. Even when we gave back $200 to each taxpaying consumer, they didn't like that.

In this particular meeting with the Ontario universities, naturally the question about the double cohort came up. As I've said many times before, my daughter Sonja is part of the double cohort. She's quite enthusiastic. She's not at all concerned or confused or scared about getting into university.

I was quite fortunate that I was serving as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities when this whole issue of the double cohort was going on. So I'm quite happy that directly from the university presidents just a few minutes ago, at about 6:45 pm this evening, we heard that the situation is fully under control, and each and every child who wants to go to university and is eligible to go to university will be able to go to university.

Our long-term plan will include measures such as tax incentives and tax holidays to promote conservation, encourage alternative fuels and support clean electricity production. I'll be very honest with you, Mr Speaker, as you know I always am. We at home—I think it was my fault—would always be flicking on the switch to make sure there was plenty of light in the house—the house should look lived in. But ever since we realized that resources are limited, they're scarce, and you don't want to be overusing them, I'm the first one to make sure that if electricity is not needed, then the lights are off. I'm quite happy to say that right from school-age children to parents to seniors, people are now starting to realize, as people all over the world already knew, that we must conserve and that we must look at alternate types of fuels—hydrogen fuels, battery-powered cars. I was quite pleased in the summertime to unveil, with the help of Ford Motor Co, one of their hybrid cars. With the prices going up, I think more and more of that kind of energy will be used.

Our approach is to protect Ontario's electricity consumer in the short term, while at the same time, continuing to work toward a longer-term solution that keeps prices reasonable and ensures a stable supply of electricity in Ontario. Some of the measures I've mentioned, such as sales tax rebates for consumers on certain energy-efficient appliances and solar panels, are also included in this bill.

There are a lot of things people can do without, but electricity, unfortunately, is not one of them. It has become a necessity—including businesses. To grow, businesses must have the required power. Ontarians rely on having a safe, secure and plentiful supply of electricity. Just as other necessities such as groceries aren't taxed, we don't charge provincial sales tax on electricity. We believe that the federal government shouldn't tax it, either. Ottawa must remove the GST from our hydro bills. I think that is a fair concern, a fair thing to ask from the federal government. This federal policy is gouging Ontario consumers every month. The people of Ontario have told us they resent being gouged. We will continue to pressure Ottawa to remove the GST from electricity. However, the people of Ontario need the help of the Liberal members opposite to bring sense on this issue to their federal colleagues. I have not heard much from the members opposite that they have been pressuring the federal government, which by the way, needless to say, has the surplus funds, including funds from EI. As you know, EI insurance is based on need. You should only be taking in the premiums you need in case you have to pay out some money. But they have been accumulating, and I believe it's now a $7 billion or more surplus, and small businesses have told us that it is affecting them when they make their hiring decisions. Once they realize the taxes over and above that they have to pay to the federal government, they decide to perhaps postpone some of these permanent hirings. So it's important for us to put pressure upon the federal government to only take in just enough money for EI and not to tax the people of Ontario more than they need to.

Our government has acted to correct the mistakes of previous administrations. As a fiscally responsible government, we will continue to repay the $38-billion debt created by mismanagement and inefficiency at the old Ontario Hydro. We plan to accelerate payments as soon as new supplies of electricity are on stream. I have been talking to companies like Sithe Energy, originally based out of Oswego, New York, which is planning to build an electricity plant in my riding of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale at a cost of $1 billion Canadian. That is a great sum of money. I'm glad the plant was planned in my riding for the benefit my constituents as well as for the benefit of all Ontarians. I think it's very important I'm pleased that they are planning to have more electricity on-line, because consumers need it, small businesses need it and big businesses need it. We have to have an ample supply.

When both oppositions, the official opposition and the third party, fearmonger that there'll be brownouts and blackouts—they've been saying that for about a year now, and that did not happen. As soon as the Pickering nuclear station comes back on-line, we're going to have plenty of power, as well as from the companies that are starting to produce more electricity. Also, when we start producing more electricity, slowly we're going to phase in clean power and phase out the coal-burning generating capacity. But we have to balance that. I think when you are in opposition, you can promise all kinds of things. Within the next few minutes, they're going to get up and say, "It's not soon enough. We will be stopping the coal-burning power-generating stations next year." Then again, they change because they realize that there won't be enough power. Then they realize that it'll be them whose policies really mean brownouts or blackouts.

I just mentioned briefly the $38-billion debt. I think it's fair for the people of Ontario to know who's responsible for that debt. Obviously, responsibility lies with successive governments and management teams who operated Ontario Hydro in the red. But we too as individuals bear some responsibility to fix the problem. After all, every one of us who has used electricity in the past decades was using power paid for by credit card. This government took action to restructure the old Ontario Hydro so this would never happen again. But the billions on Ontario Hydro's old credit card still need to be paid off. We can't just ignore that $38-billion debt. Not only do we have a debt repayment plan, but in the medium term we hope to accelerate repayments as soon as new supply is on stream. We've listened to the people of Ontario and no one has told us that they wish to go further into collective debt. Reducing and eliminating this debt is an important priority for creating Ontario's future electricity system.

The proposed legislation I've just outlined describes our government's plan to provide relief to Ontario's electricity consumers in the short and medium term, but we're not stopping there. Our government is also taking a long-term systematic approach to ensuring that the supply of electrical power in the province of Ontario is abundant, stable, secure and accessible to everyone.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I'm pleased to make comment on Bill 210 here this evening. My voice is a little bit challenged; I have a sore throat and a cold going here. But I do want to speak up on behalf of comments made by constituents in my riding. Certainly they feel, I say to the member opposite, that the GST should not be charged on this particular part of the billing that is coming forth from this government. I know that the government opposite will say to us, "You should speak to your federal member." If I thought for one moment they would not be partisan about that, we would say that perhaps in certain cases we have. But I think the government would spin that result most conclusively. They would say, "Well, the members opposite think that the federal government is bad," and if we do not say anything, they will say, "The members opposite think that the federal government is bad." The point here is that this government had a choice in how they determined this would be applied to the billing, and they chose not to do the right thing. Therefore, the federal government was only applying what was natural in that case: to have the GST put on. This government should remove that from those billings.

I have to say that my constituents have called me swiftly, vigorously and most negatively on the mismanagement this government has put in place in terms of hydro. Mr Eves, on occasions, was going to sell Hydro One, then selling Hydro One was not going to occur, then Hydro One was going to be back on the table for some kind of discussion, then he wanted Bay Street to figure it out for him, then he wanted to keep it a public corporation, then the Premier introduced legislation to sell Hydro One, then he wanted an income trust, then he killed the IPO option and finally he literally sawed Hydro off and decided to sell it.

Mr Prue: In case the member from Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale thinks I believe that "profit" is a new word, suddenly discovered since I have been sitting in this seat, I want to tell him he does not know history very well. He should know that, as the mayor of East York, I went through five successive budgets with no tax increase, built the only factory in all of Metropolitan Toronto in those days during the recession, had work being done and debts being paid off so that by the time I left after but five years the debt had been reduced from some $12 million to less than $4 million and would have been completely finished had we not been suffering the ignominy of amalgamation.

I want to tell the member opposite as well that when I was sitting on the board of East York Hydro we used every single cent to put up new light standards and rebuild the system until it was in absolutely excellent condition. It was this government, though, after amalgamation and after downloading, that asked the municipalities to restructure and start to make profits, and you will see that today Mississauga Hydro is required to make a profit, as is Toronto Hydro, as are all the Hydros. It was this government and their bill that did it.

Since amalgamation, municipalities have come to rely on the monies from those profits. It's one of the ways they have used not to increase taxes. They have done it in your own riding. That is where the money comes from, in Mississauga and in Brampton, so that taxes have not had to be raised. You cannot suddenly take that money away without expecting the municipalities to pay.

I am suggesting to you that it is a wrong-headed solution. "Profit" is not a dirty word. "Profit" is a good word when it is used for the benefit of the people. It is a bad word when it is used to the detriment of the people, as you are attempting to do in this very misguided Hydro fiasco.

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): I just want to compliment my colleague on what I thought was a very reasoned contribution to the debate on this bill. He spoke to a number of issues that I believe are important to people in the province: first of all, the reason for having to take this step. He also spoke, I think, very practically to the responsibility all of us have in the province to deal with the reality that for many years governments of all political stripes have, quite frankly, not had the courage to do the right thing relative to the energy file. The fact is that successive governments have allowed the debt to continue to build up simply because, as I said before, they didn't have the courage to go to the people and say, "Look, we have a problem. You have to pay more for your energy."

When you compare what Ontario has been paying with other jurisdictions, whether that is in Canada, in the neighbouring United States or anywhere else, we have been getting a good deal. In fact, we've been getting too good a deal. We have been paying far below the cost we should have been paying all along. Governments have allowed the debt to build and have been pulling the wool over the eyes of consumers.

Finally, what we're able to do now is at least begin to meet this issue head-on. For the first time, consumers understand we have an issue that has to be dealt with. This bill is beginning to deal with the issue. It is only the beginning, because the day will come when the people of this province have security of supply at a competitive rate that is the true cost of delivering this essential commodity.

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I'm happy to have an opportunity to comment for a couple of minutes on the remarks made by the member from Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale. I find it interesting that earlier in the debate this evening the Minister of Labour talked in rather glowing terms about all this government was doing to address this issue. What I think is really important for all of us here this evening to remember, for the people who are listening to these proceedings, is who created the problem. This is the government that created the problem. This is the government that, on May 1 this year, opened the market. Certainly there were very serious warnings on this side of the Legislature that there was not a secure supply that would make that a safe venture.

Obviously, over the course of the summer we were able to see what happens when there is not a sufficient supply in the market. It means that during those peak periods, we consumers, the people of Ontario, are required to pay the peak price per kilowatt hour. The consequence of that is that in September and October our constituents let us know the result. They were seeing that in their hydro bills. So of course the government was sent scrambling.

The member did mention in his remarks that he has spoken with constituents. I would suggest that he heard from constituents. He didn't go out looking for it; they went looking for him, as they did for every other member of this Legislature. That's what this bill is all about.

The Minister of Tourism, I'm very surprised, indicated in his remarks that Ontarians have been getting too good a deal, and that's what this legislation is all about. This problem is not over. The opposition is not fearmongering, and I do believe we continue to have a serious supply problem in Ontario.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale has two minutes to respond.

Mr Gill: I want to sincerely thank the members who took part in responding to my comments. I think it's essential that they not only listen, but try to fathom what's said. Maybe some of them weren't listening intently, because I don't think when they answered back they quite—

One of the things the member for Chatham-Kent Essex said was that he agrees with us on the GST. I think that's a good thing. It's not about being partisan or non-partisan. If it's the right thing to do, then I certainly urge the member to go back to his federal counterparts and say, "Listen, we have to stop this."

It's the same with Mr Romanow's report, which came out the other day. It talked about the transfer of health care dollars. We've been saying for years and years that it used to be a 50-50 proposition; then it became 18 cents; then it became 14 cents. We're urging the federal government to pony up.

The member from Beaches-East York talked about profit. It really is the first time I've heard him talk about profit as a good thing. I agree with him. I think it's a very good thing. I think people have to make money so they can set up their shops and set up their businesses, and we have to have a competitive marketplace. That's why we want to make sure the supply of electricity is ample.

I also want to thank the Minister of Tourism, who took time out of his busy schedule to talk about issues. He said that perhaps every government has had responsibility. I know the member from Beaches-East York forgot to mention that it was under his government in 1990 that the debt went to $29.4 billion. I think they have to own up to that.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I'm pleased to speak to this bill. I was shook up a little bit a few minutes earlier, though, when the member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale accused this side of the House of fearmongering. That rattled me, because I know each one on this side came to contribute positively to every minute of the debate. So I went and checked the dictionary at the back of the House. If what we say actually comes true, then it's not fearmongering, so I feel much better, because I know members on this side of the House have said for months and months, or indeed years, that if you implement the hydro plan you want, prices will go up. Well, you may have accused us of fearmongering, but the prices did go up, and that's why we're here this evening. Ten years ago no one would have envisioned this debate taking place.

I have a four-year-old at home who, no matter what mechanical toy I give him, takes it apart immediately and then sees if he can put it back together. Although that's amusing with a little wooden toy issue, at the provincial level you people are taking education apart and then you're trying to see if you can put it back together, but you've got some pieces left over. You took health care apart and then you're trying to see if you can put it together. You want credit for trying to put it together, but you don't want credit for taking it apart. You took Hydro apart. I mean, yes, this is your bill trying to fix your mistakes, but you took Hydro apart with no planning. To you, this province is a giant science lab. "Let's try something. Let's see what happens if we do this."

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): It's experimentation.

Mr Parsons: It's experimentation. It's of interest to see what actually makes this thing work. "Let's take it apart, and after we've taken it apart, then we'll put it back together. Then we'll do a study to see what will happen if we take it apart and then put it back together." Every government prior to you did the planning before, did a study before and said, "What happens if we do this?" You do the opposite and say, "Let do it, and then let's study and see what we did." The people of Ontario paid a very dear price for that.

I would like to paraphrase a statement, though, that was made earlier: you as a government had the courage to do the wrong thing. You have done that over and over. There is concern about Hydro's debt. I believe I am correct that at this very instant the debt continues to increase. You did all of this to tackle the debt, but the debt continues to increase. Please explain to me the logic that would have caused all the pain and suffering and unnecessary expenditure and yet the debt continues to increase.

As always, we've got to find someone else to blame for the problem: the whole problem of electricity rates in Ontario is the GST that the federal government collects. So, first of all, we're really looking at the 7% on just the debt portion. But even that 7% on the debt portion is an unnecessary expense.

You passed the Taxpayer Protection Act. That was one of the cornerstones of your legislation. Granted, you broke it in the budget this spring, when you deferred tax cuts, but a promise made is only a promise kept for a certain number of months. So you broke it once. I suggest you break it again, because your unwillingness to break it is causing every citizen in Ontario to pay GST if you don't. If a government takes and extracts money from citizens to pay off a debt, that's a tax. Try saying that word to yourselves, maybe all alone and then gradually in groups. It's a tax. The money you're collecting is a tax to pay down the debt. All you have to do is acknowledge that, because the GST is not charged on a tax. It is your unwillingness to set it up properly that causes that GST to be collected. You could fix it without any involvement from any other party. You could fix it by simply admitting that you have levied a tax and you have got to charge taxpayers money to pay it down. Just do it.

We've heard the comments from members on the other side that there will be no disconnect taking place until the end of March, but people had better pay or else. You're in the same calling as I am: people want to do the right thing in Ontario. Our citizens want to do the right thing. But what you have lost touch with is some of the incredible poverty that exists in this province, poverty that in many ways you created. Ontarians who are on the disability support plan, who've not had an increase in 10 years, are faced right now with decisions such as, "Do we have a Christmas for our children or do we pay the electricity bill? Do we buy heating oil? Do we buy food?" The absolute maximum that a person on ODSP receives is $930, and with the increases that have taken place—I mean, yes, you've frozen the cost of electricity at 4.3 cents a kilowatt hour, but you've also frozen the delivery charges at the highest rate that they've ever been in history. There are people in this Ontario, people you either don't know about or choose not to know about, who can't pay their bills.

Your plan will get them through the winter. That will get them to the end of March. I would suggest to each and every one of you that a person will do what they have to do to buy food and clothing for their children and to provide shelter. I am concerned, and I believe that there will be people who do not pay their electricity bill, not because they're bums, not because they're trying to skip their obligations, but because in these winter months they've valued a coat for their children higher than they have electricity. Electricity can be put off until the end of March.

I challenge you, what's your plan at the end of March for the people who have been unable to pay their electricity bill over the winter? What are you going to do? Are you going to set up extra money with the social services departments? Are you going to put them out on the street? Are you going to disconnect? Even the spirit: people thought you meant no disconnects as of a certain date. We're still hearing about people having their electricity cut off in temperatures of minus 18 and minus 20 degrees.

I challenge you, what are you going to do? These aren't numbers. These aren't a small percentage of the people. These are real, honest-to-goodness men, women and children who, come the end of March, are going to have a major struggle to pay their electricity bill. You don't plan ahead, but I'm asking you in this case to please do that. Please make a provision that no child spends a night in a house without light or heat, or is thrown out on to the street. I'm imploring you to think about that.

I applaud the standard bills. I think we had it best exemplified when the Minister of Energy couldn't read the bills, as they come now to understand the complexity of them. Let's get a bill that the Ministry of Energy can read and then we'll be OK. But that isn't the problem. I haven't got a lot of calls from people saying, "I can't read my bill," because they sure could read the bottom number. In the bottom number, the fixed costs alone were more than their total bill used to be. That's the issue.

You can so easily lose touch by being here in Queen's Park with what the real issues are out on the street and in the communities. As people have done very well in this province for the last seven years, others have done very poorly. Working families in Ontario have struggled over the last seven and a half years. Yes, make the bill stand-ard, but make it so they can afford to pay it.

The rebates: everybody is counting on the rebates. The rebates are to help people with their electricity bill. It's going to come right before Christmas, when there will be severe temptations to spend it on other things. Am I correct that the Premier said it would cost about $4 million to process the cheques and sent them out; $4 million for paperwork? You people have a Red Tape Commission. You need to talk to it once in a while and say, "We've finally found an example of blatant waste in red tape and paperwork, and it's mailing out." Actually, it's not the first one. I guess the first blatant waste would have been the $200 cheques that went out a couple of years ago.

If you want to help the people with an electricity bill, credit their bill with the money. You don't have to do all of the mailing; you don't have to process all the cheques or do all the envelopes. This surely can't be an election ploy on your part, just to get a cheque with the Premier's name on the bottom when it goes to a house. I'd like to think that you really, genuinely wanted to lower electricity costs. Take it and credit it against the bill, where it really and truly belongs, and have that done with.

You talk about capping the price at 4.3 cents. You didn't cap the price; you froze it. You froze it at 4.3 cents. I have an analogy to that: one of the struggles of farmers is always that you have to pay whatever others charge you if you want to buy equipment, a milk tank or anything. Others set the price when you buy the feed and the fertilizer and then others set the price when you go and sell your product. You're caught in between. Others tell you what the milk and cattle are worth. Farmers are in the dilemma of not having total control over the prices.

You've now got control of what you sell it at; you're going to sell it at 4.3 cents, but you don't have control over what you're buying yet. The fundamental problem, the problem that you knew about or should have known about, is that there is not enough electricity produced in Ontario. It's as simple as that.

I cannot comprehend how a government could proceed forward in the belief that their energy is sufficient when their appointed individuals did not tell them that the nuclear plants are not all up and running. We have a contract that this province has signed with British Energy. I don't know if it's fully public. One of the reasons you people privatize is to remove documents from freedom of information. It isn't to save money; it is to take things behind closed doors. But surely you were sharp enough when you did the contract with Bruce nuclear to put a clause in there that said, "You should mention to us if your plant's not producing electricity any more." Regardless, I would have thought the Independent Market Operator would have noticed there was no electricity coming out of there for months. That would be a clue. If you don't get power from it, it's probably not working.

Interjection.

Mr Parsons: The minister didn't know about it; no. No one told him. But the Independent Market Operator, who was very independent on this, chose to tell no one that Bruce nuclear in fact wasn't producing power.

You don't have control over what you buy electricity at. You can only control what you're selling. Don't even try to tell me you're buying it at 4.3 cents or less. Don't even start to go down that road, because you're paying more.

You don't have to be a very sophisticated business person to know that if you're buying it for more than you're selling it, there has to be something come in between. Are you going to put up taxes? Are you going to add to the debt? I haven't seen a lot of that in your press releases as to exactly where that difference would come from. I think the people in Ontario are pretty interested because you're continuing to run up the debt that our children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren will pay for.

When you first started with your hare-brained scheme to totally deregulate it while you're short of electricity, you put not just families, businesses, small corner stores and large industry at risk; you put the entire economy of Ontario at risk for your little experiment. Thank goodness you got caught before we got through the winter and you acknowledged you had to do something. Most people in Ontario are suspicious that your solution is a political solution and not a long-term engineering solution to address it.

You've made utilities restructure. If you examined municipalities in Ontario, particularly in rural Ontario, you would have found that their public utility commissions, by and large, were extremely efficient. In fact, in many cases we could say the smaller the utility, the more efficient it is. You told them they had to sell out or you're going to slam them with a tax of 75% or something by a certain date. It was all artificial to force them.

Remember Hydro One that we've talked about being in debt? You allowed them to borrow $500 million to buy the small, efficient PUCs in order to consolidate into large, inefficient Hydro One units that now have one central number that's not answered. We've had ice storms in our area, and the police report that the phone just rings and rings, rather than the old model where you could contact someone locally to solve the problem.

You allowed these things to increase and you said to them, "Make a profit." In fact I think you said, "You make a profit up to"—I believe—"9.8%." You encouraged them to make a profit. You encouraged them to restructure. As you downloaded things—"OK, you've got social housing and you've got ambulances, you've got roads, you've got bridges, but you're going to be able to make money on your hydro unit, on the delivery of electricity." You told them that. You said, "Go make some money. We want you to make nearly a 10% return." Actually a 9.8% return is far above average for any other business. Most businesses would be delighted. You said, "Go and make 9.8%."

Who are they making it off? They're making it off our citizens. It's not mythical profit ripped out of the air. You said to these companies, "Go and get more money off our citizens." When you said, "We have a Taxpayer Protection Act," what you really said was, "We're going to get others to collect the taxes for us." PUCs were put into that position.

Now you've taken and frozen—and I don't know exactly where you're going with this and they don't know. Are you going to make them non-profit? If you do that, are you going to take back some of the downloading? Talk about lack of planning. It's an absolute disgrace.

We need more electricity. I said earlier, that's a fundamental problem. How are we going to do that?

Well, there's probably a combination. For most complex issues, there isn't one simple answer. There may be four or five or 10 or 15 really good things that work together to solve it. So, how do we get more electricity?

The Ontario Liberals have said very clearly that there's capacity for another generating plant in Niagara, a Beck 3. We've touted that. The member from St Catharines has raised that issue a couple of times a week in this House for as long as I've been here. There's capacity for us to produce more electricity.

I understand your reluctance. If it's publicly owned, it's bad. That does scare me because you're the crew that wanted to sell our water systems next. If we look at your track record on electricity, I fear for where we're going with our water systems. But that's going to be another debate.

You don't want a publicly owned generating station in Niagara Falls, but the people of Ontario do. They want cheap, clean electricity. Is there a role for the private sector in generating electricity? There has always been some, but who in the world would want to come to Ontario and invest when we have a Premier who says—on April 26, Premier Eves said, “It’s important Hydro One be privatized.” Then on May 2 he said, “It’s in jeopardy; it’s off the table for the time being.” So, if you’re going to invest $1 billion—maybe it’s going to be privatized, maybe it’s not. I noticed he took it off the market the day before two by-elections, one of which was his, so there may be a connection on that one. On May 8, six days later—he has had six days to think it over—he said that it’s back on the table but he doesn’t want to put timeline on it.

On May 15 he—and I’m paraphrasing, I’m sure you’ll forgive me—he essentially said, “I don’t know what I’m doing, and I’d like to hear from investment firms what to do.” On May 16 he said, “We’re going to make it a public corporation.” On May 30, he introduced legislation to sell it. On June 7, he said, “I want it to be an income trust.” Kind of like a wind vane up there, the direction he’s going, he’s twirling. On June 3, he killed the IPO proposal for the private sector, and then on July 6, he decided that the best compromise is to sell half. “We’ll keep half public; we’ll sell half.”

The private sector cannot even consider investing money into a scheme such as that. Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals have recognized that it is important that there be some stability, that there be some regulation brought to this and there’d be some planning—not on the back of an envelope; not on the spur of the moment; not based on the latest poll. The people of Ontario deserve the best. We deserve the best in health care, in education, in long-term care, in clean water and in electricity. For our livelihood, for our safety, for our health, affordable electricity is important, and an assured supply is equally important.

Industry would not even consider operating in this province if there’s a possibility of brownouts. At the risk of saying that I’m fearmongering, there’s a very real risk of brownouts in this province. When we had the price cap fixed, we know the amount of money we’d have to spend and we don’t have control over what we’re going to have to pay. A brownout or two in this province would destroy our reputation as a magnet to attract or to keep industries such as auto plants. In a just-in-time system, they cannot allow the line to be shut down. This plan that you have put forward will cause industry to have other sources of energy provided to them.

I’m running out of time and I really wanted to talk about conservation because we’ve had a lot of rhetoric about energy conservation, but we haven’t really seen any realistic plan for it.

This government broke it and is not capable of fixing it.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Questions and comments?

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): Just a couple of minutes to the member from Prince Edward-Hastings and a little reminder, perhaps, because when the Tories say the opposition is fearmongering, I don’t think they meant you. They meant the NDP. I think you can be relieved about that. Because, if I recall, it wasn’t the Liberals with a bus going across Ontario saying, “Ho, ho. Privatization is a problem. Rates are going to go up. Be guaranteed of that.” In fact, the Liberals’ lips were sealed.

Mr Parsons: I didn’t attack you; I’ve been very good.

Mr Marchese: No, your lips were sealed for a whole year. You, Dalton McGuinty, your buddies beside you, your women friends beside you, for a whole year you guys zipped. You could hardly be fearmongering if you don’t say a word in a whole year on the issue of deregulation and privatization—please. Those of you watching, take comfort. It was not the Liberals who were fearmongering about the increase in rates. In fact, Monsieur Dalton McGuinty has been quoted as saying on Focus Ontario, June 1, 2002, “I am in favour of privatization, both in terms of the transmission and the generation.” The reason they were quiet all along and not fearmongering was because they jumped on the wagon with you Tories. It wasn’t them. I don’t remember the Liberals once saying, “Oh, my God, lo and behold, privatization and deregulation is going to hurt. It’s going to hurt you consumers and it’s going to hurt you big.” I don’t remember them saying it once. And all of a sudden, when things go sour, the Liberals are saying, “Oh, my God, you were incompetent.” Boy, if the Liberals were in power, they would have done it right, but the Tories, they just don’t know how to do it. Tell them that.

By the way, I’ll have more to say later.

Mr John O’Toole (Durham): I always hate to stand up after the member from Trinity-Spadina because he provides a tremendous amount of energized comment with respect to the issue before us. But Bill 210, for those viewing tonight, is a bill that, if you stay tuned, I’ll be speaking on in a very few moments.

The member from Prince Edward-Hastings took most of the time talking about other things and it’s unfortunate because the viewer wants concrete, substantive debate. The member from Trinity-Spadina is right. This government tried—I will provide some background to this in my comments, but in all fairness, the NDP here on this particular topic have been consistent at least. Some would say consistently wrong, but they have been consistent.

There’s enough time. I can introduce to the anticipated viewer at home this report that I’m going to be discussing at some length, an independent report. It’s the Market Surveillance Panel monitoring report on the IMO administration of the electricity market for the first four months, from May through August 2002. This report was submitted on October 7 and it’s a very, very comprehensive review of a very, very complex situation. I will try, for my constituents and those viewing, to bring some light to the context of the debate, starting with the Macdonald commission report in 1995. NAOP, the nuclear asset optimization all-party committee that looked at nuclear assets and how optimum they were—it’ll actually talk about the opening of the market, the market design committee and some of the design failures.

It's a very complex issue. This government stood up and defended the consumers at the end of the day. This is a government that's prepared to listen and prepared to act.

Mr Ted McMeekin (Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot): I hesitate to wade in when one is referencing a book that is hard to pick up once you've put it down. In any event, it's been said that good judgment is based on experience and experience invariably on bad judgment. My mother cleaned it up a bit. She said, "When you mess up, fess up." I think there's a fair bit of fessing up that members from all three persuasions in this House could, on a good day, learn something from.

What I'm hearing from people in my riding—and I think the member from Prince Edward-Hastings spoke around it—is that they expect their government—they have a relationship of trust and motive. On a good day, the people I represent really believe that we're actually here doing the work of the people, trying to defend the common good. To do that, as I talk to my folk about that, their expectations, they say, "Look, if you're going to have that relationship of trust and motive, there are some fundamental things that need to happen." I think this is instructive. You need to be straightforward. When you blow it—and we blow it over here and you blow it over there; fess up to that—you've got to do your homework. They expect that we're going to do our homework here. They expect that we're not going to rush ahead. They expect that an important part of what we do here is listening, not just listening but hearing what's being said, and from that hearing, moving forward in a focused way to make sure that the common good is attained.

I'm pleased with much of what's in the bill. I can tell you one thing I am very, very concerned about, a suggestion I made in a letter to the Premier: that we ought to return to a select hydro committee—I'd go beyond that: a select energy committee, because I think the gas rebates are another big issue—where we can set the partisan stuff aside and begin to work together for the common good.

The Speaker: Further questions or comments?

Mr Prue: I listened to the speaker from Prince Edward-Hastings, and actually I'm going to say some good things. I cannot help but say that in the 14 or 15 months now that I have been in this Legislature, I have seen certain members of the Liberal Party flip and flop on this issue to a great extent, and I have seen positions change literally overnight. Sometimes I have seen positions change right in the middle of the scrum. But I am going to say to the member from Prince Edward-Hastings that he has got it right. He has finally seen the light, just then. I'm hoping the other side is the same.

Hon Mr Clark: Hallelujah.

Mr Prue: Yes, a modern-day Elmer Gantry over there. He's seen the light.

This whole privatization scheme is doomed to failure. From the very beginning, you started it, and it is doomed to failure today.

As the member from Prince Edward-Hastings said, the fixed charges are now in some cases as much as the cost of the electricity. You have allowed people to take their little slices seven or eight times so that people who conserve energy find that they are paying money for a product they aren't even using. It is going into the hands of people who are gouging them.

There is nothing wrong with profit, but there is something wrong with profit when it gouges ordinary people who have no choice but to buy their electricity. They have no choice in a modern society except to use it.

The member from Prince Edward-Hastings also talked about the disabled, and I'm glad he included them, because these people in this province, who have such a difficult time on the pittance you give them, the pittance that you refuse to raise even though inflation has risen, the pittance you give them even though electricity costs are going up, need to be helped. You should be doing something for them that is separate and apart from electricity, because food and electricity and everything else they need cost more.

Mr Parsons: To the members for Trinity-Spadina, Durham, Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot and Beaches-East York, I thank you. I enjoyed each and every one of you, some when you started, some when you quit. But I got some enjoyment out of each and every one.

The reality is that this situation didn't need to get broken. Things had to be fixed. There was a debt. The debt wasn't terribly unusual, in view of the magnitude of the capital investments.

What we needed was a plan to address the debt. That's what we needed. We needed a plan to address the debt. We needed a plan to have more electricity generated. We didn't need a plan to sell Hydro One to your friends. We didn't need a plan to let generation of electricity go out of the control of the people in Ontario. You undertook a massive reorganization that in 1999 you never breathed a word about to the electors. You didn't give them any warning or caution whatsoever that this is what you were considering.

This is a government that preached and said that you believe in referendums, you believe in power to people. You have stripped all the power that you can away from people. You have had more time allocation motions than all governments previous to this put together. You have rammed through all of your legislation. When you do something as fundamental as electricity supply, water supply or education, you should be upfront about it and talk about it during the election.

You talk taxes, taxes, taxes. Your Taxpayer Protection Act requires that you divulge during the campaign what you do in the way of taxes. It should be much more than that. A government or a political party should have to divulge what they're planning to do with health care. What are you planning to do with the costs for our seniors to live in long-term home care? What are you planning to do to our road system? What are you planning to do to the electricity system? Be up front right from square one, rather than sneaking everything in through the back door through omnibus bills or simply trying to do it without legislation.

The Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak tonight to Bill 210, An Act to amend various Acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity. This bill was introduced by the Honourable John Baird, Minister of Energy, on November 25, 2002. The short title of this bill is the Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act.

This bill contains a number of tax incentives to encourage the development of new sources of supply of electricity—energy—particularly from environmentally friendly sources, and to encourage energy conservation. This package is part of a responsible plan for promoting conservation and clean electricity from alternative and renewable sources of power.

The proposed tax incentives are part of a long-term plan not only to increase the supply of energy and encourage conservation, but also to promote clean air in Ontario. We are aiming for green energy, and the proposed measures, including tax incentives and tax holidays, present such an opportunity. It will benefit all Ontarians.

As part of a comprehensive long-term plan to promote environmentally friendly energy, the government is proposing the following tax measures:

(1) A 10-year corporate income tax holiday for new electricity generation from clean, alternative or renewable energy sources, including natural gas, hydroelectric, solar, wind, biomass, hydrogen fuel cell and co-generation. The corporate income tax holiday would be available once the project has been completed and the corporation has begun selling the new electricity supply that it has generated.

(2) A 10-year property tax holiday for newly created assets that generate electricity from clean, alternative or renewable sources, with compensation to municipalities for lost or forgone property taxes. The tax exemption would begin on the date that the eligible facility commences generation of electricity.

(3) A 100% corporate tax write-off in the year of acquisition for the cost of newly acquired assets used to generate electricity from clean, alternative or renewable sources, to be incorporated in planned regulation.

Mr Marchese: Good stuff.

Mr Arnott: Yes, it is good stuff.

The write-off would be available for corporations that purchase eligible assets after November 5, 2002, and before January 1, 2008. There will be a capital tax exemption, if this bill is passed, for newly acquired assets used to generate electricity from alternative or renewable sources. Corporations that purchase eligible assets after November 25, 2002, and before January 1, 2008, would qualify.

(4) A full retail sales tax rebate for eligible businesses for building materials purchased and incorporated into clean, alternative or renewable electricity generation facilities and materials used to construct deep lake water cooling systems. The rebate would be in effect for building materials that are purchased and incorporated into the electricity generating facility after November 25, 2002, and prior to January 1, 2008.

We are also promoting energy conservation through the following proposed measures:

(1) A proposed regulation to provide a 100% corporate income tax write-off in the year of acquisition for new investments in qualifying electrical energy-efficient equipment. The write-off would be available for corporations that purchase eligible assets after November 5, 2002, and before January 1, 2008.

(2) Tax rebates to support conservation of energy by the people of Ontario, including retail sales tax rebates on the cost of solar panels and systems purchased and incorporated into residential premises, and a retail sales tax rebate for consumers who buy energy star-rated appliances, including refrigerators, clothes washers and dishwashers after November 25, 2002, and before November 26, 2003.

2020

The Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act, 2002, is part of the government's commitment to protect Ontario's families and businesses. The government remains committed to lower taxes to encourage growth and job creation. That's how we've been able to invest in public education and health care. I'm advised that the economic activity spurred by tax reductions has helped Ontario achieve a total of over one million net new jobs since our government's first throne speech in 1995. In October, employment rose by over 20,000 new jobs. In fact, since reaching the first target that we set for ourselves of 725,000 new jobs in the year 2000, another 283,000 net new jobs have been created in the province.

We know that economic prosperity cannot be taken for granted. That's why we're always looking for new ways to promote economic growth throughout the province. We want to maintain the momentum caused by increased economic activity. The proposed tax measures to increase the supply of electricity and energy in Ontario and encourage energy conservation send a clear message to our consumers and potential investors. The government plans to continue to focus on sound fundamentals such as lower taxes to promote growth and opportunity in the province. Just as we're committed to protecting the people who live and work in Ontario, we also want to attract new investment to our province. These tax initiatives would make Ontario an even more attractive location for investment, and we believe that the proposed energy tax incentive package will stimulate new generation, encourage alternative fuels and support clean energy production.

The government will set the example for the greening of Ontario energy. The government is committed to purchasing green electricity. As an example, we intend to target 20% of the provincial government's electricity usage from renewable sources. We're also committed to the goal of ensuring that every newly constructed government and other institutional building be energy self-sufficient, using alternative or clean sources of energy.

I want to urge all members of this House to support the Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act, 2002, Bill 210. We need the support of legislation to stimulate the new investment and supply of electricity, particularly electricity from clean, alternative and renewable energy sources. We need to ensure a continued supply of clean and affordable electricity from renewable resources to our Ontario consumers and businesses. We need to promote conservation and encourage investment in alternative fuel technology. The Legislature's select committee on alternative fuel sources has identified clean electricity sources. We would like to focus on those recommendations while continuing to preserve Ontario's overall electricity supply. Electricity is the most vital form of energy, without which a modern economy could not function. The stability of electricity supply has become even more important now than in the past with the advent of technology and our reliance on electronic data systems.

What we are attempting to do, then, is to make sure that the tax system does not act as a barrier to investment aimed at creating new electricity supply. That is the purpose of this Bill 210. The Ontario government is as committed as ever to bringing stability of electricity supply to the people of Ontario. We know how vital electricity is to Ontario's economy, and that's why we're taking appropriate action to respond to the challenge of investing in new technologies for electricity generation. Once again, I urge all members of this House to support Bill 210.

The Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): This is a two-minuter, I'm assuming. One of the things I hope the member opposite is taking good note of is the fact that since they announced the tax breaks for energy efficient home appliances, there has been a deluge from that moment on, and it continues today, where an awful lot of people are returning the appliances they just bought. They're causing an awful lot of concern and problems with the industry right now, because they assume that the appliances they've purchased will not qualify for that tax break. So they're causing quite a bit of a problem to the appliance dealers in Ontario. I would hope that this government would take a look at that immediately, and I don't mean wait for any other discussion, but act immediately on this to ensure that the public are receiving the energy-efficient appliances they're already paying for, and to look at a little bit of retroactivity so we can stop this deluge of equipment going back into those stores again and causing an awful lot of flip-flop of those appliances.

I'm going to talk a little about this in my presentation, if I have time at the end of the evening: the old Ontario Hydro stopped, prevented and shut down about 250,000 megawatts of hydro energy creation. It simply bought those little tiny places across the province that were generating electricity in a very efficient and very impressive way: 250,000 megawatts got shut down by Ontario Hydro. I wonder whether the government is aware of all these places. They're still in place; they just don't have the generators at present. I would suggest to the government if they don't look at that they're making a very big mistake. Quite frankly, we have an opportunity to create about 10% of our power needs, so I encourage the government, which it hasn't done to this point, to reinvest a little bit of that energy that they're spewing at this moment, to look at all those different power plants that were shut down by Ontario Hydro to the tune of 250,000 megawatts of power, approximately 10% of the power that we need today.

Mr Marchese: First of all, I can't believe the member for Waterloo-Wellington gave up, surrendered 10 minutes of his time. This is precious time that I would never ever give up in this place. He gave up 10 minutes of his time. Can you believe it?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): Stick to the issue.

Mr Marchese: I'm just trying to be helpful, David, so the public understands. Me, I value my time. I want every minute I can get in this place, 20 minutes, one hour, and I don't want to share it with my friends. I'm not a socialist in that regard. I don't want to share my time with my colleagues. This is my time.

They should have Ted, the member for Waterloo, stand up each and every time because—you notice how his voice is mellifluous, certainly not malodorous. He's the kind of messenger you want to stand up there and deliver a message on environmentalism. Did you hear? His voice is so sweet, and he was talking about the environment and all the good things this bill has in it. Give me a break, Ted.

This is about sending a cheque before Christmas to appease, assuage, the people out there, the taxpayers and the citizens who are really, really angry about your energy policy. That's what it's about. It's not about doing a tax—like a credit. No, they need a cheque in their pocket, and they need it before Christmas, Ted. I want you to get angry when you stand up. Don't give me that sweet mellifluous voice and talk about how you're going to fix the environment and come up with some good ideas. Don't give me that. OK? I don't want to hear that. I want you to stand up for this government, stand up and say, "Yeah, we love privatization and deregulation, and we're going to do that after the next election." Stand up and say it. That's what I want to hear. There's no shame in that.

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Transportation): It really is amazing that some of the more experienced and long-serving members of the Legislature somehow feel that the longer you speak the better you are. In other words, volume is all, but salient points to the particular issue, as Ted Arnott has put forward here, don't count. I thought he showed a great deal of grace and integrity, which this member continues to show in this Legislature by reserving some time for other members to put their points forward.

When I was the House leader some time ago, I suggested to all members that we keep all speeches to 10 minutes. If you can't say something in 10 minutes, you probably haven't got a lot to put forward. Now there are some exceptions, a few exceptions.

This is typical, of course, of the NDP party. They feel that if you have a discussion, you lengthen the discussion, you have more meetings and you have more people talking at the meetings, and you don't resolve anything except when to have the next meeting, you've accomplished something at the end of the day.

Mr Marchese: So this is about meetings.

Hon Mr Sterling: We're talking about talk. We're talking about more and more talk.

I really find that the member opposite criticizing a member for being salient, to the point, talking about the legislation and showing his unmitigated support for this legislation is really specious. Therefore, I will end early as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions? The member for Waterloo-Wellington has two minutes to respond.

Mr Arnott: It's nice to have two minutes to respond to some of the comments that have been made. I appreciated the comment from the member for Brant. He talked about the issue that's being brought to his attention by people who are selling appliances. I hope he doesn't object to the tax reductions and the tax rebates that we're proposing. I'm not fully aware of what his objection is, but I hope that the government will indeed review the concern that he expressed.

The member for Trinity-Spadina indicated that I have a mellifluous voice, and I appreciate that. I think you have one too. I just offer that compliment in return to you. Yes, I left some time at the end of my speech. I had about 10 minutes prepared to speak, and 10 minutes remained for other members, as the Minister of Transportation pointed out. I do appreciate hearing from other members too.

I have a perspective and a voice as a representative of the people who have sent me here from Waterloo-Wellington, but I also know, Rosario, there are 102 other members of this House who have a perspective and a voice, and should be given an opportunity to speak.

I didn't come in here tonight to filibuster this bill. I came here to offer my suggestions and my views on the bill and certainly—

Applause.

Mr Arnott: Thank you, to my colleagues over here, some of whom will want to have something to say as well.

The Minister of Transportation offered his view that there's a lot that can be said in 10 minutes. I would remind the member opposite the Gettysburg address was about two minutes long, and it's one they talk about well over 100 years later. So I think there is a lot that can be said in a short period of time. I left you 19 seconds, Rosario, for your speech later on.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I'll be addressing this House in English this evening. Let me say that I'm quite pleased to be able to speak on this very important bill. I do believe a lot of Ontarians are watching this debate tonight, because we really don't know where we're going with this bill.

It's well known that I don't like to criticize. I have to say there are good parts of this bill, definitely, like the tax incentive, the cap, also the rebate or the exemption of the energy-efficient appliances. Those are good parts of the bill.

But when we introduced this bill on November 25—I was expecting to see this bill presented in this House a week prior to November 25, because on November 11 the Premier had said it was a very important bill and we had to rush it through before it was too late. Why did he say "before it was too late"? Because we knew that small businesses and small families with the average revenue really could not afford those high bills they were receiving.

This government, with this announcement, is saving $50 million. How do I come up with the $50 million? According to the Minister of Energy, it is going to cost this government $700 million to refund or to proceed with the rebate. But when we look at the rebate, at the present time the cap is at 4.3. Just remember, on May 1 we said that anyone who was paying over 3.8 cents after a year, in May 2003, would receive the difference that they have paid over the 3.8.

We remember about two months ago Hydro One proceeded with a request to the OEB asking that the rebate be reduced by 20%. What we did when we made this announcement on November 11 was exactly what we said we would not accept. This rebate from anything over 3.8 cents was going to go back to the consumers—which at this time it is not, because the cap is at 4.3 cents.

When this announcement was made at this Mississauga home, the person who owned this house said, "I will be receiving a rebate of approximately $150." I have news for the Toronto residents: there will be no rebate for them because they have never paid over 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour. If everyone in Toronto expects to receive this in the mail—it's not refundable, so they will never receive any rebate here in Toronto. Mind you, in the 100 kilometres around the GTA, we have a total of 60 MPPs. We haven't seen the rest of it.

We remember that Toronto Hydro made a request to OEB to increase their hydro rate, which they have kept at 4.3 cents. They have never gone through the increase that has occurred in the rest of the province. We have reached the increase right up to 9.3 cents, 9.4 cents per kilowatt hour. But here in Toronto, we kept it at 4.3 cents. Toronto Hydro has a receivable account of over $600 million. They said, "We cannot afford this any more."

At this point, I have to say, yes, there are good points in it, but what are we going to do with our local municipal hydro? Nobody can answer that at this present time. We know that some areas have not been able to meet the requirement ever since they faced this huge increase in the bills they were receiving from Hydro One, because they had to bill the customers according to what they were paying. At the present time, there are some areas where the receivable account is 30% over what it used to be.

In my own area, for example, at Hawkesbury Hydro, Alfred-Plantagenet Hydro, Embrun Hydro and also Ottawa Hydro, the accounts receivable they have are really high. The Minister of Energy said those municipal hydros were just money grabs. I can tell you now that we have evidence that in the city of Ottawa at the present time, ever since the amalgamation—the city of Ottawa does include Sarsfield, Navan, Cumberland, Vars, Lanark, Osgoode. All those small places are still with Hydro One. They would like to join Ottawa Hydro, but according to the law, they cannot proceed with the purchase of Hydro One. The average cost for each of those residents outside the former city of Ottawa is around $250 a year.

I was talking to a farmer just lately, Denis Perrault. He is a big farmer. He said, "If I was with Ottawa Hydro, my savings would be at least $3,000 a year."

I really don't know what's going to happen with this procedure that we are going to go through with this bill. I was talking to a bank manager from Casselman just last Thursday. He said, "Jean-Marc, we just can't figure out now how we should set up the costs or the payment for mortgages, because whenever we sell a house, we have to look at how much it is going to cost for the heating and for the hydro, but today we just can't figure out how much it is going to cost for the hydro." We're in a complete mess at the present time. When are we going to know if there is going to be a cap? We are debating the bill at the present time.

Another point that has occurred: this person from Vankleek Hill has good reason for complaining because he's saying, "I am on a budget plan of $149 per month." And not only is this gentleman on a budget plan; last Thursday, when he called me, he said, "I just got a bill of $1,648 and they asked me to increase my budget plan by $100, which will be $249 per month." And he has to pay that $1,648 immediately.

We know that the government wants to put on a cap. Why are we not telling Hydro One at the present time not to proceed with those increased budget plans they are planning because of the huge increase that occurred during this past summer? We know that there will be no 6.9, 9.8 or 9.3 cents per kilowatt hour. This government has to advise Hydro One not to proceed with the increases of budget plans that those people cannot afford. They are telling me now that their hydro bill is higher than the mortgage fee they have to pay. Something has to be done.

I was looking at this poor lady from St Isidore here; I have her bill. She used to pay $106 or $111 per month.

All of a sudden, she got a bill of $513. She's an 85-year-old lady receiving a small pension of $845. She has to pay rent. It's not that much down there, but it's high enough: $550. With just the hydro bill and her rent, there's no money left for her regular expenses such as groceries.

I have the Glengarry golf course. It's a small golf course. They received a bill of $7,400. Why have they received this bill of $7,400? The Hydro One meter reader knew that there are times during the year—September and August—when the hydro rate was going to be high. When July came he went over and took the reading: it was a zero reading. That was an estimated reading he said they got, but they knew that in the previous year that golf course definitely used some kilowatt hours. For two months in a row, they reported zero as an estimated reading. All of a sudden, they got the invoice: $7,400.

I've got Maxville Manor here. Their increase in September was $6,542.50. That is when we say, "Heating or the three meals." Those nursing home operators have to make a decision, because we know in all the nursing homes in Ontario the allocation for meals is $4.49 per day. That's all they get for all the residents of a nursing home. Shame.

Also, at the Maxville Manor that I have here, they have a well. The water is polluted, apparently; they can't use the well. They took the reading: $15.03 of electricity. Their bill is over $300. It's the other costs. At the present time, even though we are saying that there is going to be a cap on the hydro—the energy or the commodity, whatever they want to call it—it's the other costs.

I'm looking here at Rocker's Ben Café. His bill was $1,700.92. The other costs are $766. I have a lot of examples like this. I've got this one here: it's Pack All Manufacturing, and their bill was $8,940, an increase of $2,300 last month.

We ask, is this supposed to be helping the small businesses, the farmers, at the present time? I had farmers that came to one of my meetings. By the way, I had six public meetings during constituency week and I was hearing what people had to say. Some of the seniors came down in tears. They didn't know what to do with the hydro bill that they received. Some of the farmers also came over with a $2,100 increase. The first thing that I asked was, "Have you installed air conditioning in your barn?" He says, "Are you crazy? A $2,100 increase. I will have to either sell some of my quota or sell some of my cows to be able to pay that hydro bill." I have a lot of examples, let me tell you.

I did spend four days with the Minister of Finance from Manitoba. He told me, "Jean-Marc, two weeks prior to May 1, not only us, but a lot of other people from the States and from this beautiful country have advised the Premier of Ontario not to go ahead with deregulation." He decided to go ahead just the same.

Manitoba offered some hydro, some electricity, to the Ontario government. They turned it down. I have the letter here, which I did follow up after I spent four days with him. This letter was written to me on November 19.

He says, "At any time we are open to sell hydro to Ontario." Ontario didn't want to buy anything from Manitoba. So Manitoba turned around and sold some hydro to Minnesota; then we turned around and we bought it from Minnesota at the American rate.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): That's outrageous

Mr Lalonde: It's outrageous, definitely. We know at the present time that we Liberals under Dalton McGuinty are the ones that found that fiasco this government has gone through. When we know that there's been three ministers of energy in the last nine months, it's because someone hasn't done his job. Really, it's the Premier who is to blame for this. The Premier knew all along. He used to be the Minister of Finance and today is the Premier of Ontario. They didn't want to listen to anyone in Ontario. We were telling them not to do it because we knew what happened in Alberta, we knew what happened in California. We said that if you went ahead with your deregulation, we'd be facing the same problem. And today we are stuck with this. We have to try and remedy this fiasco that we are in at the present time. This government is trying to reimburse or pay out the $38 billion that we are in debt in about 10 to 12 years.

This debt was created, most of it, by the Tory government, who have been in power for 41 years out of 50. Eighty-two per cent of the time, Ontario Hydro was supervised or managed by a Conservative government, and today they're trying to say that we, the Liberals and the NDP, are responsible. I would be very sorry to say you're wrong on this. You're wrong because this fiasco was created by you people and you're now trying to solve it. Solve it not the way your doing it.

Before you decide to go ahead with the corporation tax break, the personal tax break, please pay your debt. If we don't pay this debt, you are going to take away the money that the Romanow commission has recommended be transferred to the province. I can tell you that I'm going to stand up any time that the money the federals transfer to the province—whenever it's money for the purchasing of equipment for hospitals, it should be paid directly to hospitals, not to this province, because this province will use it for their tax breaks.

I remember, going back a couple of years ago, that the government had decided—I believe it was $1.2 billion the federal government had said that we would transfer to the provincial government to buy new equipment. We gave out—we gave out—to diagnostic care, $9 million, because they had 140-some X-ray clinics in Ontario. They turned around, they sold their clinics and they kept that $9 million they got. Today we're in a similar fiasco with what's happening with Hydro One.

I could speak for hours on this because, as I've said, we have gone through the sixth meeting. My next one is this Thursday night at the Cumberland Maple Hall, and you can rest assured that we are going to have a packed house in there because the seniors really don't know what they are going to do.

While I had this meeting in VanKleek Hill, this poor family man came over, he said, "Mr Lalonde, I had to unplug my Frigidaire and put everything—my bottle of milk—outside in a cardboard box, because I could not afford to pay the hydro bill." This is the situation in rural areas.

I had other people, really, who came down and told me: at the present time this small store in St-Bernardin, Ontario—she said, "Mr Lalonde, if something is not done quickly, I am closing my corner store." A corner store of approximately 150 square metres. She's paying over $1,800 in electricity for one month. This is what we are hit with in the rural sector. Can you tell me how the municipal hydro commission will be able to send out that $75 rebate and then, after that, when May comes, to pay the balance?

There was a poor lady who was down in my office. I did the calculation of how much rebate she would be getting, and I told her, "Your rebate will be approximately $259." But this will have to come from a local municipal hydro. This is the way it is all over in municipal hydro. Those municipal hydros just won't be able to meet the requirement. They will have to go to the municipal council and make sure that the municipal council supports their loan that they would sign at the bank.

Mr Prue: I listened with great intent to the member from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, and I would like to thank him, living in and representing an area so far away from Toronto, for thinking about the poor people of this city, because, as he quite so succinctly set out, there will be no rebates in Toronto. There will be no rebates because Toronto Hydro made what was thought to be a fairly good business decision at the start of all of this turmoil that we've had around electricity and electricity rates: to just simply charge 4.3 cents and hope that in the long term things would even out. They didn't want to see spikes in rates for the consumers in this city.

However, Toronto Hydro, because they were unanimous, or perhaps because they weren't the best business people—one could put their own spin on it, I'm sure—has now found that they are in financial difficulty—in fact, financial difficulty to such an extent that their credit rating may be at risk. They went before the OEB along with seven other municipal hydro facilities and asked that the rate be structured and changed but they were denied. In fact, they are starting to look now at financial difficulties. They are looking at costs of going beyond their abilities to pay and municipalities that had come to rely on the monies of those hydroelectric facilities, municipalities like Toronto and Mississauga and a great many others, are finding that the money simply is not going to be there. Those same municipalities, as the speaker said, may have to raise taxes.

Then there is the additional cost: that all of these municipalities will be required to send out cheques, and those cheques will cost a lot of money to print and to mail. Really, the only purpose that I can see is that this government wants the cheques to be there so that their name can be all over it. The reality is that this is a rebate for hydro; it should come right off and be done at considerably less expense.

Mr Gill: It is a pleasure again to say my piece about the member from Glengarry-Prescott as well as the member for Beaches-East York.

I think the member from Glengarry-Prescott tried to blame as to whose fault it was for the $38 billion in debt. We can do all the finger-pointing we want, but I think it is the governments that have to make important, difficult, but necessary decisions. It has always been this government that has been able to make the decisions.

Earlier, I touched on the double cohort. For years and years, every government said, "You know what? Kids are going to high school for five years. It should be four." But nobody was willing or had the fortitude to make that decision. They were afraid to make a decision, because once you do that, you are certainly going to upset the norm or the status quo. But it is this government, and those are the bold steps.

The member for Beaches-East York was talking about the $75 rebate that people are going to be getting. He was talking in a sort of complaining mode, saying maybe they shouldn't be getting it. Well, I say they deserve and they need all the help they can get.

If people didn't pay any more than 4.3 cents, does that mean they should be getting rebates too? I don't think so. I don't think they should be getting rebates. At the same time, it's the same members who complained earlier on, a couple of years ago, when we realized that we had taken in $1 billion extra—of whose money? people's money—and we wanted to send it back to them because they had paid us more than they really deserved to pay. So we were happy to give those cheques, and even at that time, these people complained.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): The member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell I think enunciated many of the problems that his constituents have had with the government policy over the past period of time. They may like the new government policy better than they liked the government policy before November 11.

One of the things I have to say when I look through the legislation, and I think the member noted this, is that there are a number of ideas that have been lifted from the official opposition, so therefore I can't be critical of that. When you talk about some measures that you're moving forward with in terms of conservation, how can I be critical of that? We've been advocating that for some period of time.

My friend Mr Hastings, who was on the committee, will recall us talking about that on that occasion on that committee. I know he will want to give full credit to the official opposition, as only he will, for those purposes. So I can't complain about that.

We brought day after day to the attention of this House that people were being badly hurt by the huge increases they were seeing in their bills. The government has attempted to address this particular problem, perhaps in the long run not as adequately as it might, but certainly in the short run. I was one of the few people who thought the government would actually come forward with this conversion on the road to Damascus, a conversion which has been quite prevalent in this Legislature, I might add, to be fair.

I heard my colleague as well mention that Manitoba contract that got cancelled. I think it was about four cents a kilowatt hour. For the life of me, I don't know who cancelled that contract, but—

Mr Lalonde: It's 3.2.

Mr Bradley: It's 3.2 cents per kilowatt hour: a great contract from the province of Manitoba, and somebody cut that contract. I always know the enemy's on the other side, so I don't say who it was, but it happened in the early 1990s.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell has two minutes to respond.

Mr Lalonde: I really thank the members for their comments, but I'd just like to bring up the comments that were brought by the member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale. Let me tell you that when we're talking about the 4.3-cent rebate for Toronto, you are already screaming in Toronto because of the high rate for delivery, transportation, the volume charge, the GST, and also the service charge. We've been hit with the high hydro rate and also all the other costs.

I just wonder what this government is planning to do with those who have signed contracts with retailers. Who is going to reimburse the retailers the amount of money that will be rebated from the contracts they have signed? The same day as the Premier announced the 4.3 cap, people were knocking on doors selling electricity at 6.75 cents per kilowatt hour. I have a copy of the contract. I don't know. According to this bill, anyone who signed a contract after the passing of this bill would be eligible to pay what they have signed for. You should stop those contracts because they are cheating the customers. I'm told that at the present time there should be a real cleanup at Hydro One with what they're doing. And also at the OEB. OEB is not doing its job when they are giving licences to those guys to knock on doors, harassing people to sign. If they don't sign within 20 minutes, they say they're going to get their power cut off.

This is what we are experiencing in the rural areas at the present time. You have a duty. You should stop all those retailers from knocking on doors.

The Deputy Speaker: In rotation, we now begin the 10-minute speeches. I'm looking to the third party.

Mr Bradley: I was hoping for 20 minutes, Rosario.

Mr Marchese: Me too, Jim. Ten minutes—you know how hard it is.

The Minister of Transportation says, "You can do it in 10 minutes." I can't. I know that he can, but I can't because it takes me a longer time to talk to the citizens who watch this channel. You can't just say all that you want to say in 10 minutes; you just can't. The Tories want to limit me, circumscribe me as best they can. That's why they introduce closure motions, to circumscribe our ability to speak. That's what it's about. It's about strangulating debate. Ten minutes to speak on this bill, when there is so much to say?

The member from Bramalea-Gore says to the public, "You good citizens need the 75 bucks we're going to give you so you can pay for your children's tuition fees." Seventy-five bucks is not going to do anything for the tuition nightmare that students are facing and have faced since you people came into government. Tuition fees have gone up 60%.

Let me explain it to you. In university, it used to be $2,000 and now it's $4,500. In college, apparently it used to be $1,000 and now it's $2,000-something. I'm telling you that when the member from Bramalea-Gore says this rebate is going to help some poor young man or woman pay for their tuition, it's so laughable I don't even want to talk about it.

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: But you need to spend the time because when members say this kind of stuff—75 bucks to pay for skyrocketing tuition. It's not very smart, right? You know that. You know that nobody will be fooled, and you'll have two minutes to respond.

If you are in a deregulated program like medicine, dentistry or law, tuition fees have gone up 500%. Oh sure, the 75 bucks is going to help that young man and/or woman. You understand what I'm saying, right? The tuition fee in law now is 12,000 bucks; 75 bucks out of 12,000 is not going to go too far. That's just to talk about tuition.

But let's get back to the issue of hydro, eh, Ted? The mellifluous Ted Arnott talked about how wonderful this bill is going to be. I want to talk about the mess that you people created ever since you came into power—the ideological mess you've caused—because of the ideology that you subscribe to. You love the idea of selling off whatever we own to the private sector. You love selling it off and you people make no bones about it—none of you, the whole lot of you.

The Minister of Labour loves privatization. He's going to get up and speak next, and we're going to hear him, about his love of selling off Ontario Hydro and deregulating. Now let me tell you what deregulation means, Minister of Labour. What it means is you're allowing predators out there, a whole lot of predators, to come to your door, sell you a whole pile of goods, with a contract you can barely understand, usually incomprehensible, most of the time who knows what the hell they tell you, and you've got to pay, good taxpayer. You've got to pay for the mess that John loves. He loves to sell off whatever it is that's public.

He loves to deregulate to the private predators who come to suck the money away that's yours and ought to stay in your pocket, but they, the Tories—Minister Stockwell and others—love to give it away.

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: Well, because you're part of them and you're here. If you weren't here I wouldn't have mentioned you. I would have talked about the Minister of Labour, somebody else.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Stand up, Rosie.

Mr Marchese: I am standing. I am short. I make no bones about that.

Mr Bradley: Not short on words.

Mr Marchese: In fact, we have a good repertoire on this side of the House. Chris, you were there: do you remember when our leader used to say, "Prices are going to shoot up the roof as soon as you deregulate and privatize"? Chris used to be on the other end, and saying of Howard that he's funny, that he's lying, that he doesn't know what he's talking about.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I never said that.

Mr Marchese: You wouldn't say that. No, no, no, you didn't say that.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm saying you can't say it either.

Mr Marchese: He is misinformed. He used to tell our leader, "No, he's wrong, he's always wrong."

Why do you have this bill in front of us then if he was wrong? Why would you give people a rebate if Howard Hampton was wrong when he told you, for two years now, rates would shoot right up?

The Minister of Labour is going to speak after me and others. They're so cozy in their ideological smugness. No, the rates could not go up. They just couldn't. Oh yes, of course, they went up in California and other places in the US. They even went up, good heavens, here in Alberta, but it couldn't happen under the graceful, skilful watch of my friend Chris Stockwell, because he said so. He told us Howard was wrong. It was not going to happen.

The rates have gone just like a snake's ladder, constantly climbing up. You don't hear Chris Stockwell saying any more to Howard Hampton, "You were wrong." He don't say that no more.

Hon Mr Clark: It's "any more."

Mr Marchese: Oh, you guys are so literate; all graduates of English literature, each and every one of you.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: I am. That's my undergraduate.

Mr Marchese: It's your field? Beautiful.

Chris doesn't say any more, "Howard Hampton was wrong"—not he, not anyone else.

When Howard Hampton says these days, "We're going to face blackouts," you have the same riposte by the Minister of Labour and others saying, "Oh, there he goes again, fearmongering. He's wrong." I think we have foreseen what happened on the rates. Howard is predicting that we're going to see blackouts, but Chris smiles and says, "No, no, no, no, it ain't goin' to happen here"—

Hon Mr Stockwell: Do the "foreseen" again. That was good.

Mr Marchese: "Because we're English professors on this side of the House and it's not going to happen."

It's good to see you, Chris. So they say, Chris Stockwell then and Baird now, "We had a debt before. We had a problem, and the NDP caused it." The Tories didn't cause a thing. They were in power for so long—merciless times—for so long. They introduced Darlington. The Minister of Transportation says, "No, no, no. It was the Liberals." They take no responsibility for any deficiency.

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: I know. You didn't do nuthin', Jim. It's all somebody else. Nothing happened in California; nothing happened there. Jim, do you remember when you used to tell them about California dreaming, how beautiful California—

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): His predictions were so broad they could have come true at any time.

Mr Marchese: There's no what?

Interjections.

Mr Marchese: Yes. I remember Jim saying, "California dreaming, yeah, yeah." Do you remember that song? Jim used to sing it all the time. He ain't singin' that song no more.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Any more.

Mr Marchese: Thanks. No, you're good, Chris. Klein is good too. Klein came over here and met with Ernie and said, "Ernie, look. I've got some good news for you. We've got a heritage fund in Alberta. That's a problem because this heritage fund builds billions and billions out of the oil reserves. I know you guys don't have any, but do you know what? When we gave them a rebate, it worked. It got us re-elected. You can do the same, Ernie. But don't tell it like that. Don't say it like that. Just say that you listened to the constituents, rates are skyrocketing, even for those people who use less energy, and what you've got to tell the good taxpayers is you've got to give them some money back and send them the cheque—hey, no credit. Send them the cheque. Put it in the mail, because people love getting a cheque."

But you, Chris, you guys are good. What foreshadowed higher rates will also foreshadow the blackouts that Howard Hampton is predicting.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I know, I know.

Mr Marchese: It can't happen here, Chris, because it didn't happen before. "That's why you, taxpayers, are getting this rebate, this cash in the mail to help you out through the winter. By the way, hopefully you'll feel good because the election is coming in April or May. Please love us." They fixed the water. They're going to tell you they fixed the water. It's the cleanest water in the world.

Hon Mr Stockwell: It is.

Mr Marchese: Yeah, baby. And now we're going to fix hydro rates, because you're getting a little cheque back in the mail. Then they're going to fix education with Rozanski coming and lobbying you a couple of hundred million. Then the election is coming and Ernie Eves says, "Elect us. We are good again."

The public won't be fooled, Chris. You guys are in deep trouble, deep doo-doo.

The Deputy Speaker: I don't think that's parliamentary.

Mr Marchese: Speaker, would you like me to withdraw the word "doo-doo"?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, please.

Mr Marchese: I withdraw the word and replace it with "septic tank."

The Deputy Speaker: No, you can't replace it with anything. But we will have comments and questions.

Mr Bradley: Always entertaining, whether one agrees or disagrees, and I happen to agree with what the member had to say in his speech this evening. He is always entertaining for those of us who are here. He tries to involve members of the government. He tries to involve other members of the Legislature. He doesn't simply look at a television camera and speak. He doesn't get up and read the notes that Guy Giorno has prepared for whoever it is who has to read those.

I want to compliment the member on his speech this evening, which not only is entertaining but contains many prognostications which might well come true. He has somewhat of a record to this point in time on his pronouncements and on his prognostications, and I think it may well be that he could be right. There's a possibility, at least. He raises the possibility. He doesn't necessarily say that it's going to happen, but he raises the strong possibility of brownouts in the province during this summer.

Even though the assurance was given—the member knows that the nuclear reactors would be up and running at Pickering, that Bruce was going to be fine; now that Bruce Energy was brought in there was going to be all kinds of supply available to us—we're hoping that there's not a very cold winter in Ontario or an extremely hot summer. The cold winter could be a political problem. My suggestion to this House is that a hot summer won't be because there will be an event that takes place before the hot summer—just at the time those cheques are coming out and a lot of other goodies are being delivered. I think that will be before the summer and I think his predictions will certainly come true.

Mr Prue: It's always entertaining, although I am the one person in this place who cannot get to see the speaker's face. But he turns around from time to time and he waves his hands. I have to take my water off the table to make sure that it is not spilled. But I thank him very much because, even from the back, it is entertaining. He really knows how to capture an audience.

The member covered all the basics in his speech. Although he may have deviated in his first three minutes, talking more about education than he did about hydro, he quickly got back on track. He captured it all in the last few minutes when he was talking about the rebate of these cheques. This $75 that's being sent out, not in the form of a rebate off your bill, which was the logical and cheapest way to do it, but in the form of a cheque, is really not an economic act of this government. It is a political act of this government. It is designed to garner votes. It is designed to fool the public, who think they are getting some kind of gift from this government when in fact all they are getting is their own money back at an enormous cost.

We have said on this side of the House, and in this party in particular, that the costs of electricity would go up hugely and exponentially as a result of your privatization scheme, and we were laughed at. I remember sitting here and watching Chris Stockwell laugh. Mr Baird laughed and the Premier laughed. Everybody on that side laughed. They were all saying, "The rates are going down. They're going down." This was in the first few months, around May, but it didn't take very long for that whole process to curve up. It's continued to curve up in September and October. Here we are at the beginning of December with the highest rates in the province again. Quite frankly, if we prognosticate about potential brownouts, I think you should be listening over there.

Hon Mr Stockwell: My concern in this place always is that those who get up and flail their arms and express outrage through theatrics don't really have any content to their particular position. It's very clear the member opposite is offering up a kind of theatrics rather than content. He waves his arms and expresses concern, but the reality is that that is just a cover for someone who doesn't really have anything concrete to say.

As a minister of the crown, I have generally tried to contain myself and offer up reasoned and thoughtful positions without bluster.

Mr Bradley: Starting when?

Hon Mr Stockwell: I know Mr Bradley from St Catharines, who blusters regularly in this House, as well as Mr Marchese, who thinks that by simply offering up these theatrics he can substitute that for content, which is not the way to go. The way to go is simply this: we must take a reasoned and thoughtful approach to public policy. Public policy is an intent that we sit down and analyze all the issues before the government and address them in the proper and effective way.

I take great exception to the member opposite taking my name, as well as many others, in vain, prancing about his chair, waving his arms, trying to mimic the member for St Catharines. I think that's unacceptable and no way to behave in this House.

Mr Levac: I appreciate the opportunity—oh, forget it. The real Slim Shady, stand up.

What the member was talking about was some of the concerns he's expressing regarding the rebates and the idea that this $75 is miraculously going to solve the problems of Ontario Hydro. The members on the other side would remember the $200 cheques that were delivered, to the tune of about $1.2 billion worth of taxpayers' money that could have been used for health care, the environment, education, and in this case a combination of the environment and energy production.

There's a concern that 250,000 megawatts of power were not tapped into by Ontario Hydro. If we did a little research—and I know the member opposite made notes of that when he made his deputation—we might have the possibility to generate some energy here. There's about 10% of that power that's waiting for us to tap it. In most of the cases, when I did my research project on this, I found out that those particular places still exist in Ontario and we're still waiting for somebody to hook up some generators to that, so that we can generate approximately 10% of the power that's necessary to have; 250,000 megawatts of power that Ontario Hydro shut down. They purchased it and then shut it down because they wanted to do the nuclear power experiment. And that water that could be used to generate is still there and those dams are still there, just waiting for us to put some generators to work to generate about 10% of the power, 250,000 megawatts. I don't know that hasn't been spoken of and I don't know why the government is so slow to figure that out. That generation is here, it's available and we better start using it. This rebate situation hasn't been discussed with the municipalities. They've got an awful lot to say, and I don't know if the government has listened very well to the municipalities concerned about this particular scheme that they've got working.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Trinity-Spadina has two minutes to respond.

Mr Marchese: I compliment my friends, including my foe Mr Stockwell, who made a very complimentary kind of performance. I loved it; it was beautiful.

But I want to say a couple of things because I've got two minutes. First of all, on the debt, this is the government that said they wanted to fix the debt. Have they fixed the debt? They haven't. What problem did they actually fix? We don't know. We know the problems they've caused, but we don't know what problem they're trying to fix. They're trying to fix a debt that's spiralling because of, first, their incompetence; and, secondly, their privatization sell-off of Ontario Hydro, including the deregulation of the marketplace to the predators these people so love because the pecunia follows them around big time. They haven't solved any debt problem: they've increased it. To solve it you've got to slowly pay it off.

They're going to increase the debt by $1 billion because of this cheque that they're going to send to the taxpayers of Ontario in the next little while. This reptilian cheque that is going before Christmas to appease them won't sell. People like British Energy must be laughing away in Britain and here. These people they leased Bruce for $750 million; they want to sell it off for $1.2 billion. They're going to make a half a billion bucks—predators who are sucking away our energy, making a whole heap of money and taking it away from you as this government increases the debt. This bill is about you getting a cheque to appease you, and I hope you will not be fools enough to accept this bribe from this government, because that's all it is. It's a reptilian bribe before Christmas and it will fail.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Hon Mr Clark: I'll be sharing my time with the member for Peterborough.

Mr Crozier: What a night, they've got ministers speaking.

Hon Mr Clark: Well, thank you for that clarion welcome.

I want to back up a little bit.

Hon Mr Klees: Not too far.

Hon Mr Clark: Not too far; just a little bit; back to around the summer time when the prices started to inch up. As the prices started to inch up, we started to hear from the opposition. To be fair, the NDP were crying about blackouts, brownouts, that the world was coming to an end. Apocalyptic is how you were sounding. And when we came into September and the consumers started to get hit with high prices, and then the opposition, the loyal opposition, started to go apocalyptic. They caught on to Howie; they caught on to the bus.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: They were the fifth horseman.

Hon Mr Clark: The fifth horseman of the apocalypse, that's right. Then they started squealing about high prices—

Mr Bradley: Actually, you did that.

Hon Mr Clark: —but offered no solutions. The member for St Catharines says, "Wait a minute, you did that." Actually, the member for St Catharines is correct, because what happened is that there was a constituency meeting—see, what we do on this side of the House is we actually meet with our constituents—in my riding. I had asked them, as I normally do when constituents are complaining about things, to offer some solutions in terms of what I can suggest to my colleagues. Constituents, let me tell you, contrary to the member over there who said, "Don't be fooled and don't be stupid," are very smart; they elected us twice. Constituents are very smart. They offered four solutions to me: rebate; cap the prices; somehow encourage power generators to come on-line and invest; and conservation.

Mr Bradley: Name names.

Hon Mr Clark: Name names? Councillor Dave Mitchell from Hamilton. Thank you to the member for St Catharines. The councillor brought these suggestions to me and I came here. Lo and behold, the opposition, "Oh, the cabinet's divided because Minister Clark's out there talking about suggestions. Oh, woe is us." There was no division in cabinet. There was no division in caucus. We were doing what we were charged to do: come up with solutions.

We're still waiting for solutions from the Liberals. They didn't have any. As a matter of fact, the government came out with the solution which the constituents have embraced. The phones have gone silent. The constituents are writing letters thanking us for what we did.

What did the leader of the loyal opposition say on 900 CHML? "Mr Green, you might as well have done nothing as do this." Do nothing? He wanted to do nothing. He wanted the prices to stay high because they wanted to run on an election about high hydro prices. We saw the machiavellian strategy of Warren Kinsella and David Axelrod. The Liberals will be running on the strategy "Working for the working families who the terrible Tories are gouging."

Do you know what? We listened to the constituents because it is a democratic society. They offered us solutions in terms of how we could fix the problem: and, lo and behold, we did. As soon as we did that, Mr McGuinty had nothing. His pockets were bare; he had nothing. He didn't have a bus. You guys had a bus. You've still got the bus. He had nothing and he was caught. What did he have? First he said, "Do nothing," and then he turned around and said, "Oh, this is going to kill the province. Investment is done. The market is dead. It's all over."

Then the press started asking questions. I couldn't believe that in a press scrum, a reporter left and came back and said, "I was gone for a couple of minutes; have you changed your mind?" I couldn't believe it. Ow, that one's got to hurt.

The policy was stripped off the Web page and then, in a few days, the policy is back on the Web page. But read the policy carefully because there is nothing there but platitudes, panaceas and placebos, all sugar-coated things and, "The bad Tories, but we're going to be different."

Do you know what? It was the Conservative government that fixed it, that satisfied—

Laughter.

Hon Mr Clark: The member from St Catharines is laughing, but his constituents are no longer calling him. It wasn't his leader that came up with any options—no solutions, no options. We did it. That's why the phones have gone quiet in your office and in mine.

I'm pleased about Bill 210 and I would suspect we'll find that the Liberals will end up supporting it.

The Deputy Speaker: It seems like a good time to take a look at the clock and reflect that we've had enough for this evening. It being nearly 9:30, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 2128.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

GESTION DES ÉLÉMENTS NUTRITIFS

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Je m'adresse aujourd'hui aux ministres de l'Agriculture et de l'Alimentation, et de l'Environnement.

Nous savons que présentement au Québec, il y a un règlement en date du 15 juin 2002 qui empêche tout agrandissement ou nouvelle porcherie à s'établir pour une période de 18 à 24 mois dans 281 municipalités dû à la pollution des nappes phréatiques, en conclusion que la contamination des terres par le phosphore contenu dans le lisier du porc pouvait mener à la contamination de l'eau potable et des puits, et pouvait donc menacer la santé de la population.

Il y aura aussi une étude complète pour étudier le développement durable de l'industrie porcine et de mettre en place des règlements environnementaux afin de contrer les effets néfastes sur la santé et l'environnement.

En Ontario, la Loi sur la gestion des éléments nutritifs vient tout juste de passer sa troisième lecture. Cependant, il n'y a aucune considération ni réglementation en place afin de prévenir les problèmes encourus par les mégaporcheres.

Toute municipalité devrait avoir un règlement intérimaire qui ordonnerait une étude environnementale avant d'émettre un permis aux nouvelles mégaporcheres. Après tout, nous savons tous jusqu'à quel point Walkerton a mis notre santé, notre environnement et notre sécurité en question.

Je demande donc aux ministres de prévenir au lieu de créer une deuxième catastrophe telle que Walkerton et de permettre aux municipalités le refus d'émettre les permis de construction pour ces mégaporcheres.

LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): We've got workers here in the public galleries today from the Sudbury Star, where 75 of their membership of the newspaper guild have been locked out now into their ninth week, and 41 workers from the Cobourg Daily Star and Port Hope Evening Guide, who have been on their picket lines now for eight weeks.

Both of these groups of workers, be it in Sudbury or be it down in Cobourg or Port Hope, are being denied any meaningful bargaining at the negotiating table: locked out, on strike, and seeking the most modest of gains in their contracts, modest wage increases—you should know that the base wages at these workplaces are $8 and $8.50 an hour—some modest improvements in pensions, some modest improvements to benefits.

Why are they out on strike? Why have they been locked out for eight and nine weeks? I'll tell you why: because scabs have been taking their jobs in the workplace; scabs have been crossing their picket lines. I tell you that the New Democratic Party anti-scab legislation in the early part of the 1990s created fewer labour disputes, and when there were strikes or lockouts, they were far shorter. These workers' jobs are being stolen from them by scabs, companies like Corporate Security Services and Accu-Fax, the scum of the corporate world, enforcing scabs and protecting them as they walk through these workers' picket lines to take these workers' jobs. These workers are here to support the New Democratic Party's Bill 214, anti-scab legislation which will restore peace. These workers are here to tell readers of the Sudbury Star, the Cobourg Daily Star and the Port Hope Evening Guide not to buy those papers and advertisers not to advertise until these labour disputes are settled.

Interruption.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Just before we begin, we have some guests in the gallery. Unfortunately, we're not allowed to clap during any of the proceedings. I'd appreciate the co-operation for the members. They may not have been aware of that. I thank them for their co-operation.

The member for Niagara Falls.

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): Thank you—

Interruption.

The Speaker: Order. You've come a long way. We're going to have to throw you out if you do that. I would ask your co-operation. You've come—

Interruption.

The Speaker: You leave me no alternative. I ask security to clear the entire gallery on that side, please; the entire gallery, please, because I don't know who else is coming next. I warned him twice. Everyone out. It's too bad.

Interjection.

The Speaker: That's right. I can't tell the difference.

Interruption.

The Speaker: That's why we did the whole gallery, because that was a different person. I guess we won't need to worry any more.

The member for Niagara Falls—sorry for the interruption.

2010 COMMONWEALTH GAMES BID

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): It's OK, Mr Speaker. I am pleased to rise in the House today to reiterate our government's and my own support for the city of Hamilton's bid for the 2010 Commonwealth Games.

Hamilton was the birthplace of the Commonwealth Games in 1930. The Hamilton bid committee launched their bid book in Hamilton in October 2002, with the support of the Minister of Tourism and Recreation, Frank Klees, and the Minister of Labour and MPP for Stoney Creek, Brad Clark.

Bringing the Commonwealth Games to Hamilton would be an honour for Ontario and Canada. It would demonstrate our capacity to host international sport and multi-sport events. The Commonwealth Games would also involve the greater Toronto area and cities in the Golden Horseshoe such as St Catharines, which might host the rowing event.

Our government is continuing to work with and support the city of Hamilton in their Commonwealth Games bid and other tourism, sport and recreation initiatives. In the past three years, we have committed more than $30 million to support tourism, sport, recreation, culture and other local projects that would help build a solid foundation for the continued growth and prosperity of Hamilton. More than $8 million in community grants has flowed into the Hamilton area from the Ontario Trillium Foundation, and the province has invested more than $4.8 million in grants to local sport, recreation and culture organizations.

We have also invested $2.25 million in the World Cycling Championships being held in Hamilton next year. Through our SuperBuild initiative, we have invested more than $96 million in sport and recreation facilities throughout Ontario, with the approval of 216 sport and recreation facility projects to date. The Ernie Eves government is committed to helping communities attract sporting events that promote Ontario as a world-class tourism destination.

This government is on Hamilton's team, and we look forward to welcoming the world to Canada's greatest province, Ontario.

AVONMORE FALL HARVEST DAY FESTIVAL

Mr John C. Cleary (Stormont-Dundas-Charlottenburgh): I take this opportunity to rise in the House to tell our members of a very successful initiative undertaken by the residents of the small community of Avonmore, Ontario, in my riding.

On October 12, 2002, residents of Avonmore participated in the Fall Harvest Day festival. As part of the celebrations, organizers and residents pulled together to beat the existing Guinness World Record for the largest display of scarecrows. Altogether, 3,102 scarecrows were displayed, beating the existing record of 2,071 held by the residents of Meaford, Ontario.

This community-based event was made possible by the hard work of organizers like Nancy Legue and by the determination of countless volunteers and the students at Roxmore Public School. In addition to establishing a new world record, the festival was able to raise more than $10,000, all of which was invested back into the community public school of Roxmore.

I must also acknowledge that I attended high school in the beautiful community of Avonmore and, as such, I hold this community in very high regard. It is my pleasure to congratulate all those who took part on how they contributed to the festival. I applaud their efforts.

DAVID GRANT

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): Today I rise before the House to pay tribute to a fine individual who has passed away in my riding of Nipissing. Recently, more than 300 people, including members from 65 fire departments across four districts, attended the funeral of Deputy Fire Chief David Grant of the Bonfield Fire Department. The attendance of people indicated what a respected man he was. The ceremony marked the township's first formal firefighter funeral since it became an official fire service in 1971.

David Grant is survived by his wife, Linda, and his two sons, Scott and Sean, both of whom are firefighters with the Bonfield Fire Department. Scott Grant, David's oldest son, has said: "Anyone who knew my dad loved him. He was a very caring man who was always there for his community." David Grant's other son, Sean, agrees with his brother but adds that it's going to be a challenge to get back to firefighting without his father alongside him.

I've spoken with many people who knew Mr Grant, and the underlying theme that was heard from everyone was what a truly unique and caring individual he was. He was very well received by his community and by his co-workers. I would like to say to Linda, Scott and Sean that our thoughts are with you during these difficult days. May you find comfort in your family and friends.

INTERNATIONAL DAY OF DISABLED PERSONS

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): It is my pleasure to rise on this, the International Day of Disabled Persons. It is appropriate that this day is set aside, although it would be nice if we didn't have to, because every day should be the day for these individuals.

I have yet to meet a person with a disability who is disabled. I have been inspired, motivated and enriched by my contact with them. But this is a day for those of us who do not yet have a disability to stand up and speak for our fellow citizens. We need to make changes in this province. We need to listen to individuals with disabilities to meet their needs so we can level the playing field. We need to allow them to work without clawing back all of the money they make. We need to immediately stop building new barriers. Certainly, the goal is to remove existing barriers, but at this present time in Ontario we continue to erect new barriers to those with disabilities.

We need to ensure that those who are unable to work can have a life that is not at or below poverty level. These are our fellow citizens. Everyone in this chamber will ultimately be judged on how they treat Ontarians with disabilities. We need to do more and we can do more. I urge everyone in this House to act immediately, to remove barriers and ensure a life of dignity. These individuals want to have the same access to services and the same opportunity as everyone else. Those doors have yet to be fully opened.

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): It is my pleasure to announce that today is the International Day of Disabled Persons. This day, designated by the United Nations in 1992, is a day to promote increased awareness and understanding of disabled issues.

By observing this day, we take the time to recognize the contributions and achievements of people with disabilities. Barriers must be removed to tap into the full potential offered by those with disabilities. In Ontario, there are more than 1.9 million people with disabilities. Our government is committed to breaking down the barriers faced by these individuals and to ensuring a drive toward full accessibility.

As you know, at this time last year our government passed the Ontarians with Disabilities Act. This legislation is key to our vision of creating a barrier-free society. Additionally, the 12-member Accessibility Advisory Council of Ontario is fully active and helping to assist in moving the Ontarians with Disabilities Act ahead. The Ontarians with Disabilities Act is designed to increase independence for people with disabilities so they have more opportunities to participate fully in our society to the benefit of us all. The ODA is Canada's first and most comprehensive legislation for people with disabilities. It builds on our government's multi-billion dollar commitment to programs and services.

Mr Speaker, honourable members, please take this special day and every day as an opportunity to increase awareness about accessibility for people with disabilities in your communities.

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): There are seven days left in this session before the House adjourns, and presumably before the next provincial election. We are faced with a government that is on the ropes in every sense of the word; a government that has to time-allocate legislation that all three parties in this House support; a government that is tabling 50 FOIs on expenses all at once today. Why? Because they want, I presume, to get all the bad news out at once, all in one day, knowing full well that the auditor's report is today.

And what a report that is. This volume speaks volumes about a government that can't manage its affairs, about a government that puts the interests of its friends ahead of the interests of the people of Ontario, a government that will sacrifice principle for re-election every chance it gets, and this session more than any has demonstrated that; a government with a lack of vision, singularly devoted to one thing, and that is just trying to clean up its own messes.

Yet today, we learn of dozens of other messes that have been created by the policies of one Ernie Eves. Whether as Premier or Minister of Finance, he has presided over the slow deterioration of this province, the mismanagement of the affairs of the government of Ontario. The people of Ontario will cast a very harsh judgment on that record, hopefully early next spring. It's never too late to change. There's a lot of toothpaste to get back in the tube, but this report condemns the government yet again.

MISSISSAUGA FIREFIGHTERS

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): I'm delighted to learn that a trio of female firefighters from Mississauga won the International Firefighter Combat Challenge held in Florida in November 2002. Angie Holman, Tanya Mayers and Tammie Wilson not only finished first, they also set a world record of one minute and 50 seconds in the challenge, which is a gruelling relay race that simulates an actual fire rescue situation.

Only the fastest, fittest and brightest of firefighters can compete at this level. Mississauga's amazing squad achieved their victory even with injuries. One member had a broken finger and another suffered from tennis elbow during the competition. Among the arduous tasks these female firefighters accomplished were carrying a 45-pound hose pack up five flights of stairs, then hoisting a 50-pound rolled hose over an edge; using a nine-pound mallet to drive a 65-pound I-beam a distance of five feet; running through 140 feet of pylons; and dragging a 170-pound rescue dummy a distance of 75 feet.

Dr Paul Davis, founder of the firefighter combat challenge, said of the Mississauga team, "These are the ones you want fighting a fire.... They are the best in the world."

Angie, Tanya and Tammie, Mississauga residents are indeed fortunate to have you in our fire department. We are very proud of you and congratulate you on this remarkable achievement, and the members of our Legislature join in the congratulations.

VISITORS

Mr Ted McMeekin (Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm sure the members of this Legislative Assembly will want to join my esteemed colleague from Hamilton West, David Christopherson, and me in welcoming the grade 9 students from Hillfield-Strathallan College, including those from my daughter Whitney's class. They're in both the east and west galleries. They're accompanied today by Mr Dalton, Mr Warner and Mr Wilkinson. Welcome.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We welcome our guests.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: If I might also draw to the members' attention in the west members' gallery, in addition to the students from Hamilton, my beautiful partner, Denise Doyle, who is here today also.

ANNUAL REPORT,
PROVINCIAL AUDITOR

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that I today laid upon the table the 2002 Annual Report of the Provincial Auditor.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): I beg leave to present a report on enhancing the role of the private member from the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly and move the adoption of its recommendations.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Does the member wish to make a brief statement?

Mrs Marland: I'm very pleased to present this report on enhancing the role of private members and on expanding the role of technology in the House and its committees.

I am doubly pleased because the report was the product of an all-party consensus and I want to thank all the members of this House who participated in the committee meetings that led to the making of this report.

The report recommends that private members' time on Thursday mornings be expanded by two additional hours; that up to three members should be allowed to co-sponsor private members' bills and resolutions; that private members' bills that receive the support of at least 75% of the membership of the House should be fast-tracked for early consideration of, and voting on, all post-second reading stages of the legislative process.

The report also recommends that there should be more referral of bills to committee after first reading, more committee scrutiny of draft bills, more use of select committees, more consistency in the referral of bills to committees and further discussion on quorum requirements to improve fairness and equity for all private members.

Finally, the committee recommends that consideration should be given to more use of technology in the chamber, starting with the table and the dais.

In my 18 years in this Legislature, I have not enjoyed any committee and work of a committee as much as this one, and I do again thank those members for the tremendous amount of commitment, work and homework and for being part of these discussions and producing this report. I congratulate those members and thank them.

I now move adjournment of the debate.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

AUDIT AMENDMENT ACT, 2002
LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LA VÉRIFICATION
DES COMPTES PUBLICS

Mr O'Toole moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 218, An Act to amend the Audit Act to insure greater accountability of hospitals, universities and colleges, municipalities and other organizations that receive grants or other transfer payments from the government or agencies of the Crown / Projet de loi 218, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la vérification des comptes publics afin d'assurer une responsabilité accrue de la part des hôpitaux, des universités et collèges, des municipalités et d'autres organisations qui reçoivent des subventions ou d'autres paiements de transfert du gouvernement ou d'organismes de la Couronne.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I urge the House to give this bill some consideration before they pass judgment. This is about accountability in public sector spending. In light of the fact that the auditor of Ontario, Erik Peters, is here today, it's more out of respect in the circumstances that I ask the opposition to read the bill before they comment and to be accountable to the taxpayers of this province.

VISITEUSE
VISITOR

M<sup>me</sup> Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): Monsieur le Président, j'aurais un point d'ordre: I would like to introduce a good friend of mine in education from Newfoundland who really wanted to visit the Ontario Legislature, Andrée Thoms.

ORAL QUESTIONS

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition):

My question is for the Chair of Management Board. Minister, on the basis of the Provincial Auditor's report tabled today, to be a consultant in Ernie Eves's Ontario is to have died and gone to heaven. You are spending two and a half times as much on consultants this year than you did in 1998. That's $662 million this year. Your consultants are often paid two or three times more than ministry staff to do the exact same work. In fact, in the case of the Ministry of Public Safety and Security, more than 40 consultants are former employees of the ministry. It's like winning the lottery, Minister. You quit the ministry staff on a Monday, and by Wednesday you can get hired back to the same job and get paid more than double your original salary.

How can you possibly justify this incompetence, this mismanagement, this outrageous use of taxpayers' dollars?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): First, I would like to thank the Provincial Auditor for the report. We do welcome his recommendations, as we do every year, as every government does. This is an opportunity for us to improve the way government does business; we recognize that as well.

What I will tell you is this: in terms of the consultants, there are a number of measures which the auditor is requesting or recommending. I'm pleased to tell you that a number of mandatory requirements have been instituted in our directives in order to deal fully with the auditor's concerns.

If I could share some of them, dealing with some mandatory requirements, in terms of the consulting services, the following best practices will now be mandatory requirements: require ministries to fully document the process for determining the availability of internal ministry or government resources prior to acquiring consulting services; clearly define requirements for the assignments; follow an established process for evaluating bids and selecting vendors. These are a few of them.

We have fully agreed to follow all the recommendations of the auditor. We agree with them. They will be instituted.

Mr McGuinty: Minister, all of that is simply all too lame. You've had seven years over there to get your act together and somehow act in a responsible way when it comes to taxpayers' dollars.

Let's take a look at some specific examples. The Ministry of Health paid one consultant $360,000 over a two-year period. When the contract finally ended, they hired a staff person and paid that person $60,000. In short, you paid a consultant three times the cost of hiring a ministry staffer.

One contract at the Ministry of the Environment was supposed to be capped at $25,000 but wound up costing taxpayers $455,000. That's more than 18 times the projected cost. Your own ministry hired one consultant whose rates started at $725 a day in April 2000, doubled to $1,800 a day one month later, and then jumped again to $2,600 a day just four months later.

So you tell me that we haven't got money for textbooks, for MRIs, for affordable housing, for public transit, but in your Ontario, there is no shortage of money when it comes to consultants.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: What I did say, and very clearly, was that the auditor made certain recommendations. We have fully agreed to implement all of them.

I will share some other things with you, if I could. In the annual report of the Provincial Auditor, page 42, he indicates that, "Many of the contracts were continuous arrangements with the same consultants who had previously worked on other ministry projects. For example, four consultants had been under contract to the minister for more than seven years at rates between $250 and $430 daily, earning fees between $60,000 and $100,000 annually. These earnings by consultants were more than double the salaries earned by employees occupying the comparable positions within the ministry."

That was from his report in 1988. That was under the Peterson government, the Liberal government.

I think we should make sure we compare apples to apples and oranges to oranges.

Laughter.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: They think it's funny, but this is their past record.

Every year, the auditor brings forward recommendations. We've agreed to implement them. I would hazard a guess that there has never been an auditor's report that has ever said the government has done a wonderful job.

Mr McGuinty: I can understand why the minister wants to talk about the last millennium, but I want to talk about today's Provincial Auditor's report. I want to talk about your record and the fact that you've had seven years on the job to get your act together, and you've failed to do so.

Again, Minister, you're spending two and a half times as much on consultants today as you did three years ago. You're the guy who promised to get government spending under control. Instead, you cut funding to our hospitals, you've cut funding to our schools, you've cut funding to our seniors and our most vulnerable; but when it comes to consulting friends, there is no shortage of money whatsoever.

You're hiring former ministry staff days after they've quit their jobs to do the same work at two to three times the cost. And you're going to like this one, Minister: the Provincial Auditor points out that some of the people you're hiring don't even pay their taxes. One consultant you hired in your ministry had tax arrears of over $100,000.

I ask you again: at a time when there's no money for MRIs, no money for textbooks, no money for affordable housing, no money for public transit, how can you possibly justify this outrageous use of taxpayers' dollars?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: First of all, let me respond in a couple of ways. The Leader of the Opposition has certainly taken liberties with his expression of his idea of what reality is. The reality is, the hospital budgets have been going up substantially under this government; health care has been going up substantially under this government. I have no idea where he's getting his information. There's no connection to reality.

I will tell you this. Within the auditor's report, he does indicate as well on page 174: "The directive provides adequate direction and guidance to ministries to ensure that, if followed, the planning, competitive acquisition, and management of the use of consulting services are undertaken with due regard for value for money."

Clearly there have been some breaches of the protocol of that directive. We have undertaken to make sure they do not occur. We have in fact taken measures to make sure that these steps are taken care of. Some of the other things we've implemented as well: the Minister of Finance will be required to verify the accuracy of tax declarations submitted by vendors. This information can be made available to the contracting ministry.

We've identified that there has been a problem; the auditor has identified a problem. We've agreed to follow all of his recommendations. Clearly we've taken the steps to ensure that this does not occur.

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD ON LAW AND ORDER

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): A question to the Solicitor General: your abysmal record on law and order has finally been exposed. On the matter of arrests, there are 10,000 outstanding arrest warrants for offenders in Ontario, including high-risk offenders. On the matter of rehabilitation, the auditor tells us, of the 3,000 sex offenders who have been released into the community, 2,400 are not receiving essential rehabilitation. On the matter of supervision, one third of the most serious offenders on parole have reoffended, without any immediate consequences, not even with a change in their parole conditions.

Despite all of your continuing tough talk on crime, it's clear that your incompetence is putting Ontario families at risk. How can you possibly justify this don't arrest, don't rehabilitate and don't supervise approach that you are bringing to serious crime in the province of Ontario?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): We have, obviously, read the Provincial Auditor's comments with respect to outstanding warrants. I think the auditor used a figure of 10,000 outstanding warrants. That was an estimate. He indicated, I gather, in the report that it was an estimate, and it's unfortunate that he extrapolated in the way he did after visiting a number of offices.

The reality is that we did check on CPIC and the number is 5,900. Of the 5,900—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Runciman: I'm not sure they want an answer. Of the 5,900, there were 178 outstanding warrants for level I category offenders.

Mr McGuinty: I'm going to rely on the Provincial Auditor, if you don't mind, when it comes to the facts, and the facts speak for themselves. Today in Ontario, you are only attempting to rehabilitate one out of five sex offenders. Forty per cent of the most serious level I offenders are lacking a risk assessment or a plan to even keep track of them. And yet all these offenders are out on the street, not just at risk of reoffending but actually committing new crimes because you haven't done your job.

Minister, you are putting people's lives at risk. When I talk about level I, as you well know, we're talking about child molesters, sexual assaults, people who commit assaults causing bodily harm and other violent crimes. It is one thing to write press releases and make speeches to the public, sounding tough on crime. It's quite another thing to do your job and to do it well. I'm asking you, Minister, when are you going to start to do your job well and protect public safety in Ontario?

Hon Mr Runciman: I said this last week: a Liberal talking about law and order is a walking, talking oxymoron, like jumbo shrimp.

The reality is that over the past seven years, the Harris and Eves governments have done more to improve public safety in this province than any other provincial government in Canada. On a regular basis, we have brought issues to this House. I'll just raise one, since the member opposite is talking about sex offenders. This government is the first and only government in Canada to bring in a sex offender registry to track sex offenders in this province. We have attempted to get the federal government to move on this issue. As of today, nothing is happening.

The Leader of the Opposition is trying to change his image and convince Ontarians and Canadians that they are for public safety, that they are for tough law and order. The track record of that member and his party proves just the opposite.

Mr McGuinty: We have more of the same: all talk, all bluster. When it comes to the facts, we choose to rely on what the Provincial Auditor said in his report. The facts are that this government's record when it comes to arrests, rehabilitation and supervision is absolutely abysmal. I think this minister and this government should be embarrassed when it comes to their record on law and order issues in Ontario.

We have a plan for safe and strong communities. We call for 100 more parole and probation officers to make sure that offenders are in fact being properly supervised. We're calling for 1,000 more police officers to start enforcing the 10,000 arrest warrants. We're also calling for 50 additional prosecutors beyond those this government is hiring. Minister, our plan is tough on crime. You're all talk; you're all bluster. We've got a plan here that's going to get the job done.

Hon Mr Runciman: I think that's not going to wash with any of the public or the voters in Ontario. When you talk about what's happened in policing and in public safety in Ontario, we can talk about the 1,000 new police officers this government put on the front lines. We can talk about the violent crime linkage and analysis system we put in place to track serial predators across this province. When you talk about victims' rights, no government in the country has done more for victims of crime than the Ontario government under Harris and Eves. There's the sex offender registry.

We can ask the members opposite what their stand has been on the Young Offenders Act in this country. What has their stand been on dealing in an effective way with young offenders committing serious crimes in the province? What has their stand been on the strict discipline facility for young offenders that this government put in place? What's their stand on the Club Fed resorts the federal Liberal government runs across this country? We know their stand. Ontarians know their stand. It's weak-kneed at best.

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I have a question for the acting Premier. Your habit of picking the pockets of Ontarians to benefit your corporate buddies has become an addiction. The auditor says you shelled out $246 million for one of your favourite consultants, Andersen Consulting, although they've now changed their name to Accenture to cover their tracks. What did you get for $246 million of public money? The auditor says that $66 million was just a giveaway and $22.2 million was for work that government employees should have done and could have done. Then he says that at the end of the day, the product you got doesn't work.

Now the auditor finds that you've extended the contract for another $38 million. Acting Premier, if you can't kick the habit of fleecing Ontarians to benefit your corporate friends, don't you think it's time you went in for rehabilitation?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): That was kind of a funny question. I'll refer the question to the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague across the way for the question. We're very pleased to receive the auditor's report. We appreciate the work he does in the public interest, and we welcome his recommendations. I would like to inform my colleagues here in the Legislature that most of the issues addressed by the auditor in his report were issues that our ministry was aware of and in fact had already been working on.

Let me talk about the program that my colleague across the way is referencing. We had in Ontario a system to deliver assistance to those who require social services that was literally archaic. It was a very, very old system, completely incapable of delivering the kind of service, the information needed, not only for those people who needed the service but for those who were delivering the service.

We undertook a major transformation in our ministry to implement a huge new computer system: eight systems integrated into one. It has been a mammoth undertaking.

Mr Hampton: To that the auditor says the whole thing doesn't work. After a quarter of a billion dollars, it doesn't work. The reality out there is that Andersen Consulting, who have now changed their name to Accenture to hide from the public, and some of your other consultant friends are reaping hundreds of millions of dollars and the people are getting nothing for it.

Let me give you some examples. At Environment, you paid $455,000 for a contract that was supposed to cost $25,000. At Management Board, you gave a $1.7-million contract without a competition. You just called up one of your friends and said, "Would you like $1.7 million?" At SuperBuild Corp, your mistake resulted in a $681,000 gift to a financial adviser and a contract that cost $3 million when it was only supposed to cost $1.5 million. I'm surprised you guys haven't hired Winona Ryder as a consultant, given your record.

The question is, when are you going to cut off your corporate friends and start looking after the public of Ontario that wants to see money for schools, that wants to see money for health care, that wants to see money for child care? When do you start looking after them?

Hon Mrs Elliott: Speaker, to the Chair of Management Board.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: That gives me an opportunity to continue with what I was saying in terms of the improvements we've done following the recommendations of the Provincial Auditor. I'm sure the leader of the third party wants to hear these.

These are the new mandatory requirements that are added to the directives to ensure effective management of consulting service assignments. First, all payments must be in accordance with contractual provisions. Second, all payments for applicable expenses must be in accordance with the travel management and general expense directive. Third, any overpayment of fees and expenses must be recovered, unlike other governments before. Fourth, all consulting assignments must be properly documented annually. Fifth, the vendor's performance must be managed and documented. Any performance issues must be resolved and reported to the Management Board Secretariat. Last, all required approvals must be obtained for all changes of scope in terms and conditions of agreements.

There are a number of very technical things that we have now managed, following the recommendations of the auditor, to tighten up on behalf of the people of Ontario to ensure there's more accountability to the system. There are a number of others on another list I have. If we ever continue this, I will certainly share that with the public of Ontario.

Mr Hampton: And the auditor says to that that you aren't following your own rules, that the lure to provide some booty to your corporate friends means that you routinely ignore these rules.

Another example: your privatizations. The auditor points to your Hydro privatization and he says that just in the last year you've added $700 million more debt and the taxpayers have had to pick up $341 million in debt financing charges. So get this: your private hydro friends are making money hand over fist, but the people of Ontario have had to pick up another $1 billion in costs.

I ask the question again, acting Premier: when are you going to stop looking after the greed of your corporate friends and start looking after all of the things that the ordinary people of Ontario need: the schools, the hospitals, the environment, child care, all of the things that the average family out there is asking for? When do you start looking after them instead of looking after your corporate friends?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Since I have the floor, I'm going to continue talking about the measures we've taken to follow the recommendations of the auditor.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: You might think it's funny but I think it's serious. I've got a whole list of things that I can relate in terms of your government that you didn't follow. But rather than do that at this time—maybe I'll save it for the next time you come back—I'll share with the public some of the measures we're taking, and we're honestly and sincerely trying to follow these recommendations of the auditor because they're important.

The auditor recommended the establishment of an improved process for collecting information on the ministry use of vendors of record. We're now requiring the ministries to provide annual reports to the Management Board Secretariat on the use of consulting services, including vendors of record and their performance in managing the process of planning, acquiring and managing consulting services during the fiscal year.

What that means is this, if I can put it in understandable English: we're requiring a set of accountabilities that will not only seek to manage what they're doing during the course of the contract, but also after the contract is completed, to have a report done then to make sure that the money has been best spent for the people of Ontario. These are measures we believe are very important to follow the directions of the auditor.

CORPORATE TAX

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): To the acting Premier again, the auditor says this has been going on for seven years and is just getting worse. You've shown yourself, as a government, to be really tough on the poor and the vulnerable, but when it comes to the rich and the powerful, you disappear. You're a real pussycat. Today's auditor's report reveals that almost half of Ontario's corporations have not even filed tax returns for the audit year; 355,000 corporations didn't bother filing tax returns for this corporate year. The auditor says you're not even trying to collect those corporate taxes. When it comes to cracking down on the little guy for sales tax or going after the poor, boy, your government is a real pit bull. The question is, why are you so soft when it comes to getting your corporate friends just to pay their taxes?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): I refer that to the Minister of Finance.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): I would agree with the honourable member that whether you are an individual, whether you are a company, you have to pay the taxes that you owe. First of all, our government believes very firmly that individuals and small businesses and companies should be paying less tax, and we have been taking steps to ensure that occurs; but what tax is owed should be collected and that's why the ministry is implementing the auditor's recommendations. In addition, we have hired 750 auditors, investigators, collectors and compliance staff and we are collecting over $400 million in tax that is owed to the taxpayers of Ontario. We will continue that record because, I agree, taxes that are owed should be paid.

Mr Hampton: I agree. When it comes to going after the little guy for sales tax or when it comes to going after someone who received $10 or $20 more in a social assistance cheque, boy, you're really tough.

Some of these corporations actually work for your government. They're consulting companies that haven't been paying your taxes and then you hire them. For example, Mr Tough-on-Crime there, the Minister of Public Safety: they've hired lots of consultants who don't bother paying their taxes, and you hire them again. Management Board—the minister who is supposed to be looking after all this—hired a consulting company that's dodging $110,000 in taxes.

Premier, acting Premier, Minister of Finance—I don't care who it is over there—don't you think you could at least get the consultants you're feeding money to to pay their taxes?

Hon Mrs Ecker: The honourable member may think 750 investigators to investigate those companies and those organizations that owe tax is insignificant. He may think that $400 million in increased revenue because of our tax enforcement procedures is not relevant. We on this side of the House would disagree. We are taking steps to improve enforcement, to improve auditing procedures, to improve the information technology that allows the ministry to know which companies are there, which ones should pay tax to the government, and we will continue to do that because we think that is right, is responsible and is being accountable.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We'll stop the clock. In the members' east gallery we have a former colleague, Mr Leo Jordan, the member for Lanark-Renfrew in the 35th and 36th Parliaments.

LONG-TERM-CARE FACILITIES

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition):

My question is for the Minister of Health. Minister, I want to talk to you today about your failure when it comes to taking care of Ontario's frail elderly.

Last year you commissioned a PricewaterhouseCoopers study that found Ontario has the lowest standards of care of all jurisdictions reviewed. It said that we're providing the lowest quality of care, that our frail and elderly are not getting the physiotherapy they need, and that you are restraining the elderly much more frequently than you should be. What's more disturbing, as we discover today in the Provincial Auditor's report more than a year later, after that original PricewaterhouseCoopers study, is that the auditor found "no evidence to indicate that the ministry had addressed the results of the study."

Minister, can you please stand up and explain why it is that you have obviously decided to completely abandon Ontario's frail elderly?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I believe the associate minister can provide an excellent answer to that question.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I want to begin by thanking the Provincial Auditor for his report today. At the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, we take the auditor's report very seriously. We always strive to do better at the ministry. In fact, our inspections are on target for this year. If you look back to 1995, there were 33 full-time compliance advisors at the ministry; today there are 42. The ministry has taken action, for example, against Oakville Lifecare for non-compliance. We do not issue idle threats when it comes to ensuring the health and well-being of the most vulnerable in our long-term-care facilities in this province.

I also want to add that, back on July 31 of this year, we invested an additional $100 million in new money to provide better nursing and personal care to seniors and those who require long-term-care services in our facilities. On top of that, we have added some 20,000 new long-term-care beds to the system through our $1.2-billion investment in new and redeveloped long-term-care beds in this province.

Mr McGuinty: I can appreciate that recitation, Minister, but the Provincial Auditor tells us you are failing miserably when it comes to living up to your responsibility to protect Ontario's frail elderly. Here are the facts: the auditor says you have no standards of care in our nursing homes, something we've been telling you for years. He says that at the time of his investigation, not a single nursing home in Ontario had an up-to-date licence. He tells us that most homes that opened after 1998 have never been issued a licence.

Minister, you're supposed to be the one protecting our seniors, standing on guard for them and implementing tough and rigorous standards. On the other hand, you have removed the requirement to have a registered nurse on duty, on-site, at all times; you have removed the minimum 2.25 hours of personal care nursing each day; and you won't even guarantee our parents and grandparents one bath a week.

I ask you again, why will you not stand up here and admit that when it comes to living up to your responsibilities to protect Ontario's frail elderly, you have been nothing short of an abysmal failure?

Hon Mr Newman: Again, we take the auditor's report very seriously. We are striving to do better. Yes, it is true that we need to do a better job with our paperwork when it comes to facility licences in this province, but our focus has been on providing even better care for residents. I can say that as of September 1, 2002, each and every nursing home in this province does have a current and valid licence to operate.

The Leader of the Opposition today said he takes the word of the Provincial Auditor. Well, let's look at what the Provincial Auditor said in 1990. In 1990, when he was reporting on the David Peterson government, the Provincial Auditor reported that there were inadequate inspection procedures for homes for the aged in place in this province. In the same auditor's report of 1990, he also pointed out that the procedures used by the Liberal government of that day to monitor the quality of care in nursing homes required significant improvement.

The fact is, it is our government that took action to fix the problems caused by the Liberals and the NDP. That is why we will not take a lecture from the opposition parties when it comes to the provision of long-term-care services in this province.

NUTRIENT MANAGEMENT

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): My question today is for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Farmers in my riding and across Ontario are extremely interested in the ongoing consultations related to the Nutrient Management Act. They appreciate the extent to which our government is prepared to listen to their concerns and to ensure that we not only protect our rural water supply but also maintain the competitiveness of the vital agri-food industry.

Minister, I understand that last week at the Ontario Federation of Agriculture convention you made an important announcement related to nutrient management. Can you explain for the members here in the House today, as well as the farmers across Ontario, the details of this particular announcement?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I'd like to thank the member for his question and also thank him for his commitment and enthusiastic support of the agricultural community, not only in his riding but in the province of Ontario.

Our government has recently completed the first round of discussions on the nutrient management plan. We have gone to a number of places, addressed the content of the requirements and done a lot of work with respect to that.

At the Ontario Federation of Agriculture meeting last week, I introduced stage 2 regulations. We had a discussion about how we might proceed forward with them, and it was agreed upon by the farm groups and myself that we would enter into stage 2 of the consultations starting in December and continuing through January. During that time we will be talking about the construction and siting of barns, about issues such as quality standards for the land application of nutrients and about nutrient management plans.

It's a good time for the agricultural community to get involved in the nutrient management legislation that's coming forward.

Mr Dunlop: As I mentioned earlier, farmers, municipalities, environmental groups and other stakeholders are showing a great interest in participating in the consultation process. Could you inform the Legislature on how many people participated in the stage 1 consultations and how and where these people can become involved in the stage 2 consultations?

Hon Mrs Johns: I'd like to thank the member again and say that during stage 1 consultations we heard at the hearings from about 580 people. We also got a number of written submissions. Everyone could write in, either through the EBR, the OMAF Web site or the environment Web site, so we got some pretty clear and consistent messages.

It is now our pleasure to be able to go out on the second set, and we'll be starting those in December. We intend to be in Mississauga on December 11. I believe my parliamentary assistant, Toby Barrett, will be there. We will also be doing consultations on December 13 in Teeswater, on December 16 in Brockville and Trenton—Doug Galt will be doing those—and on December 19 in Grimsby. So we're going to have a lot of discussion in December and again in January. All people have to do is either check the environment Web site or the OMAF Web site if they want to know the location closest to them, and we ask you to get involved.

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): My question is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. For the second year in a row, the Provincial Auditor has identified that you have completely lost control of a consulting contract in your ministry. The auditor confirmed that in March of this year, your ministry had paid Accenture $240 million—$66 million more than the $180-million cap set by your government.

You told us this system would save taxpayers money, yet the auditor indicates that the benefits reported by your ministry "continue to be ... questionable." Further, the auditor states, the delivery system implemented in January 2002 is "in many respects a step back from what had previously been available."

1430

In the Kitchener-Waterloo Record it is reported that the local social services committee says your system is costing too much and the service is poor. The new computer system that you've already mentioned is riddled with glitches, delays and errors.

Minister, can you please explain to the taxpayers of Ontario why you have allowed—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the member's time is up.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): To my colleague across the way I say thank you for the question. As I indicated earlier, we're very pleased to receive the auditor's report. We had already been alerted to the number of concerns that he noted in his report and have been working diligently to address them.

I want to explain to my colleague across the way first of all that we undertook a mammoth change in our ministry in finding ways to deliver services. It was a change required not only for those to receive better services, but to assist those who offer the service. It is enormous. For instance, the average daily volume of transactions in delivering this huge program is 1.3 million transactions per day delivering services to more than 600,000 people. It replaced eight outdated systems with one system. It was a very complicated change. The auditor undertook a review of this process while it was still being rolled out. A number of the changes he noted have since been improved. Is there more to do? Probably yes—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

Mrs Dombrowsky: Minister, what is mammoth is the amount of money you have wasted on a system that isn't as good as the one you're replacing. You cite improvements. The auditor cannot find any. You are spending hundreds of millions of taxpayers' money on a case management system that is not more efficient. The auditor would indicate your system is less efficient. He reports that with this new system the ministry had little assurance that only eligible individuals receive the correct amount of financial assistance. That's what it's supposed to do.

Minister, you've had two years and what have you done? Instead of getting to the bottom of these inefficiencies and addressing the problems, sources in the industry would indicate that your ministry has quietly renewed its contract with Accenture. This scathing report from the auditor demands that you release the details of your new service contract, include how much it will cost, and explain what you are going to do to assure the people of Ontario that no more taxpayer dollars will be wasted on a system that isn't as good as the one it replaced.

Hon Mrs Elliott: While we definitely appreciate the work that the auditor does which allows us to work to improvement, I can say to my colleague across the way that certainly, from our side of the House, we do have a different view. In my hand are letters of support from a number of people who have definitely indicated to us that the system is working. Let me again say to my colleague across the way what we have changed: eight archaic systems into one modern system, a system that allows individuals who are accessing information from individuals requiring service all across the province to ask consistent questions, get consistent information—something that was never possible in days past; on-line processing that allows instant responses to a constituent so they don't have to wait for up to 14 days as they did in days past; more personal response—someone can call up now and get information and know in moments whether or not they are going to be eligible for service, rather than what we had in days past. It is a greatly improved system. It will be more improved as days pass.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): My question also is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services, the hard-working, energetic minister from Guelph, the Honourable Brenda Elliott. Last week a member of the opposition talked about a form that he said would make it very difficult for Ontario disability support program recipients. He claimed the recipients would have to know all of their medical appointments and needs a year in advance. Minister, I cannot believe this is true. My wife and kids, my neighbours and friends can't believe that this is true. Nobody believes this is true. I've always maintained this government does everything we can to improve the lives of individuals with disabilities. Minister, what is this form, what is this misguided member talking about and what have you done to improve the application process for Ontario Disability Support Program recipients who are in need of these benefits?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): To my very hard-working colleague from Perth-Middlesex, I'm glad he didn't believe it is true, because in fact it is not.

We've worked very hard to improve services for those who are disabled in Ontario, and that includes the application process, again working to replace haphazard, cumbersome forms of days past with a single application form that was designed with assistance from those in the Ontario Medical Association along with our ministry officials. We moved from an after-the-fact type of system to an upfront form of application, which was particularly helpful to citizens who might have an ongoing medical problem.

Let me give you an example. If someone was going to require dialysis treatment, this disabled individual could speak to their doctor, have the form filled out indicating how much care was going to be needed, how many treatments were going to be needed for an extended period of time. That could then be submitted to our ministry office and the funds flowed up front as opposed to after the fact with each individual service, and so make life easier for that person who's not only disabled but in fact ill.

Mr Johnson: I knew the Minister would not introduce a form that would make it more difficult for ODSP recipients.

Mr Johnson: I knew you'd use all your influence to do the right thing, unlike the opposition.

To eliminate the confusion, Minister, I'd like you to stand in your place and clarify for me and all of us once and for all why this is a better system, and can you still help people who face unexpected or emergency medical costs?

Hon Mrs Elliott: It was very important that we provide the flexibility for someone to be able to get care and manage their funds at the same time. So we have this new form that the client can fill out with the doctor to anticipate what kinds of costs are going to be needed in the future, which can be initialled each time they go to the doctor's office to verify that that care has been given. In the case of an emergency, we have the flexibility that a receipt can still be submitted. That cost can still be reimbursed to that disabled individual who has required medical attention.

Why did we do this? Because it matters to us that we work to make the lives of those disabled better in the province of Ontario. Whether it's filling out forms or getting care, they can count on the Eves government to be behind them and to help them in every way possible.

LONG-TERM-CARE FACILITIES

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a question to the Associate Minister of Health. Your government has abandoned Ontario seniors who live in long-term-care facilities. The auditor makes it clear today that you have no idea how or where nursing dollars are being spent. You have no staff-to-patient ratios, so you can't guarantee that the frail and elderly are receiving quality care in these institutions.

In 1995 the auditor told your government to renew the standards for hands-on nursing care, and you cancelled those standards altogether. You've done absolutely nothing about the shocking results of the 2001 report, which clearly showed that Ontario seniors are at the bottom of the heap when it comes to receiving nursing, bathing and therapy services.

Minister, admit it today. You have no idea where these dollars are going, and you can't guarantee that Ontario seniors in long-term-care facilities are receiving quality care.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I want to thank the Provincial Auditor for his report today, and to state again that we take his report very seriously.

He did point out some areas that the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care could show some improvement in, and we are doing that. For the member opposite to say we have done nothing for long-term care is absolutely wrong. We have done 100 million things since July 31 this year, when we announced $100 million in new funding for nursing and personal care, so that each and every nursing home, municipal home for the aged and charitable home in this province would get additional money so that additional nurses, additional personal care workers and additional health care aides could be added to the system.

We might want to look at what the Provincial Auditor said about the NDP in 1995. He said the NDP was aware of significant growth projected for the population over age 65 in this province, but they simply did not have a strategy for dealing with the anticipated increase in demand for long-term-care services. It was this government that acted by building the 20,000 beds.

Ms Martel: Minister, the auditor made it clear: you don't have a clue where your long-term health care dollars are going. He said that you have no standards of care for hands-on nursing, that you have no staff-to-patient ratios, that you were not issuing licences to new nursing homes that opened after 1998 and that you have no system in place to monitor those facilities that regularly fail to meet compliance standards. In short, you don't have a clue what's going on and you can't guarantee that the $100 million you announced in July is ever going to go into improving patient care.

Minister, when are you going to implement standards of care in Ontario nursing homes so that Ontario seniors will be at the top instead of at the bottom of receiving quality care?

Hon Mr Newman: I can say that this government has taken long-term care much more seriously than your government did when you were in office. In fact, the NDP government didn't add a single net new bed to the system. In the 10 years from 1988 to 1998, there wasn't one net new bed added to the long-term-care system in this province. The Provincial Auditor pointed out to the NDP in 1995 that there was a growing and aging population in this province. He pointed out that they had no strategy in place to deal with that growing and aging population. They were not adding beds to the system.

It was this government that in 1998 moved forward on an ambitious plan: $1.2 billion and 20,000 new beds added to the system, up to 16,000 beds in our older facilities being updated, as well as the record investment announced on July 31 of this year of $100 million. That's 100 million things we've done for long-term care in this province to ensure we're improving the nursing and personal care of our most vulnerable residents of this province in Ontario's long-term-care facilities.

CORPORATE TAX

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the auditor's report. One of the most shocking things in it, among many, was the fact that it looks like about half of Ontario's corporations are not even bothering to file a corporate tax return.

In your answer earlier you indicated that, well, you've taken steps now, but I want to know the answer to this: the auditor points out that the reason for it happening is that the Eves government has stopped enforcing things. Since 1995, you don't even send out a letter telling people to file. Since 1997, you don't send out a letter saying that if they don't file, there will be some action taken. So the government deliberately did not follow up on half of the corporations in this province not filing taxes.

I want to know the answer to this: why did the Eves government allow this non-filing to double, and why did you refuse to send out the letters telling people to get their income tax in?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): First of all, I disagree with the assertion in the honourable member's question. We have indeed taken steps going back to 1996 to put in place improved procedures, to hire new staff to make sure we were going out and collecting tax that was owed to the Ontario government, to the taxpayers. As a matter of fact, we collected over $1.4 billion this spring. As of March this spring, we have collected over $1.4 billion in taxes that are owed to the government, taxes that were owed that had not been paid. There was a $400-million increase from what we anticipated we would get.

The improved enforcement procedures are working. Do we need to do more? Absolutely. That's why we started with the last auditor's report to put in place improved procedures. They have been coming on-line on a regular basis. We are improving the enforcement. We are improving the amount of money we're bringing in. We thank the auditor for his continued vigilance in this area, and we will continue to implement his recommendations as we improve tax collection in the province.

Mr Phillips: Listen, I think the public understand and pay attention to the Provincial Auditor. I've been saying about the government, don't listen to what they say; watch what they do. The auditor's report shows half of the corporations not filing their returns. The auditor's report says the major reason for that is because of the government. The auditor's report—the people of Ontario, I think, have confidence in the Provincial Auditor. This is what he says: this increase is “largely attributable to the ministry's reduced efforts.” Default notifications haven't gone out since 1995. “The threat to cancel a corporation's charter and seize its assets” hasn't gone out “since 1997.”

It's very clear. Despite all of your rhetoric, the auditor has found you out. I say again to you on behalf of the Premier, how in the world could you allow the number of corporations in this province, virtually half of them, to not be filing corporate income tax, when people in this province are begging for money for health care and education?

Hon Mrs Ecker: The reason we have had over a billion dollars' worth of tax revenue collected that was owed to us as of March 31, this spring, is because of the steps we have taken and are continuing to take to improve the collection of taxes in this province: over 750 auditors and investigators; new information technology; new field audits; training of staff. The auditor has continued to push us in this area. We agree with his recommendations. We've started taking steps since 1996 and we will continue to take steps because, whether it's an individual, a small business or a company, if taxes are owed, they should be paid.

FIREARMS CONTROL

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): My question today is for the Minister of Public Safety and Security. As all members of this House are aware, an ongoing battle has been waged in the streets of Toronto over the last few weeks involving gun violence. Far too many people have lost their lives in the violence involving a firearm. In fact, at least one victim, the individual who had illegally overstayed his short-term entry visa, was a resident of my riding.

I think all Canadians understand that the federal government is supposedly moving forward with gun control. They have every right to question how all of these crimes can be committed when, supposedly, guns are controlled in this country. The legislation is designed to keep firearms out of the hands out of the wrong people. I wonder how the minister can explain how all these crimes are being committed with guns in the city of Toronto.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): Thanks to the member for Scarborough East for the question. The sad fact is that the gun control legislation brought in by the federal Liberals simply does not work, nor evidently does the sentencing associated with gun-related crime. The federal cousins of our friends across the floor have spent far too much of taxpayers' hard-earned dollars on a registry that fails to target criminals and instead targets the farm widow who has an antique shotgun stored in her attic.

In addition, the sentences and fines that are given out to offenders who use a weapon in the execution of crimes is hardly a deterrent. The fines are often just the cost of doing business for criminals and criminal groups, and the sentences they receive are often plea bargained down.

We have called on the federal Liberals to not only invest dollars into front-line policing initiatives, such as our community policing partnership, but also to create stiffer sentences for crimes that involve the use of a weapon.

Mr Gilchrist: I thank the minister for his response. Much like we've seen with the Romanow report this week, where the federal government is trying to suggest that just because there are some recommendations out there, magically a problem has been solved. Contrary to what the members across in this House think, we on this side of the House are not at all surprised to hear the auditor's report suggest that the billion-dollar boondoggle that has been federal gun control legislation has not protected the people of the province of Ontario. In fact, I'm sure that the fed's own auditor will agree and will go into great detail to comment about the failures of the federal legislation.

As well, it's quite obvious that the members opposite have no idea what it takes to implement a law-and-order agenda since they've simply photocopied ours.

Our government is onside with victims of crime and the law-abiding citizens of this province. I would like to ask you to tell the members of this House what we've done here in Ontario to try and get a grip on gun violence in this province.

Hon Mr Runciman: I'm pleased to see the member for Scarborough East has pointed out the fact that the Liberals here in Ontario are just as weak with their law-and-order agenda as their cousins in Ottawa. The Dalton-come-lately approach just won't sell.

I'm proud to say that our government does take the issue of gun violence very seriously. One example is the OPP's provincial weapons enforcement unit. This unit has an ongoing relationship with other police forces, as well as the RCMP, to reduce the flow of guns into Canada. Their projects have seen quite a number of firearms taken out of the hands of criminals in Ontario. In fact, this year to date they've seized 807 weapons and laid 230 charges. That's over 800 weapons that would have been used to terrorize our neighbourhoods that are now safely out of the hands of criminals. The Toronto police weapons unit is also making successful seizures.

We are making headway, but with increased support from the federal Liberal government, we could clearly make greater gains. It's time the federal Liberals got off the bench and into the game.

HYDRO ONE

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Minister of Finance. The Provincial Auditor today gave a significant warning on the electricity front; I might add that I think the auditor has been very vigilant in this area on behalf of taxpayers. The warning he gave us today was about selling off more assets of Hydro One. He urges the government to be very cautious in selling off assets, because if you sell off the 49% of Hydro One, that revenue cannot be used to pay down the stranded debt. He is concerned, as we are, that over the next few weeks it is your government's intention to sell it off. Recognizing that the auditor has now warned you sufficiently, can you announce today that the plans for the sale of 49% of Hydro One are not going to proceed?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): As the Premier and this government outlined in the spring, we have started a process for a strategic partner to assist the government in bringing private sector discipline into Hydro One. I think some of the discoveries that have occurred in the last couple of months would certainly show the need for that. Second, we need investment in the system, and a strategic partner will help us do that. We have a competitive process out there. At the end of the day, we will make a decision in the best interests of Ontario taxpayers when the bids are in.

Mr Phillips: Well, I love the private sector discipline Mr Farlinger has brought to the management of Hydro for the last eight years.

You are, I gather, confirming that it is your intention to proceed to sell a significant portion of Hydro One. You told the Legislature a few weeks ago that this would be done in a public way. We've since found out it's all being done behind closed doors, privately, with a deal that will be signed, the contents of which the public may never get to see.

Recognizing what the auditor has warned us, the Legislature, about—this is his message of warning to us today—will you agree not to proceed with the sale of Hydro One unless you bring forward any deal—we are against the deal, by the way—for approval here by the Legislature in public? Will you agree to that today, if you will not agree to simply do what the auditor is recommending and cancel the sale completely?

Hon Mrs Ecker: If the honourable member is seriously suggesting that we should debate the finer points of electricity, the hydro transmission lines and offers here at the table, then he doesn't understand much about the competitive process that is laid out to have bidders assessed in an appropriate way to make sure the offer is good for Ontario taxpayers. That is exactly what we are doing. It is a process where the criteria are out there, where the bidders have an opportunity to make their case.

At the end of the day, what is important here is that there be private sector investment in the hydro transmission lines, that consumers can be assured that the system will function the way it is supposed to, so that the electricity system can function the way they want it to function, that when they turn on a light the power is there, and also to ensure that the organization is being run in the most cost-effective fashion possible.

We laid these criteria out in the spring. Those are the criteria we will—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

INDEPENDENT HEALTH FACILITIES

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): My question is to the Minister of Health. As the Romanow report makes clear, Ontario is the leader in health innovation across Canada.

Interjections.

Mr Maves: It's true. Pardon my voice, Speaker.

There are almost 1,000 independent health facilities currently operating in Ontario right now. These IHFs offer services such as CT scans, X-rays, laboratory testing and dialysis. All are privately owned facilities providing Ontarians with quality, publicly funded health care services.

Could the minister please clarify once and for all for this Legislature that our plan to extend access to MRI services in Ontario through privately owned facilities is acceptable under the Canada Health Act? Could the minister also explain that this plan is consistent with our established practices—by the way, originated by the Liberal Party of Ontario and followed through on by the third party since 1990—that govern the hundreds of independent health facilities currently operating in Ontario today?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I thank the honourable member for the question. As I've said on many occasions, our approach to MRIs and especially the legislative, regulatory and contractual protections to prevent queue jumping is not only consistent with the Canada Health Act, but is a model for other provinces contemplating enhanced access for their citizens. As the Premier said yesterday in this Legislature, we have spoken to Mr Romanow, we have talked with his officials at the commission about this and we have their support for our approach and its specific protections.

I welcome the opportunity soon to cut ribbons on these new clinics to serve the people of Ontario, to reduce wait times and to get better health outcomes, which of course is the goal of at least the members on this side of the Legislature. As the member for Niagara Falls mentioned, there are many private labs, many X-ray clinics, many other such institutions that exist in this country. It's like when you visit your family doctor or local clinic. The buildings you go to are privately owned and run, yet the service—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

VISITORS

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Today in our gallery we have representatives from the Yonge-Bloor-Bay Business Association that I was very happy to speak with not long ago, if they could rise and have applause: Rose Hahn, Norman Bergstein, our own Douglas Jure—I love to say that—and of course Jon Johnson is also here and is well known as one of the pre-eminent authors for books regarding NAFTA. Perhaps you wouldn't mind standing and taking a bow.

PETITIONS

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% over three years, or $3.02 per diem in the first year and $2 in the second year and $2 in the third year effective September 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable" citizens "more than $200 a month after three years; and

"Whereas this increase is above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario for 2002; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors, who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase over three years in accommodation costs to no more than the cost-of-living increase annually and that the provincial government provide adequate funding for nursing and personal care to a level that is at least the average standard for nursing and personal care in those 10 jurisdictions included in the government's own study."

I affix my signature. I am in complete agreement with this petition.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): Yesterday there was another tragic accident along Highway 69. This petition deals with the multi-laning of that Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas, in the last three years, 46 people have tragically died" on that highway between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas so far this year 10 people have been tragically killed" driving between Sudbury and Parry Sound along Highway 69; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action"—not promises, not rhetoric, but immediate action—"is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of any government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government clearly has failed to do so;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Harris-Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

Of course, I sign this petition, and I give it to Garnet to bring to the table.

DÉRÈGLEMENTATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): J'ai une pétition ici qui contient plus de 3 500 noms, ce qui porte à plus de 6 500 signatures de citoyens concernés.

« À l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario:

« Attendu que le gouvernement Harris-Eves a déréglementé le marché de l'électricité ontarien le 1<sup>er</sup> mai 2002 sans que cela ait fait partie de ses programmes de 1995 ou 1999 et sans mandat de la population de l'Ontario;

« Attendu que le prix de l'électricité a atteint des niveaux outrageux, augmentant parfois de 100 % depuis le 1<sup>er</sup> mai 2002 et causant de graves difficultés financières aux Ontariens et Ontariennes;

« Attendu qu'Ontario Power Generation (qui appartient au gouvernement de l'Ontario) a demandé à la Commission de l'énergie de l'Ontario la permission de réduire de 20 % le rabais promis aux Ontariens et Ontariennes si le prix de l'électricité dépassait les 3,8 cents le kilowattheure;

« Attendu que l'instauration d'un climat de concurrence dans le marché de l'électricité a été gênée par l'incertitude engendrée par les tentatives du gouvernement Harris-Eves de vendre une portion d'Hydro One et qu'un tel manque de concurrence a eu un effet à la hausse sur les prix;

« Attendu que le gouvernement Harris-Eves a autorisé le versement de salaires et primes exorbitants de l'ordre de 2,2 $ millions par année à l'ancienne présidente de Hydro One et au-delà de 1,6 $ millions par année au vice-président d'Ontario Power Generation;

« Nous, soussignés, demandons au gouvernement Harris-Eves de prendre des mesures immédiates pour faire en sorte que les Ontariens et Ontariennes payent ce service essentiel qu'est l'électricité à un juste prix et demandons également que le gouvernement conservateur et son chef, Ernie Eves, déclenchent une élection générale sur l'instabilité du marché de l'énergie pour ainsi donner aux Ontariens et Ontariennes la parole à ce sujet. »

J'y ajoute ma signature avec fierté.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mrs Sandra Papatello (Windsor West): I'm hoping that the page from Windsor West can bring these to the desk once I read them. This is our page from Windsor

West. You have to stand in so everyone back in Windsor can see you, Niyi. Our petition:

"Whereas animal abusers are not currently subject to any provincial penalties;

"Whereas it is currently impossible for a judge to ban puppy and kitten mill operators from owning animals for the rest of their lives; and

"Whereas Ontario SPCA investigators need to act on instances of cruelty to animals in a more timely fashion, thereby lessening the animals' suffering;

"Whereas it is currently not an offence to train an animal to fight another animal; and

"Whereas Ontario's animals are not adequately protected by the current law;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To pass the amendments to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act developed by a governmental working group (which included the Ontario SPCA) and submitted to the office of the Solicitor General of Ontario in June of 2001, so that the above conditions, among others, will be properly addressed."

I will be signing this petition. I'm giving it to Niyi for submission.

SCHOOL BUS SAFETY

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas some motorists are recklessly endangering the lives of children by not obeying the highway traffic law requiring them to stop for school buses with their warning lights activated;

"Whereas the current law has no teeth to protect the children who ride the school buses of Ontario, and who are at risk and their safety is in jeopardy;

"Whereas the current school bus law is difficult to enforce, since not only is a licence plate number required but positive identification of the driver and vehicle as well, which makes it extremely difficult to obtain a conviction;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the measures contained in private member's Bill 112, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to protect children while on school buses, presented by Pat Hoy, MPP, Chatham-Kent-Essex, be immediately enacted. Bill 112 received the unanimous all-party support of the Ontario Legislature at second reading on June 13, 2002....

"And we ask for the support of all members of the Legislature."

I have signed this.

LONG-TERM-CARE FACILITIES

Mr John C. Cleary (Stormont-Dundas-Charlottenburgh): My petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the over 60,000 Ontarians living in long-term-care facilities are older, frailer and sicker and require more care than ever before;

"Whereas government funding has not kept pace with increasing needs of residents of long-term-care facilities;

"Whereas current funding levels only allow limited care;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly" of Ontario "to ask the government to provide additional operating funding to increase the levels of staffing to an acceptable level of service and to reduce the risk to those individuals living in long-term-care facilities across Ontario."

I have also signed the petition.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): I have a petition on behalf of my constituents. It says:

"Whereas Ontario opened its electricity market to competition as of May 1, 2002, with resultant extremely high prices; and

"Whereas suppliers are permitted to upwardly adjust metered consumption by a factor which varies area to area, and base most elements of the rendered accounts on this upwardly adjusted consumption; and

"Whereas this practice appears to be in conflict with the provisions of the federal Gas and Electricity Inspection Act, section 33(k), (l) and (m);

"Therefore, the undersigned petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to dispense with the competitive market system and revert to the system in effect prior to May 1, 2002."

I'll sign that on behalf of my constituents.

POLICE SERVICES

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas in 1956 the province of Ontario ordered the township of Atikokan to create a municipal police service because the township's population had exceeded 5,000; and

"Whereas the province of Ontario has since failed to make any provision for Atikokan to return to provincially subsidized policing when the township's population fell below 5,000 in 1980—it continues to be below 5,000; in 2001, it was "3,632;

"Whereas since 1980 Atikokan has had to spend over $14 million on policing while the province was providing free ... or heavily subsidized ... policing to all 580 of the other small towns in Ontario; and

"Whereas this injustice has resulted in a significant municipal infrastructure deficit and an onerous burden on Atikokan ratepayers;

"We, the undersigned, call upon the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to right this injustice by negotiating a fair and equitable settlement with the representatives of the council and police services board of Atikokan."

I first presented this petition yesterday. There are now over 300 signatures from the township of Atikokan on this petition. I affix my signature in full agreement.

WATER EXTRACTION

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the residents and cottagers of Bob's Lake, strenuously object to the permit issued by the Ministry of the Environment to OMYA Inc to remove 1.5 million litres of water per day from the Tay River, without adequate assessment of the consequences and without adequate consultation with the public and those people and groups who have expertise and interest; and

"Whereas it is our belief that this water taking will drastically impact the environment and seriously affect the water levels in Bob's and Christie lakes. This in turn would affect fish spawning beds as well as habitat. It would also affect the wildlife in and around the lakes;

"Whereas Bob's Lake and the Tay River watershed are already highly stressed by the historic responsibility of Parks Canada to use Bob's Lake as a reservoir for the Rideau Canal; and

"Whereas the movement of water from the lake through the watershed for navigation purposes in the canal provides sufficient stress and problems for the lake. This water taking permit will only compound the stresses on the waterway;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We request that this permit be rescinded until a comprehensive evaluation of the impact of water taking by OMYA Inc on the environment, the water levels and the water needs of these communities is complete. An independent non-partisan body should undertake this evaluation."

I'm happy to affix my signature to this petition and hand it to the page, Brian.

HIGHWAY 407

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): My petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas motorists using Highway 407 are being gouged with charges that are far beyond what is reasonable and justified;

"Whereas billing errors are forcing motorists to spend hours on the telephone trying to have such errors corrected;

"Whereas some motorists in frustration and exasperation are paying charges they did not incur for the use of Highway 407;

"Whereas the government of Ontario acts as an enforcer for the Highway 407 Corp and is, in our view, complicit in the collection of questionable charges;

"Whereas the Eves-Harris government sold Highway 407 to a buyer who has increased charges well beyond what the government promised;

"We, the undersigned, call upon the Legislative Assembly to condemn the Conservative government of Ontario for selling Highway 407 to private interests and for permitting the Highway 407 Corp to raise charges for the use of the highway and other administrative charges that cannot be justified."

I affix my signature; I'm in complete agreement with this petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This is a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

Of course I affix my signature and give it to our page, Olaniyi, from Windsor to bring to the table.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TIME ALLOCATION

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I move that pursuant to standing order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 210, An Act to amend various Acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity, when Bill 210 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill, without further debate or amendment, at such time the bill shall be ordered for third reading, which order may be called on that same day; and

That, when the order for third reading is called, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

That the vote on second and third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred; and

That, in the case of any division—I want to be very clear about this—relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Mr Stockwell has moved government notice of motion number 81.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): I stand in my place and proudly say that I won't be supporting this time allocation motion as we, Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals, have consistently spoken out against time allocation motions because what they do is stifle and limit debate. They stifle and limit the opportunity for Ontarians to take part in the process of policy-making. We all know that this particular government, especially since Premier Eves has taken over, has used time allocation, or might I say, has abused time allocation on too many occasions.

If we were to do a little history on the use of time allocation motions, you would see that the government that the Conservatives across the way like to refer to so often, the Peterson government, only used time allocation five times from 1985 to 1990. Bob Rae's NDP government used time allocation 18 times in their five years—a 300% increase from what the Liberals did. But here is the figure that is I think most startling to the people of Ontario: between Mike Harris and Ernie Eves, the government in power today has used time allocation motions 87 times.

So you wonder why we as the official opposition constantly refer to the governing body over there as the Harris-Eves government: because Mike Harris and Ernie Eves—partners, if you will, in crime—have decided that they will stifle debate in this Legislature, that they will cut off opportunities for people in Ontario to take part in the legislative process of defining policy by limiting the amount of input that they can have. They've done that on 87 occasions. Premier Eves took power just a little while ago, and it should be noted, quite sadly, that he has invoked time allocation on every bill with the exception of one. So what we have here, people, is a government and a Premier across the way who don't want to have debate, who don't want the people of Ontario to have debate.

Do you know that when you define a time allocation motion, what you are really saying is that it's a closure motion, that the government doesn't want any more debate on it? They are carefully worded so that they don't only stifle debate in this particular instance, but they also stifle debate when every bill comes back for third reading. So it's a double whammy that the people of Ontario are getting. They are, in fact, not being provided with opportunity to have input into the laws which are going to affect them directly.

Let me speak in particular to this bill, Bill 210, which is the Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act. I believe the people of Ontario should have input into this. I believe that this has serious ramifications for the municipalities across Ontario. It would have been my hope, certainly, as an individual, that this government send this to committee so that the committee could travel to Sudbury and hear from people who are running our local utility why this government has to ensure that they provide resources for those municipalities, like Sudbury, which had started to prepare for deregulation.

Our city is going to suffer to the tune of approximately $6 million to $7 million. That's what it cost us to prepare for deregulation. Do you know that Bill 210 doesn't address that? Bill 210 says, once again, "Guess what, residents of municipalities across Ontario? You're going to be hit with another downloaded cost. There is no question, with Bill 210, you will be getting a rebate, but those costs that have already been expended by our local utility have to be recovered." The way they will be recovered is through our property taxes. That's extremely sad.

There are alternatives to that. Had you sent this out to committee, had you sent Bill 210 on the road, to travel and to visit municipalities, like the municipality of Sudbury, which is going to be negatively affected because of your changing of the course with regard to deregulation—what we have here is no opportunity for my city to have input into this bill. I think that's wrong.

For that reason, and also because you are stifling debate, I will be voting against this time allocation motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I raise this point of order on a very serious matter. We were just presented with a motion by the government House leader which he refused to address. I think you will agree with me that in the last seven years that you and I have been here, this has never happened before. The government has not in any way tried to justify the reason for bringing this motion forward.

Now, on the second go-round, they refuse to get up and discuss the bill. It has been an accepted practice in this House that we go by way of rotation, and to force one party to use up all of its time so that the other parties can somehow get involved in the rotation later on, I believe, is an abuse of the process, in particular since this particular motion wasn't even addressed or given any justification at all by the government House leader.

I'd like you to rule on that point of order, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: That is a point of order, but until you get me a prod so I can go around and make people stand up and do it, I will rule that it's not my job to get speakers. So I go in rotation. Further debate?

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): Thank you, Speaker. I appreciate your ruling but I hope somewhere down the line that the House leaders or the three parties do address that very serious issue. It's getting to the point where people are wondering what's going on inside here. It has raised concerns of many members from all sides who have been here for a long time and are deeply concerned about these types of democratic processes. So I would encourage that something get done for it.

Time allocation: here we go again, shutting down debate. In the 37th Parliament: total bills passed, 89; bills passed with time allocation, 51. Some 57% of all of our bills are being passed this way now, and it's stifling debate. It's stifling great opportunities for people to point out concerns with legislation: some of the faults in it, some of the flaws, some of the improvements that could get offered. The process of consulting, throwing a bill together and saying they have consulted, without anybody seeing the bill until they want to do it, and then they throw in the first, second and third reading closure motions, making the debate stop so that no one can put feedback in except what's in this House: so when you diminish that, there are really big problems with the process that are being pointed out.

I will say again, it is being pointed out by many members on all sides of this House. They're very concerned about this process, and I have to voice my concern. Being relatively new to this process, my expectation was that we were trying to pass the best possible legislation in this place for all of the citizens of Ontario, and, boy, have I ever got it wrong. I'm sorry to say that, and I hope there's a glimmer of light in this with the member for Kingston and the Islands' point of order. The fact is, we hope we can get members from all parties to stand up and start talking about the process in this place. There's deep concern about that, and I know that no one is going to heckle, because they know we have to seriously talk about that reform. Once we get into that, I'm sure we can get back to passing legislation that's the best possible legislation, not one party's complete, total idea of how this should run.

Why am I talking about that? I'll give you the examples. I had an interesting meeting with my municipality. They brought me in to talk to Brantford Power about various issues about this particular bill, Bill 210. Maybe people are not aware of this, but the municipipalities are going to be on the hook for a tremendous amount of money according to this legislation. I'm going to go over three or four things that I hope the government is very aware of, and I hope it understands that AMO, small urban municipalities and utilities across the province will not be happy with them. This particular bill is going to cost my Brantford Power utilities, and city council by extension, at least $5 million to $7 million in putting this thing together. I saw the figures they showed me in terms of the calculations. Their calculations showed that if this rebate plan were allowed to be kind of functionally done by the municipalities, because of their efficiency and the way they've run their utilities, that rebate cheque would be for $45. They're on the hook now for a $75 refund. That's a difference that they have to make up. It's unbelievable that people are not aware of this.

I would caution us, let's not jump on the wagon so quickly as to say that this government's got it right. Maybe they've headed down the path of rebate, which was already in existence, that should have been in existence. It was in existence, but not the way it turns out in this particular piece of legislation. I'd ask people to make sure that utilities understand and then educate yourself on what's going to happen in your municipality.

There were three different options they had: declare themselves non-profit, declare themselves profit, or sell it back to the person they brought it from, Hydro One. Guess what happens. They have to sell it back for the price they bought it for. By selling it back for the price they bought it for, whatever that price was that they got, that money is gone. It's probably gone into roads, sewers and water. In some cases, it's up around $50 million to $60 million. That municipality, if they choose to do that, has to come up with $50 million to $60 million. A lot of the municipalities I'm aware of have decided to adopt a no-debt format, so that means they have to re-enter debt of $50 million or $60 million. That, to me, deserves a lot of attention and possible debate, but we can't do that. We can't bring that to your attention because this is it; this is our last kick at the can.

There are other issues here. If you declare for-profit, and here's the real rub, you're given a resolution by the government, the government's resolution that they're telling city councils they must pass. The wording basically says, "We, the municipality, have been ripping you off; therefore we adopt this particular process that the government says is the way to go." Well, tell me that you're not going to get preambles to that resolution, and deservedly so. If you get preambles to that resolution that condemn the government for this particular program, you're going to cost municipalities $5 million to $7 million and possibly go into debt for $50 million to $60 million if you sell it back. Who gets that gain? Nobody gets a gain except for Hydro One.

And guess what Hydro One gets to do. Hydro One doesn't get to set the price. It's already got its price protected at 9.93. Our municipality has to set it at 4.3. The question I have that still hasn't been given an answer by the government side is, where did the 4.3 come from? They made it up. Municipalities get it locked in at 5.2, I believe. What's the difference? Who pays that? Another cost to the municipality.

I'm saying to the government, you have not paid attention to this particular project. It's another example of trying to put a Band-Aid on a six-inch gash.

The mismanagement: I come back to that one. I've said it from the very beginning during these debates. There is large mismanagement that is going on from that side, and they're going to placate. I saw the member from Stoney Creek stand up the other night and say, "I have not received one telephone call. They're gone." He said, "The telephones have stopped ringing completely because we solved the problem."

1530

Number one, you created the problem in the first place. Two, you had no plan on how this was going to roll out. Three, I want to include, and I think the member for Sudbury is right, the member for Durham, because he's the one who says they've got it right, that they did it right all along and everything was perfect and hunky-dory, thank you very much.

Quite frankly, what we're going to find is municipalities across the province ringing the phones of the MPPs on the other side off the hooks, and I challenge them to do that, because they're the ones who are saying there are no more phone calls, there are no more concerns about hydro, that it's all been taken care of. There's been a large hue and cry coming from the other side saying that there's a lot of fearmongering going on—they first accused the NDP and then they included the Liberals in this—that there are going to be blackouts. I didn't hear there were going to be blackouts from Joe Schmo down the street. I heard there were going to be blackouts from experts in the field, people who know exactly what happened in California and all over North America where they decided to go down this road. The first thing they said is, "You know what? You think California was bad. You're in deep, deep trouble."

I want to end with just a couple of observations and a plea. My first observation is very clear: something is wrong that our municipalities are going to have to absorb all the bad news in this situation. I challenge the government to ensure that our municipalities are not faced with that. And last, but not least, answer the question: where did you get all your information; where did you get all your statistics? I'm telling you, they didn't do their homework and they've mismanaged the portfolio.

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): It must be a real treat being a member of the official opposition and being able to come into this House day after day and give exactly the same speech. It sure must cut down your research time and your preparation time and allow you to sleep in every morning. We hear the same old, same old whenever it's a time allocation motion, about how terrible it is that the government is actually moving forward, that the government is showing initiative, that the government is listening to people in this province and is then reflecting what we've heard with a piece of very positive and proactive legislation such as Bill 210.

The members opposite would suggest that if we continue the harangue that passes for debate in this chamber for more than the three days that have already taken place on this bill, somehow it would change the outcome. The members themselves know that aside from the rare day in committee where they offer the occasional amendment, the debate here invariably involves the opposition saying we are 100% wrong, that even if we did our policy development using a dartboard, we couldn't get anything right in seven and a half years. That's really quite arrogant and it's really quite insufferable, and it is also quite inaccurate.

The reality is that this bill in large measure arises from an all-party report of the select committee on alternative fuels, that had as its members three Liberals and one NDP, as well as four government members, and a government member as the Chair. While it may be painful, particularly for the members of the official opposition, to be reminded of this fact, they signed on verbatim to the conclusions of that very important report. They signed on to a commitment to move forward with the decarbonization of our energy stream, to promote alternative energy, to raise the profile of wind, solar, biomass, geothermal and fuel cells to unprecedented levels in this province, to come up with incentives to clean the air by cleaning our energy stream.

Now the members opposite would suggest, having signed on to that report in June as the representatives for their party, that somehow the government shouldn't act on it. But you know that if we didn't act on it, tomorrow's question period would revolve around why isn't the government moving forward, that it's been X number of months since this report came in or that report came in. All day today we heard them talk about the auditor's report: why didn't the government do this; why didn't the government do that in a timely fashion? The reality is that with this bill, we deny them the ability to continue to fearmonger, we deny them the ability to continue to create the false impression that notwithstanding the fact that they each had five years at the helm, they each failed miserably to change the environment, to change the very mechanisms through which power is generated in this province, and instead went down that same old road, building more coal plants and considering it a major accomplishment when one of the coal plants was converted to heavy oil or another one was converted to natural gas—baby steps down that road to cleaning up the energy stream. That's the best that either of those two parties can point to in a full decade of stewardship, a full decade of sitting on this side of the Speaker.

Our government not only commissioned the select committee, not only ensured that the report was received and accepted by the two most relevant ministries, Environment and Energy, but has now given rise to over 50 different actions flowing from the select committee report. Let me pause for just a second here and explain some of the things the government is doing.

We have put in place the most comprehensive, the most aggressive and the most creative assortment of tax incentives for businesses to develop new sources of green power generation. We're talking about exempting them from capital tax. We're talking about rebating sales tax. We're talking about exemption from property tax. We're talking about allowing them to write off the cost of building the generation equipment in the very first year in which those funds are expended. We're talking about taking the sales tax off solar products. We're talking about creating a mandate for the OEB to guarantee that every local utility puts in place something called demand-side management, which, just like the natural gas industry, will create an environment where, ironically, the utilities will be incented to cut your demand. They'll make more money if they help you, the consumer, control the amount of electricity you're using in your home or your small business. In the natural gas industry, the natural gas suppliers have received $50 million as a result of those programs, but they've saved consumers $500 million in so doing.

We've also said we're going to be taking some bold and unprecedented actions to clean up the environment in northern Ontario. We've said we are committed to eliminating the use of diesel as a fuel for generating electricity in the north and replacing it instead with completely clean and environmentally benign forms of energy generation, such as wind, solar and fuel cells. No government in the province of Ontario has ever made that commitment. No government had ever suggested the complete closure of all its coal plants until our government.

Unlike the official opposition, which, having signed on to a report, having travelled, having done the research, having listened to hundreds of presentations, written and oral, and coming to the same conclusion as the government members that the year 2015 was a reasonable benchmark, was a reasonable deadline for the closure of the last of our coal plants, I guess feeling that they'd been trumped, outmanoeuvred, just arbitrarily decided they'd pick an earlier deadline. The small problem is that currently coal generates 21% of all the electricity used in this province, so if you don't have a plan over the next four years to add 21% new capacity plus the capacity you're also going to need for the growth in the economy, you're going to have the blackouts that our colleague from Brantford was just suggesting.

On the other hand, there is nothing in this bill that does anything nearly that irresponsible. There is nothing in this bill, just as there was nothing in any previous electricity bill we've passed, that will lead to brownouts or blackouts in the province of Ontario, as the member knows full well. There has not been one blackout in Ontario related to electricity supply—has not been and will not be. That sort of fearmongering has no place in this chamber, and I think the member should be very ashamed to have made that suggestion here today, as many of his colleagues have in the past.

We've gone much further than any government in the history of Ontario. But I think what is most gratifying, as a member of that select committee, is the enthusiasm with which our Premier has embraced the concept of green power. I can tell you that as a member of the select committee, it was certainly my goal that we would see actions on the various recommendations we brought forward: a total of 141 recommendations covering not just fixed forms of electricity generation but also cleaner ways of powering motive engines—your cars, buses and trains.

With this bill we have basically empowered the Minister of Energy to move forward on virtually every one of the recommendations that deal with fixed forms of electricity. And in those areas where we have not announced a concrete action yet, I have been asked by the minister to take on the job of further research, working with stakeholders, consumer groups, the Ontario Energy Board and everyone else involved in the production and use of electricity, to see how fast we can move on the balance of those recommendations.

Our commitment is absolute. Ontario is going to take a leadership role, not just within Canada, but all across North America when it comes to the promotion of green energy. We already have in this bill the framework for bragging rights. There is no jurisdiction in North America that has offered the sort of tax incentives and the strong, strong support for the philosophical concepts that were the underpinning of the select committee report. This is a bill that not only should pass very quickly, and for which every member of this House should be demonstrating support—we shouldn't even have wasted the three days of debate we've already spent, because every day we delay in passing this bill is another day's delay in getting the $75 rebate cheque out to every consumer and small business in this province. It's another day's delay behind the empowerment of the ministry to move forward on these green power initiatives.

I'm excited to be able to share with you that, notwithstanding the bill has not passed yet, we have had incredible feedback from folks in the wind industry, the water power industry and manufacturers of solar products. We have had offers of support in diagnosing all of the existing barriers to the development of green power. I can tell you that the input we have had has been so detailed and thorough that we are going to be able to react at record speed in the preparation of the regulations and the policy statements arising from the new direction that this bill empowers the Minister of Energy to take. It will be an extraordinarily exciting time to be in Ontario if you have an interest in alternative fuels. Of course the bill does much more than that.

The bill also lowers electricity costs for consumers. It creates stability and certainty. It takes away the ability for—unfortunately, I have to say—the folks on the opposite side here to do the day-in and day-out fearmongering that the sky will be falling, that people will face bankruptcy in their homes.

It was most humorous when the members opposite would trot out stories of people here in the city of Toronto whose bills had gone up, according to them, 100% or more. The small problem was, here in the city of Toronto, as a result of the tardiness of Toronto Hydro in their application to the Ontario Energy Board, they were never relieved of the ability to continue to charge the same 4.3 cents that they had been charging before the market opened on May 1. And so, if the rate for every consumer in Toronto was still 4.3 cents, precisely how do the members opposite explain that anyone's bill would have gone up? Could it be that perhaps they used more power? I don't think there's ever been a circumstance, not just here in Ontario but anywhere in this country, where folks buying more of a service shouldn't expect to pay more for that service. If you decide to leave your hot tub on all day, or if you decide to leave your air conditioner on in a summer with record heat, all day while you're away at work, you can expect your electricity bill to go up. For the members opposite to have somehow suggested that that increased bill had something to do with bringing in new competition and clarity in the electricity market was preposterous.

But they are now the architects of the portion of the bill that deals with giving stability back to people, not just here in Toronto but across the province. I personally believe that at 4.3 cents the province has created a plan that will pay for itself. When you look at the fluctuating price of electricity, not just within each day but from month to month, and average that cost over 12 months, you will find that if this model had been applied over the last two years, for example, we would have made money.

So the bad news is, thanks to the fearmongering from those who suggested the sky was falling, the reintroduction of the 4.3 cents means that individual consumers will not see as great a saving personally as electricity users. What they'll see as taxpayers, though, if we are right and the plan pays for itself and, I believe, creates a surplus, is that the $38 billion in debt that that vaunted public utility our colleagues opposite promote all the time, Ontario Hydro, a $38-billion legacy of its 30-plus years of selling electricity for far below cost, will be paid down that much more quickly, relieving our children and our children's children of the obligation to pay for the electricity we used.

To the members opposite for whom it is not anathema, I would suggest you go back and rethink your position on this bill. I, for one, can never endorse the idea of a future generation paying for a service I've consumed. That is the height of irresponsibility, and it undermines the very concept of why one would run for this office: to do the best when it comes to stewardship, not just for today but over the long haul for generations to come.

There will still be incentives to conserve once this bill is passed. The principal incentive is that the less power you use, the less you'll pay. It's a radical thought, but it happens to be true. It also is true that the large energy consumers, that top 1% that between them use 40% of all the power, are on the spot market. They're not covered by the 4.3 cents, nor do they want to be. They too share our faith that they can do better in the open marketplace.

Yes, there will be days, whether it's a record heat wave in the summer or a record cold snap in the winter, when the power gets more expensive than the fixed price was when the market was closed. But there are going to be a lot of other days in the year when they're going to be able to buy power at very, very affordable rates.

You won't hear it from the members opposite, but even through the summertime it was not at all unusual in the morning hours to see power down below 1.5 cents per kilowatt hour. In fact, one morning it dropped to 0.7 cents, one sixth of the price that businesses and consumers were paying before we opened the market. So for those who have the ability to shift their production, there are extraordinary savings that can still be realized.

The only thing this bill changes, effectively, is the price paid by that relatively small percentage of the energy demand reflected in the purchases by individual consumers. It was a necessary thing to do to take away all the mythology and the fearmongering that had become the commentary from far too many sources about what really was happening in the electricity market.

This bill is something that promotes greater certainty, and with that certainty will come greater investment. The members opposite again would suggest there would be blackouts flowing because now everyone is scared off. Well, those members weren't with me on Saturday up in Ferndale, where a private company—no public money—did the ribbon-cutting for a 1.8-megawatt wind turbine, nor were they there the day before, when a 9-megawatt wind farm opened next to the Bruce nuclear plant. I don't know whether they plan on showing up down in Picton, when a 32-megawatt wind farm opens in the next couple of months. The member from Sudbury may or may not decide to show up when the Sudbury wind farm—the city of Sudbury themselves have decided to partner with a wind turbine manufacturer to create 90 megawatts of power. I'm kind of betting that neither the member from St Catharines nor any of his colleagues will decide to show up if the 400-megawatt project proposed in the middle of Lake Erie goes ahead.

Those are the sorts of good-news stories we are hearing. It's a shame the media don't give as much ink to those as they do to the fearmongering and cries of doom and gloom from the Chicken Littles who tend to be the sources for information on issues such as electricity pricing. The reality is that between the wind and water industries, we're aware of over 2,000 megawatts worth of projects that are either under construction or at the environmental assessment stage. That's the equivalent of building four Pickering-sized reactors.

The initiatives we've brought forward in this bill will do nothing but build on that momentum that has already taken place, thanks to the initiatives the government already acted on over the last two years. By simply putting in place a property tax relief plan for new water power generation, in less than two years we have attracted $200 million worth of new investments in small hydro plants, $200 million worth of new construction and a lot more supply of clean, reliable, made-in-Ontario power.

The members opposite would have us continue to buy, if not coal from Alberta, natural gas from Alberta or Saskatchewan. That's their idea of economic independence for our province. They like the idea of hundreds of millions, if not billions of dollars flowing from Ontario day after day. They don't see the economic benefits. If they do, if I'm wrong in that assumption, I look forward to their voting for this bill. I look forward to their standing in their place and endorsing it today by saying, "Time allocation is appropriate. We want to move forward. We too are finished with the talking. We want to see action." I look forward to seeing them voting for it at third reading.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): What is interesting in following the previous speaker is that I have a suspicion he actually believes what he said. It's one thing to spew forth the rhetoric, but it's another to actually believe it. The danger is that he might believe at least three quarters of what he just said to the Legislative Assembly. It's quite an explanation of how he got to the position he's in now, having been in an entirely different position before, but I can't be too critical of that on this occasion, I guess.

I also say to him that we don't get invitations to these events. We have to crash these events he talks about. I did crash the one in Niagara Falls because I had a hint they were going to follow through on one of my recommendations. I want to tell the member that when I look in this bill, I find a lot of the recommendations we've made. So while I think we can be justifiably critical of how we got in this particular position, I can't criticize you for stealing the ideas we have put forward.

One of them was Beck 3. I remember when Dalton McGuinty and I went to Niagara Falls on our latest visit to extol the virtues of Beck 3. I have several quotes from the member for Scarborough East who just spoke, saying, "Well, at this time it really can't be done. It's going to cost too much," and so on. I have the actual quotes. I won't read them in the House now.

A month or so later I went down to Niagara Falls and there was Bart Maves, my good friend, who had also said some pretty negative things about our visit to Niagara Falls, and he and John Baird were boldly announcing they were going to proceed with Beck 3. I was astounded, but when the media asked me about it, I wasn't critical. I said, "I'm happy to provide them with ideas. When they adopt them, I'm going to be the first one to applaud." So I stood on the sidelines and applauded as the two of them made that particular announcement, because of course they were adopting our policy, and how can you be critical when that happens?

I've looked at several components of this bill. The government got us into this mess. This bill has a lot of ramifications for local utilities and so on that have to be sorted out, but the government in fact has stolen so much in the way of what we have advocated that this bill has some attributes to it. I've got to say that.

Mr Gilchrist: Don't make me table that letter. Don't make me table it.

Mr Bradley: I will. I wish had the quotes from the member now. Maybe if my staff is watching they will get your quotes and I can use them a little later on. I was glad that the member mentioned that our committee certainly made a recommendation in that direction, but it was being fought by the government. This could not be done. Now the government is proceeding, so a big round of applause for proceeding with the project and accepting a good idea from the Liberal opposition. I can't be critical when you do that.

What I can be critical of is yet another time allocation motion. I was sitting down in anger last night—I want to share this with members—because I picked up an e-mail that said the government was going to time-allocate the following bills. To those who are watching at home on channel 67 unfortunately, not channel 15 any more in St Catharines, I will say to you that time allocation really means choking off the debate. Here's what I penned in anger late at night. You should never read those things the next day, but I thought it fit this debate in particular. It says:

"The Eves government is ramming through the Ontario Legislature several important bills with a minimum of debate and often no opportunity for public hearings or committee deliberations. Does anybody care? The Eves government is once again using taxpayers' dollars to engage in an orgy of self-serving, clearly partisan advertising and polling for political purposes. But does anybody care?"

"If the Eves government is not called to account in a very public and prolonged manner, how can Ontario's citizens have any hope that a fair and vibrant democracy can exist in this province? The Eves crowd has rigged the procedural rules of the Legislature to ensure complete control of the parliamentary process and timetable and uses its majority to choke off debate and shut out the public. Does anybody care?"

"If the government can get away with these transgressions with only a passing reference in the media, what hope is there for democracy in this province? Surely the argument that procedural issues are boring and too complicated for the public to care about or understand"—an argument made by the top echelons of the media, who make the final decisions about what gets on the air or what gets in the newspapers—"plays into the hands of an arrogant, condescending, overbearing regime which will impose its will virtually undeterred on the province and relegate the Legislative Assembly to virtual irrelevance. Surely the fact that media moguls are the direct financial beneficiaries of government advertising cannot override the need to embarrass and condemn those who abuse their public position by unfairly and irresponsibly squandering tax dollars for their own political gain. But does anybody care?"

The "anybody" it comes to is, of course, the national, the provincial and the local news media, because they are the ones who ultimately can purvey this message. I look for the condemning editorials when I see over a quarter of a billion dollars spent by this government on self-serving, partisan government advertising, without a whimper from the editorialists in this province and the cranky talk show hosts who are usually out there condemning unnecessary government expenditures. Surely they are not influenced by the fact that the advertising is on their shows, surely not. That cannot be the case. I would never believe that. I would be too cynical to believe that. But when I look out there and see that government advertising continues, that this government is using taxpayers' dollars now to congratulate itself on the flip-flop it has done on the hydro issue—one which has been emulated—I have to say it's very unfair to the system. If you look at the ads now, they're saying, "Look, we just saved you." What did they save us from? They saved us from their own bungling and incompetence, their own policies that got them into this mess.

1600

Last day, I talked about what I thought was a reasonable thing to advertise, and that was the issue of getting the flu shot. You watch the television ads and you say, "Do you know something? It's not bad." Then it gets to the end: "And this is another way your government is looking after the health care system." There's always that political message that the brain trust in the backrooms of the Conservative Party put into these taxpayer-paid government ads. If they were ads paid for out of the huge war chest of the Conservative Party, a war chest which has been bolstered by its catering to the richest and most powerful people in the province—I notice today, for instance, that the Provincial Auditor said that half of the corporations didn't even file tax returns.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Half?

Mr Bradley: That's what the auditor said.

Mr Gerretsen: And nobody's doing anything about it.

Mr Bradley: And nobody's doing anything about it.

If the Conservative Party were to take the dollars it has gleaned from the corporate captains, the oil barons and others and use those dollars, I might not like the message but at least they wouldn't be using tax dollars to do so.

Here we have a government virtually getting away again with this kind of advertising. I ask the editorialists, I ask those who are the commentators out there, where are you? I don't hear you. You're silent. I don't read you. If that happens, then you'll get away with it. That's why governments do it. You ram things through the Legislature the way you do because you know you can get away with it: "Oh, that's procedural; who cares about that?"

The change in the rules of this House has had a major impact on legislation in this province. You've virtually taken away every chip the opposition would have to play in a process—virtually every one—because you simply time-allocate or set the timetable for all legislation going through. Some of it is very important; for instance, the provision on taking money from pension surpluses that is hidden in one of the bills. The other trick you use is to throw a number of things together into a bill so you've got a couple of hostages in there. Instead of doing bills on individual subjects, where you could make a reasonable judgment, you throw it all together with a hostage in it.

My colleague says I have two minutes.

On this legislation, I would like to have seen some public hearings where people could have some input. The government might not agree or we might not agree with some of the input, but it would be there.

Another problem I want to mention to the government House leader, who is here, is the timetable in which amendments must be submitted. We were in Walkerton on the general government committee yesterday. Some good suggestions came forward. The ability to translate those into accepted amendments is very restrictive. What you start to outlaw as legitimate amendments makes it very difficult to make the process meaningful. I would like to go into the committee of the whole more often so we can deal with matters in a meaningful way, but of course that's the last place where we have an opportunity to make input.

I don't make this appeal to the government, because it will fall on ears that are not listening, to say the least, but I do make it to the news media out there who are watching and who have a chance to call this government to account on government advertising. This is not literal, but you get away with murder in terms of what you do in this Legislature. They are the last bastion of hope, because we alone cannot expose this with this government. Rather than the government story of the day, it would be nice if we had huge condemnations of government advertising and abuse of this House and of the electoral process.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I appreciate the chance to comment. The matter before us today directly is the issue of time allocation, and I thought, since I had a couple of minutes, I would just put some thoughts on the record with regard to where we find ourselves these days.

Every opposition member who stands up and argues that the government automatically plans to introduce a time allocation motion with the introduction of virtually every bill is pretty much accurate, with a few exceptions. But it's worth taking a moment sometimes to stand back and ask ourselves, "How did we get here?" because a lot has changed in a very few short years.

I'm now in my 13th year in this place. When I first came here in 1990, the traditions that had been in place for decades, with very few changes, were still holding. For that matter, I was also, by virtue of being the elected caucus chair, on the House strategy committee, which was chaired by the government House leader at the time, so again I have a pretty good feel for the way things were and the way things are now, having served a couple of years as our House leader.

I can remember that when I first came to this place there were some excellent traditions that we've lost. One of them that I think is a real loss for all of us is the respect that all of us used to show for party leaders, whether it was the Premier of the day, the leader of the official opposition or the leader of the third party. I can remember when Mike Harris would stand in his place as leader of the third party; you didn't hear heckles from the government backbenches. It just wasn't done. We've lost that. A lot of the heckling that goes on back and forth is there for a whole host of reasons, but I really feel it's a loss for this place that we don't have at least that kind of respect to show a symbol, to reflect the respect we should show this place, at least when our leaders stand up. If we are still having debates of ideas anywhere, which is what this place is supposed to be, it is when leaders are standing up either offering a leadoff speech or doing their question period questions. We've lost that, and now this place will heckle and drown out a Premier just as quickly as a backbencher who says something that upsets people. I think that's a real loss.

But I do remember what started things, and there are members who were here at the same time. My friend the current government House leader was pretty much in the same place I am over here, somewhere in this general area—

Hon Mr Stockwell: Right over there.

Mr Christopherson: Right beside it, he's telling me. He will recall the tradition of this place where at introduction of a bill on first reading, there was never a division—very, very rare. Mr Bradley can speak to it longer than most of us. By the way, he's about to assume the deanship of this place, along with Mr Sterling, assuming they both run again and both win. So he's been here longer than everybody here except two people, and he'll tell you and confirm that first reading divisions just didn't happen. There was a respect of the process to allow a bill to at least be introduced, and it was done because all members were considered to be honourable and they had the right to at least have their bill presented on the floor, even if it went no further.

I can also remember, and again I look to my friend the government House leader, a certain party leader who stood up and read all the rivers and streams and lakes. You know where I'm going.

Mr Bradley: Name names.

Mr Christopherson: I think at that time it would have been the leader of the third party, which was the Honourable Mike Harris. He stood up and it was basically a filibuster. Filibusters had been used in the past; Mr Kormos is well known for his filibuster on the then Liberal auto insurance bill. So it was very rare, and when it happened, it made news and it made a difference.

But what happened was—and now I'm beginning to editorialize, my opinion—the then third party, which is now the governing party, absolutely refused to accept the fact of, “Oh, my goodness, an NDP majority government. How can that be? They have virtually no right to govern. We've got to stop them, using any means we can.” What happened was, they were very effective. They literally gummed up the works of this whole place so that nothing was moving, and they made it clear that nothing was going to move. There was no need for negotiations, because as long as the bill was on the floor, they were going to make sure this House didn't move.

And at the end of the day, the NDP government, of which I was a member, with a lot of caucus debate—and believe me, the debate at that time was, “Yeah, but what about later? What if we're in a position where we're somewhere else?” It was a valid concern, obviously. Look at where we are today.

The fact of the matter is, we were a government. We were legitimately elected. We had a majority government and, at the end of the day, we had the right, as does the current government, to enact legislation. That doesn't mean that the debate time and the rights of opposition members should be run over, that the public should be denied their opportunity to have a say. I have some real problems with the way this government has approached those matters.

The notion that a majority government at the end of the day has the right to pass laws is, in my opinion, fundamentally sound. Given that the opposition had clearly found a parliamentary technique that seized any processing of the laws that a legitimately elected government was putting through really left us with no choice. And yes, it was our government that took the first major steps down the road that got us to this point.

As I think about this, and have over the last little while, especially since I've had the honour of being in the chair as the Deputy Speaker for the last year, I don't know that there's any real easy solution, because I also know, whether it's the official opposition in the name of the Liberals that forms the next government or the third party in the name of the New Democrats, they're going to be seized of the same issue, and that is, you've got a litany of things you're going to run on. You say, “If we're elected, we're going to implement them.” I assume we would all want to keep our promises and therefore we'll do whatever it takes at the end of the day to get that legislation through.

We're at the point now where this place is so irrelevant simply because—and I see the government House leader throwing his arms in the air. I think that means, “You know, I understand what you're saying. I'm in agreement.”

I don't know where we go. I really do not have a simple answer, but I do know that at the end of the day, those of us on this side of the House who are criticizing you—and rightly so—would be in exactly the same position if we were bringing in legislation that was very controversial or, as we're ramping up to an election, of course, things get tougher around here. But somewhere, the public have a right, in my opinion, to some of the respect and some of the input that was here for—what?—better than a century.

All of that is not to say that it's OK to keep ramming bills through with no public hearings. That one you can't defend. That is just pure cowardice.

You're afraid to go out—we remember what happened a few years ago, particularly when you brought in some of your anti-worker legislation. We took it out on the road, and what happened? Well, surprise, surprise. You go after working people, they find out there's a public committee hearing dealing with that legislation and they're going to come out. They're going to be loud, they're going to carry picket signs and they're going to do everything they can to get media attention around what the government is doing. As uncomfortable as that may be, it's part of the price and part of the responsibility of the rights and privileges of a majority government.

You do not have the right to bring in controversial legislation, ram it through here with a time allocation motion and deny the public any opportunity to have word one on how they feel about the legislation. That has to change. The dilemma around bringing in legislation and the offsetting balancing rights of the opposition to hold up the government when they think it's appropriate is a conundrum that remains unresolved. It's worthy of any party asking for the right to govern to offer up something by way of change, because this can't continue. This really is becoming a joke.

The Premier and his or her immediate people decide what's going to be done. They take it to cabinet and cabinet gets on board. Rarely—it happens, but rarely—does a cabinet turn on a Premier, especially on a major initiative. So the Premier, having made a decision, can usually count on the cabinet, and once they've got the cabinet, then odds are they're going to be able to carry their caucus.

Although Premier Rae doesn't get nearly enough credit for bringing in a process—a lot of people aren't aware of this, but Premier Rae brought in a process that allowed the caucus to vote on whether or not a bill could be introduced. Under the Constitution, the cabinet has the right to bring in legislation, and that wasn't changed, but in terms of our own internal procedures, cabinet had to bring bills to caucus and receive a majority vote before they could introduce that bill.

Hon Mr Stockwell: How did you vote on the social contract?

Mr Christopherson: Against.

Hon Mr Stockwell: And it carried anyway.

Mr Christopherson: It carried anyway.

Interjection.

Mr Christopherson: I can say that because Bob Rae wrote it in his book, so I'm not divulging any secrets.

There were a number of times legislation was sent back, much to the chagrin of many ministers, myself included. I was the caucus chair when we negotiated that procedure and then I went into cabinet and found the procedure working against me in one case I can remember. But you know what? I'm the first to admit that when I came back with the second bill, it was a better bill. If I couldn't convince my own colleagues, who by and large were philosophically onside with the way I saw the world, that the bill should be the law, how could I expect the citizens, where you have a much broader philosophical approach, to think this is a good law? I just say that as an aside because I don't think Premier Rae has been given enough credit for the major piece of democratization that he brought to this place.

Having said that, to go back to my point, once the Premier has the cabinet onside, the caucus onside, they bring the bill in here, and my friend from St Catharines is absolutely right when he stands up time and again and says that as soon as you've written the bill to be introduced, you're already writing the time allocation motion. We can literally predict when a law is going to take hold, and that's wrong. What it means is that unless you're a member, first of all, of the governing party in a majority government and you're a cabinet minister, you really don't have a lot of input around here in terms of major pieces of legislation, and that is a shame. In fact, as my good friend Mr Conway has pointed out in previous remarks—and if anybody wants to learn the history of this place, read some of his Hansard speeches; Bob Nixon's too. There are great lessons there in what's happened in our past vis-à-vis this place.

But there was a time when, before you could accept a cabinet position, you had to go back to your riding, hold an election and win on a vote of whether or not you would be allowed to go into cabinet. Why? Because the fundamental raison d'être of members of this place originally, back in the days of Confederation and pre-Confederation, was that ministers were seen literally, not just symbolically, as they are now, as the ministers, meaning the agents of the crown. In doing so, they were giving up a lot of their responsibility to speak out against legislation, because they were representing the crown. There was less party politics and a much greater respect for the fact that a majority vote of this place is what mattered. Those majorities would come from across party lines.

We've gone a long way since then, but think about it. Before you could accept a cabinet appointment, you had to go back to your own riding and convince them that you were worthy enough to be released from your day-to-day responsibilities to speak out against legislation on behalf of your constituents to now become one of the monarch's agents in introducing and trying to convince and coerce the rest of this place to support your initiative. We are so far away from that today that it would be almost laughable were it not so serious.

On the bill that this particular motion affects, I'm advised, once again, no public hearings. How many times have each of us on this side of the House had to stand up and say, "At this stage all we want is public hearings"? And when we say "public hearings," we're saying, give the public a chance to have at least some say. On the fact that you can now deny that time after time, I want to agree with the member for St Catharines: where are the media outrages? Where is the public protest around the fact that major pieces of legislation routinely go through this place and nobody gets a say? How did that become OK? How did that become business as usual in Ontario? It bears very little resemblance to democracy as I know it, yet here we are again.

There's a lot being said out there. There are some good discussions happening on TV, public affairs channels and news channels: analysis, in-depth journalistic reports. There's a lot in the print. There's lots and lots of debate, except for in the one place where debate really matters, which is here or in our committees. That's not happening.

Great, the chattering classes, we all get a chance to have our say, but we're this much of the population: a few grains of sand on the entire beach, and the beach gets nothing to say. That is so wrong. If you're going to go out and get beat up, too bad. If you want to drive around in a limo, make all the decisions, have the big office, all the staff, the respect, the perks and all those things that go along with being a cabinet minister, fine. But if you're a member of the caucus and you aspire to be a cabinet minister, and part of earning your spurs is going out there in the public and defending legislation, then you've got to go out and do it. If you're going to take some heat, too damn bad. Either take the heat and suck it up, or go back to your government, which would be far more preferable, and convince them they're wrong and make the anger go away.

Ontarians are reasonable people. If you bring in reasonable legislation, they'll understand. Yes, you're going to have the opposition parties load up the hearings as much as they can to bring in their supporters, but, hey, give me a break. You've cut our budgets; we don't have as much money as opposition members as we used to, so we can't mount the same kind of effective campaign. Besides, even if we were back up to full speed on what the budgets used to be for members, it's still nothing compared to the resources of a majority government. You not only have full caucus services like all of us and more, because there's more of you, but you have all the resources of a government: all those cabinet ministers and their staff; all of the communications departments within ministries. Albeit there's a fine line that has to be respected between the business of the government and the business of the party in government, but those resources are there.

It's not good enough to say, "Well, we go out to committee hearings, and all that happens is that the NDP goes and gets all those labour people to come out and complain." Duh. That's how a pluralistic democracy works. At least, that's how it's supposed to work, because we know those same labour people aren't getting access to the decision-makers through any other means; your friends do, I have no doubt about that. Unless you're a friend of this government, you don't get a say. You don't have any vehicle to have a say.

Do you know what? This is probably going to go through, and there won't be much said. There won't be any public hearings on something that practically bankrupted individuals and small businesses in my community. What you did to hydro is shameful, and nobody gets a say.

You scared people half to death. There were families who didn't know where they were going to get the money to pay for the hydro they need to warm their families and the food to feed those families. That's how serious the crisis was in Ontario, and nobody gets a say?

That riles me up a lot more than the time allocation motion. I'm not happy about the time allocation motion, and I'm going to vote against it, but I have to tell you that I feel much more passionately about the fact that nobody else will get a say. It's one thing to shut us down after a few days. I, at least, have my chance to vent and to represent my 100,000-plus constituents as best I can, but that is not the same as coming to Hamilton and giving the people of Hamilton a chance to come out and have their say, and to have the experts come out and have their say and put it on the public record. That's what's shameful about this. It's become routine. That is now not just shameful, that's frightening.

What's the next thing we're hearing? Now you're going to spend $1.4 million on an advertising campaign to tell the public how you're going solve the problem you caused in the first place. You listen to the ads, you read the ads, you watch the ads and you think: "Boy, we must have been invaded by aliens who came in and took over our hydro system and did all kinds of damage. Thank goodness Premier Eves and his government are there to step in on our behalf and save the day." Except that's not the way it happened. You did it. It was your plan—more of this, "If we privatize it, it'll be better."

I've always maintained there is lot's of room for a mixed economy. Nothing should automatically be public or private without good reason. Our hospitals should remain public for good reason. We've now learned—as New Democrats we knew all along but now the rest of the province knows, especially the government—that there is a very good reason to keep power generation and power supply in the public domain.

Why? Let's see. The government said they were going to do this because it was going to bring in more investment. With more investment would come more competition, and with competition would come lower prices as everybody competed for our business. That's the theory. The problem with that theory is that the only way new investment is going to come in to create said competition is if the hydro rates are high enough that it will make the return on investment high enough to make it worthwhile to invest in the energy sector as opposed to somewhere else.

Now you might say that's just another theory arguing the original theory. Fair enough. Do we have any examples? Is there anywhere we can look around the world to see which theory seems to hold the greatest amount of water when it's put to the test of reality, where it really happens? Yes, we do. Alberta: the same thing happened. California: they went full-blown privatization is going to solve everything, with the investments and the competition and the lower rates. "Boy oh boy, we'll get out of this public bureaucracy and all this public debt that's been generated. We'll get away from all that and we'll go to the purity of the marketplace. The market will take care of it."

California alone, without the rest of the United States, is within the top 10 economies of the world. They had brownouts and blackouts. By the way, it's interesting to note parenthetically that the people who faced the blackouts and the brownouts were the people who had the least amount of discretionary income. They took the private plan that was offered that cost the least, but in the small print it says that those who have these cheaper rates and cheaper premiums and cheaper plans, by the way, are the first ones who get blacked out and browned out. California started having massive brownouts, blackouts, rising prices, crisis, and in the heart of the US, the leading capitalist country in the world, they went into full-speed reverse and are doing everything they can to re-regulate, and, by the way, spending hundreds of millions of dollars of Californian tax money to do it. Sound familiar? We all know about Enron. And guess what, about Enron? They were one of the key consultants in putting together the Tory plan. Come on.

The only way that major investors are going to put literally billions of dollars into Ontario's energy sector is if they're going to get a bigger return than they would somewhere else, and that means higher rates. Lower rates mean no investment; higher rates mean lots of investment. Higher rates mean the people lose, and let me remind the government: we are debating a time allocation motion that limits the right of the public to have a say about this plan, their emergency repair plan.

What else do we know about the markets to the south of us? Oh, it's coming out now. They manipulated the market, because do you know what else you need to think about when you consider energy in this province? If the demand goes high enough and/or the supply is not there, guess what happens in a supply-and-demand economy. The price goes up. There are major scandals happening all across the United States now where it's being found out how the private sector energy corporations manipulated the supply market so that there was less of it, because in a competitive market environment where there is demand but little supply, you have high prices. Suddenly, all these major power-generating plants had to go on prolonged maintenance programs, meaning they were shut down. Investments that were supposed to come didn't. You're not going to invest more money than you've originally invested to bring more power supply on-line, because the more the supply is provided, the more the price drops. If you're already in the energy sector, why would you do something that deliberately lowers the price? Come on. That's not the way business works.

All kinds of other manipulations went on that are very complex. And you know what? If we were talking about widgets, there would still be crime but it wouldn't be of the same severity, would it? Widgets, unlike power, don't run our hospitals or medical equipment in people's homes, or air conditioning for individuals who have diseases and are sensitive to the heat. Widgets don't interfere with people's lives to the point where moms have to worry about where they're going to get the money to buy baby food.

All of this, supposedly, was done at the beginning because of all the debt that was generated in the past. And how does their repair plan get paid for? Borrowed money. The corporation that assumes the stranded debt of the old Ontario Hydro will now have its debt go up to pay for this. It's nuts. It truly is nuts. You don't solve everything by selling it.

Oh, but what was their latest response? "OK, we won't deregulate right away." That's still going to happen in 2006. We're back on track till 2006, where it's regulated, and of course that means capped. But the wholesale market itself hasn't changed. All those other factors are still out there applying themselves with the price going up and down. I wouldn't be the least bit surprised—and I use my parliamentary privilege here to say this—if down the road we find out there's manipulation going on. Oh, what a horrible thought. But I'll bet you it's there.

All these things are happening, but the taxpayer only has to pay 4.3 cents. Who's paying the difference? The taxpayer, through more debt: the very reason you said you were stepping into this quagmire in the first place. And you want people to believe that you've got this in hand?

Oh, yes, you've got to love this. You were going to sell the entire kit and caboodle. You were going to sell everything. Now we're down to 49%, like somehow 49% is going to give us all the capital we need to deal with some of these problems, which, by the way, it won't. They're going to be nice, quiet, silent partners; they're not going to do anything to interfere with the 51%. That would be us, the public. They wouldn't do anything to interfere with the 51%, so we're supposed to quietly go back to sleep and assume everything is just fine because we own 51%.

Don't be fooled. The 49% is going to go along with doing what's in the best interests of the public, the 51% up to the point that it costs them a dime. Once they start losing money on their investment, and we are talking big money, does nobody think that they are going to suddenly start putting some pressure on, through legitimate political means, to have those decisions changed or to not take those decisions? Come on. It's so transparent, it's insulting to suggest the people aren't going to understand exactly what this means.

The other thing about the 49%: it's bad enough that they insult us with this transparently phony plan—I agree with the member from Scarborough-Agincourt, Mr Phillips. I was here in 1999 when the government sold the 407. What did they do with that money? Did they take that long-term investment that was owned by the people of Ontario and take the money derived from that and put it into some other long-term benefit for the people of Ontario? That would be the logical thing to do, first of all, if you assume that selling it made any sense, which it didn't. By the way, it has since been sold again, I think, for at least three times what that private entity paid for it. So how good a deal did we get in the first place?

Notwithstanding how bad a decision it was to sell the 407, you'd think they could have at least taken that money and said, "OK, we've got a big chunk of money here"—it was close to a couple of billion dollars—"and we're going to put it somewhere that's going to give different but equal benefit to the people of Ontario." No. Do you know what they did? They sold the 407, took the money, counted it as revenue for that one year and then used that money to pay for their promises to get re-elected. Think about it. That's like selling the family car to pay the gas bills. At the end of the year you may not owe anything on your gas credit card, but what's the point? You don't own a car any more, so what have you gained? You sold the 407, you took all that money and you used it as revenue, as if somebody said when they sold that car, "Oh, look at that. I'm making $80,000 because we got $15,000 for the car. And I only earn $65,000 in salary; now I make $80,000 a year." No, you don't. You still make $65,000 a year but you don't have a car. That's exactly what happened here. They took that money and used it for the in-year revenue, used it to pay for their promises, and then called a snap election the day after—I believe it was the day after—they dropped the budget.

Now here we are, on the brink of probably another provincial election next year—likely in the spring; could be in the fall. If we look at their last budget, we know that they have to find more than $2 billion just to pay for what was in that budget. "Asset sales." We knew what it meant. So now you're going to take this 49%, which is still going to leave you a bit of a fiscal problem, but I guarantee you that the member for Scarborough-Agincourt is bang on when he predicts the government will take that money, use it as in-year revenue to inflate what the income of the government is, and that's how they'll pay for whatever election promises they're going to come up with. Probably more tax cuts, because most of their promises were more tax cuts. So a good chunk of the 407 was taken and converted into tax cuts for people who don't need tax cuts—certainly not as badly as our communities need schools, hospitals, sewers, child care and environmental law and protection.

I made a note earlier, and my friend from Brant commented on it too. I won't say which minister because that doesn't serve any real purpose, but a few days after the announcement by the Premier that the rates were going to be capped, during the bantering back and forth in this place, one of the prominent cabinet ministers said in response to a heckle, "Yeah, but my phone's stopped ringing." I sort of thought that said it all.

This is not about a long-term plan for the provision of power. This is to bail you out of one of the stupidest political scandals that any government ever arranged for itself. And that's all it is: a band-aid to get you over the hump, past the next election. That's all.

Nobody's arguing the fact that power at cost, right now, is not reflected with 4.3 cents. We didn't argue it when we were government; neither did the other two parties when they were in government. We, collectively as a population, chose to let the debt rise rather than pass on those costs—and before we go on condemning all politicians of the past of all political stripes for doing that, let's keep in mind that one of the things that made this one of the most successful provinces in a successful nation was the provision of affordable, reliable power. And quite frankly there were politicians in the past that didn't want to go mucking up that formula by passing through all the costs. Did they do the right thing? We can stand here from this point in history and say no, but I wonder how quickly any of us would want to go around and kill the goose that was laying the golden egg, because in large part that's what Ontario Hydro did for us. Those auto plants: it's not a coincidence they didn't end up in the middle of the plains of Saskatchewan. We were very fortunate, and we are very fortunate, those of us who live in this part of this great country and this great province, because we're so close to the major American markets. Virtually all the communities of the members I see in here, all of us, have as part of our brochures and promotions for our local communities diagrams that show, within an hour's drive and within an hour's flight and within a two- or three-hour train ride, the markets you can reach from our particular locale. What a huge benefit.

The national railway: what a huge benefit. Being on the Great Lakes, linked through the St Lawrence Seaway out into the markets of the world: what a great advantage. When you take all that and a skilled workforce and our beloved universal health care system, which gives us a tremendous competitive advantage, and wrap it up, and as the bow provide reliable power at reasonable cost, you've got a winning formula.

For the entire duration of the last century, we and all the people we represent in this community benefited from power. So we went from power being one of the best competitive advantages we had—I'm talking about comparing us to other world locations. That's how lucky we were and are. We went from that kind of world to one where seniors were trying to decide whether to pay their hydro bill to keep the lights on or whether they should scrounge up enough dimes to go out and buy medicine. That was your answer to the problem: privatize it. Sell it off. Everything will work magically. The magic of the marketplace will take care of everything.

I want to remind anybody who's watching that this is the same government—this is important because we're coming up to an election—that prior to the last election rammed through changes to how political campaigns are financed, doubled the amount of money a corporation can give to a political party. Boy, what a coincidence. They doubled the amount of money corporations can give to a political party, and virtually everything they've done has been to the benefit of corporations and the very wealthy. Hmm. How about that? What a coincidence, eh?

By the way, it's worth reminding the House that when those laws were unilaterally rammed through by the majority government, never in the history of Ontario had changes to the election laws been made without negotiation and ultimate agreement from all three parties. I was in those initial meetings, with the member for Windsor-St Clair, who is the current House leader of the official opposition, and I think it was Norm Sterling at the time who was the government House leader. No, actually we were dealing with Mr Hodgson, who was carrying that legislation. I think we had maybe two meetings, because the minister opened up our discussions by saying, "No matter what you two say and no matter what the tradition of this place has been, if we don't like the ultimate agreement, we're going to bring in legislation unilaterally and ram it through using our majority." That's a great way to foster an environment of negotiation and give-and-take. What a great way to maintain confidence that the electoral system doesn't benefit one political party over another.

This is the same government, the same crew that's now spending $1.5 million to convince the people of Ontario that they are wonderful people for solving this horrible tragedy, the horrible tragedy you brought in against all evidence. It's not as if California happened after you changed things, or Alberta or the Enron scandals happened after. All those things happened well before you made your changes, and yet you went right ahead.

I suspect, Speaker—again, twice today I'll use my parliamentary privilege. I'm going to say that I think they were so far down the road of making promises to their friends—because we're talking billions of dollars here; billions of dollars finds lots of friends—that they couldn't afford the politics of backing away. The people of Ontario couldn't afford for you to move forward but what carried was your politics, where you had obligations to people who have long memories and have enough money to have staff who will do nothing but remember those things. That's where these lobbyists come from. They get paid big money, for good reason: they deliver. And boy, did they deliver on this one, eh? And you know what? They're still winning.

One could almost argue the evil genius of all this is the fact that the wholesale price is still being paid. They're still making their profit; it's just not being reflected in the bill. The difference is being carried by going further into debt. So in the last three minutes of my comments, I point out that that's exactly where you began. The problem was we weren't reflecting the true cost because the debt kept rising, and that's exactly where we are today, exactly where we are. As we speak, local utilities are already implementing much of what you've got in here, and every day that we, as consumers, use energy that costs 4.3 cents to us, the real cost is being added to the debt. That's the boondoggle.

The government likes to say, "The NDP government, you guys, increased the debt by $3 billion," but I would also remind the government that I believe it was in the last two years of our term we actually did pay down the debt. Overall, during the full term in government—I see one of the cabinet ministers look over at me like, "That can't be. You've got to be making it up." It's the same look I get when I say, "You know what? We would have balanced the budget before the Tories because we didn't have billions of dollars going out the window in tax cuts." It's true. They refuse to accept it. To this day, it still riles them.

Interjections.

Mr Christopherson: Look. Seven years, eight years later, they still go nuts at the idea, but it's true. It's true. So I grant you, the system hasn't worked well for a long time, and yes, it went up $3 billion in our time, but we had a plan to start bringing it down. You know what? That's more than you're doing right now, because you don't have a plan. What you've got is a band-aid that allows whoever the government is in 2006, if they let this thing run its term, the right to find itself in exactly the same quagmire that you found yourself in and that previous governments before you did, because you have solved nothing. You've hurt people, which you've done in other legislation.

Again, the same minister looks at me like, "How can he say those things?" Go talk to environmentalists, Minister, and ask any one of them if there's anything you've done that's helped the environment. Go talk to any worker representative in the province and ask them if you've passed any legislation that actually helped anybody. Go talk to any municipal councillor who didn't drink the Kool-Aid and ask whether there's anything you've done that's helped municipalities and councils. And we can say the same thing about health care and education and child care and virtually every other area—public transportation, you name it—except the area of taking care of rich, especially corporate, friends. On that one, you win everything hands down, gold medal. Absolutely. Nobody took care of rich people like you took care of rich people. And for the longest time, Speaker, they had the public convinced that they weren't doing that. That day is rapidly coming to a close as people take a look around and say, "I know the wealthy are better off. Am I? Is my community better off?" And the answer is no.

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): It's interesting. I sat here for the last three quarters of an hour and heard a speech that I've heard probably 70, 80, maybe 90 times so far in the last seven years. Not even the players are being changed. He just rants and rages and carries on, talks about how the rich, the wealthy, are the only ones who have had any improvement since we took office.

Mr Speaker, I want to remind you, and I'm sure you remember, of the 1.008 million net new jobs in the province of Ontario since we took office. Some 1.008 million people came home and said, "Guess what? I just got the job." How many jobs, in the first half of the decade in the 1990s, did your government create? I believe the record shows minus, net, 20,000. That's what you were doing for the people of Ontario: a tremendous number of people who have been unemployed in this province, caused mostly because of the NDP government and what they did. Now we have 1.008 million who are out there working.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Galt: Yeah, yeah. I hear the member for Kingston and the Islands talking about hydro. At least there are 1.008 million people who have a salary coming in that your government didn't help in the late 1980s either when you doubled spending and tripled welfare rates. No wonder—

Mr Gerretsen: I thought we did a great job.

Hon Mr Galt: I know you thought you just did a marvellous job, but I'm sitting here listening this afternoon and I've yet to hear any solutions. I understand why the Liberal Party would have no solution, because a week ago Monday their Web site on electricity was blank. It was blank, I guess like most of their minds. There was nothing there. But once it was brought up in the Legislature, instantly they threw something on for the next day. That's how much consultation they went through; that's how much thought they put into it. I guess the wind vane swung around, aimed at a few policy issues, and they put it on the Web site. I can understand why they would come through just like that.

At least when I look to the NDP, they have been on track. They've maintained the status quo of direction. They've kept rolling. They even had a bus, speaking of rolling, on the issue of electricity. I do have to recognize that at least they have been consistent in their direction.

I have no idea where the Liberals are going to go next. I guess if you've checked with them in the last five minutes, you may know what their policy is on electricity or anything else, but if you wait another five minutes, I'm very, very sure they will have changed.

I heard a lot of ranting and raging, particularly from the member for Hamilton West but also from the Liberal speakers, about consultation. If you look at the record of what has been going on in the last seven years, there's been more time spent in committee, on the road, than by any other government since way back to 1985, more time spent on bills here in the Legislature than any other government has spent. I think that's the kind of record that speaks for itself. You can get up and rant and rage, but the real numbers, the real facts, are what come through.

When they talk about time allocation motions, they are there because of the opposition blocking every move the government tries to make. Maybe with just a little more co-operation when we come forward with bills that they totally agree with, we could—

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't believe we have a quorum present in the House to hear these enlightening words.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you like me to check and see?

Mr Duncan: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you check and see if there is a quorum.

Deputy Clerk (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Deputy Clerk: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Northumberland.

Hon Mr Galt: I appreciate the concern that some of the Liberal members had about a quorum being present. It's unfortunate that as soon as they called quorum, they ran out of the Legislature, but I appreciate them now returning to listen to the important words that we'll be sharing.

There's just one other comment that I wanted to share with both of the opposition parties, and that has to do with committees on the road. Just check with other Legislatures in Canada, check with the federal government, and see how many of those governments take committees on the road. I think you'll be very surprised to find out that it is almost negligible, certainly in other provinces. On rare occasions the federal government does—on rare occasions, I believe. Other provinces think we are rather silly to go out on the road. Check with other states and I think you will find a tremendous record on the part of our government.

This afternoon we are indeed debating a time allocation motion, a motion that we shouldn't have to put on this bill, Bill 210, but do because of the opposition blocking. It is obviously necessary to get on with this bill so that the people in Ontario can receive their rebates and can receive adjustments on their bill. People across Ontario are demanding immediate action from the members of this House. They want help quickly to lower their hydro bills. They want our help to conserve energy.

Our government believes that Bill 210 is in the best interests of the people of this province. Many of the members opposite clearly share this view, although, typical of partisan positions, they don't want to admit it. The Liberals support the cap on electricity as well as many other elements of our government's action plan. They know it's the right thing to do, yet we continue to debate this proposed legislation. For this reason, I'm speaking today in favour of the motion that would allow this important piece of legislation to be passed. I urge all members of this House to do the right thing and vote in favour of this motion.

Our government recognizes that rapidly rising hydro bills are indeed unacceptable. We listened to the people of Ontario and we agree with them that electricity is a necessity of life. As the Premier has said, there are many things in this life that you can do without, but electricity is not one of them.

So we took action. We introduced legislation and a comprehensive plan to lower the cost of electricity in Ontario and to ensure its long-term supply. As part of this policy package, we are taking immediate steps to lower the hydro bills of families, small businesses and farms across the province. We are taking action to increase the long-term supply of electricity in Ontario. We're putting forward measures to promote green energy, alternative fuels and conservation. Effective December 1, the legislation that we have introduced, together with the associated regulations, would lower the price consumers pay for power to a constant 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour. This would end the price hikes of recent months.

The issue is not only that hydro prices have been too high. We've also heard from families, farmers and businesses right across this great province that they cannot tolerate the fluctuations in the rates that we've seen in recent months. We agree that rate volatility makes planning and budgeting difficult for everyone. That's why our plan, as well as lowering the price for power, would freeze the price at 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour until at least 2006, our goal being to introduce stability to hydro pricing in the province of Ontario.

That's not all. As well as lowering power rates and freezing them until 2006, we propose to refund the difference between the new 4.3-cent price and what consumers have actually paid for power since May 1, 2002. Consumers will get the refund whether they've been buying electricity from local distribution companies or whether they have entered into a contract with an electricity retailer. Under the provisions of the proposed legislation, an initial $75 refund cheque would be mailed to consumers as soon as possible, in most cases by the end of December. If a consumer were owed more than $75 in refunds, the balance would be credited to future bills.

Customers of some utilities such as Toronto Hydro have seen no change in the price they paid for power since May 1. That's because while these consumers were paying a fixed price of 4.3 cents, the utilities were paying the actual price of power on their behalf. These customers have what are called variance accounts, the balances of which show the difference between what they paid for electricity and what they actually owe. These customers would not be receiving a cheque under the proposed legislation, but any variance account balances owing would be paid off. Customers with equal-billing-plan accounts would receive their refunds as credits on future bills.

The legislation also provides that until March 31 of next year, no one in the province of Ontario could have their power cut off because of failure to pay their hydro bill. This provision would be retroactive to November 11, 2002.

The cost of power generation is just part of the total cost of hydro to consumers. They also pay for delivery. The legislation we introduced would enable us to cap the price consumers pay for delivery.

The GST also contributes to what consumers pay for power. We believe it is outrageous that the federal government continues to charge GST on electricity bills, because electricity is a necessity of life. However, typical of Liberals, there has never been a tax they didn't like. As part of our action plan, we continue to demand that the federal government not tax electricity in this manner. Ontario doesn't charge sales tax on electricity and neither should the federal government.

The pricing of electricity is complicated. It is sometimes difficult to know exactly what we're paying for. We are proposing to bring forward a newly designed standard province-wide hydro bill that is easy for consumers to read and understand.

Finally, we are launching an independent review of how charges on electricity bills are calculated. We want to make sure those charges are reasonable. The review will include charges imposed by the Independent Electricity Market Operator, which we would freeze, and a fixed monthly customer charge imposed by local electricity companies.

That is what we are proposing to do to bring relief to families, farmers and small businesses suffering from rising and fluctuating hydro bills. What's more, the measures we're taking to lower hydro bills will continue until there is enough energy supply to meet Ontario's long-term needs at reasonable prices.

Mr Gerretsen: You used to be a lot better extemporaneously.

Hon Mr Galt: I was extemporaneous for a while, but you seemed to object to it, so I'll stick to my notes so you don't call for a quorum and you can listen to the good message.

We recognize that the needs and concerns of large commercial and industrial power users are different from ordinary consumers. For one thing, their electricity costs, unlike those of individuals, are tax deductible. We will soon be entering into consultations with large commercial and industrial users about pricing arrangements for power.

Looking to the future, our government remains committed to the principles of an open market. We remain committed to the notion that the private sector has a vital role to play in Ontario's power industry. We saw what happened under the old Ontario Hydro regime: a $38 billion deficit in spite of the fact the NDP claimed they paid off some. After you raised it something like $16 billion to $20 billion and then paid down a couple of million, its net went up tremendously.

Our action plan leaves the wholesale market in place. Retail contracts are continued, and we remain committed to paying down the multi-billion dollar debt run up by the old Ontario Hydro. And you're absolutely right, I did say "deficit" earlier. It's debt—a $38-billion debt—just to clarify and make the member from Kingston and the Islands comfortable.

When we decided to restructure the old Ontario Hydro, one of our goals was to encourage new investment in electricity generation in Ontario. I'm happy to report that the goal is being met. Investments have been made by private sector operators in a variety of types of generation systems. Among the most significant new projects are the refurbishment of two nuclear generators by Bruce Power at Kincardine, TransAlta's natural-gas-fired operation at Sarnia, which is expected to come on line early in the new year, and ATCO and OPG's natural gas facility at Brighton Beach, which will come on line in 2004.

In addition to these major projects, a number of smaller generators, using wind power, water power and landfill gas, are also nearing completion, under construction or well along in the approval process. This is a direct result of opening up the market to competition, and also because of the select committee on alternative fuels that Mr Gilchrist spoke on a few minutes ago, the new commissioner for alternate fuels. Certainly as chair of that committee, it's a thrill for me to see the government moving ahead on green power, something that neither of the previous parties, when in government, gave any opportunity for, for wind turbines or solar power or any of these green activities.

I can assure members that Ontario continues to be an attractive location for competitive generation. When we undertook to open Ontario's electricity market to competition, we also made a commitment to decontrol Ontario Power Generation. The rationale was that you couldn't have competition when one player controlled such a large part of the market. Ontario Power Generation has made significant progress in reducing its market share through the lease of the Bruce nuclear generating station and the sale of the Mississagi River hydroelectric station.

But decontrol never meant a fire sale of OPG assets. From the beginning we made it clear that these are important public assets and that private-public partnership arrangements must be in the best interests of Ontario taxpayers and electricity consumers. These interests include ensuring not only maximum value but also environmental concerns. For example, the proposed sale of OPG's Atikokan and Thunder Bay plants was rejected because it did not meet our standard for ensuring maximum value.

The best interests of Ontario taxpayers and electricity users include ensuring an adequate long-term supply of electricity in Ontario at reasonable prices. To that end, over the next three years, OPG's focus will be on increasing supply, on building generating capacity. The first of the four units at Pickering A is expected to come on line in the second quarter of 2003. We have also directed Ontario Power Generation to proceed with the Beck tunnel project.

To sum up, with both Ontario Power Generation and a range of private sector players, the wholesale market for power in Ontario is open for business. We believe that in the long run an open competitive market for power generation will lead to increased investment, more capacity and lower prices.

As well as lowering hydro bills and encouraging new supply, we are taking action to promote green energy and conservation. We recognize that efforts to increase electricity supply must respect our obligations to the environment, sustainability, and future generations.

The proposed legislation would provide for a range of tax incentives to promote conservation and stimulate new investment in electricity from alternative fuels and renewable energy sources.

The proposed legislation also gives the Minister of Energy and the Ontario Energy Board powers to promote energy conservation and efficiency. We propose to bring forward other measures that encourage customers to conserve energy and to use it more efficiently.

The actions we are proposing will enhance the efficiency of the energy sector, keep in place the incentives for the wholesale market to increase supply, and protect the consumer. They would lead to lower hydro costs, both now and in the future. We are taking these actions because electricity is not like other commodities; it is a basic need like health care.

For these reasons, I'm speaking today in favour of the motion that would allow this important piece of legislation to be passed. I urge all members of the House to do the right thing and vote in favour of this bill, Bill 210.

Mr Gerretsen: First of all, I would like to start off by complimenting the member from Hamilton West. I think he gave an excellent speech here today on this issue, both from the closure point of view and also from the viewpoint of the content of the bill. The unfortunate part, of course, is the fact that the way the rules are set up in this House now, the NDP gets to speak about four or five times longer than each Liberal member on a particular issue, which is regrettable because it somehow doesn't speak to the equality in the House of the individual members.

First of all, we're dealing again with a time allocation motion. I don't want to dwell on it at great length but I do want to say that even the time allocation motions, the closure motions, are in my opinion getting to be more and more restrictive. At one time we used to have a motion, for example, that a bill be given second reading after a particular stage in the debate. Then it would go to committee for a while, it would come back, and there would be an hour or two or a day's debate on third reading. Now that's not even happening any more. If you look at the motion today, it basically says that once the motion is passed—which will be at 10 to 6 today, because of the government's majority—then the next time it's called, it has to be voted on immediately for second reading. It doesn't go to committee and it will be given third reading right away.

It seems to me that this is a complete attack on the democratic principles and the parliamentary rules that have been a tradition within the Westminster model. Now we don't just have closure on an item any more but we cut off all possible debate, we cut off all possible committee time that is required with a major bill like this.

I could go through all the statistics about how closure was hardly ever used up until the mid-1980s and how it's become more and more a custom of this House. I won't be doing that today, you'll be glad to know. I will not be doing that, other than to say that closure has now been used 88.8% of the time in this House, with this government, which I think isn't right, to say the least. It just isn't right.

However, dealing with the substance of the bill, there are so many things one could talk about. The one that really gets me probably more than any other is that it is quite clear, from everything that has happened on the electricity issue and anything relating to electricity within the last year, the government has completely changed its mind. Whereas at one time it was in favour of an open, free market as far as the consumption and generation side are concerned, it no longer believes in an open market as far as the rates people are going to be charged are concerned. It has decided it is going to charge people 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour for the next four years, and that's it. So there is no longer an open market. For anybody to suggest that somehow there still is an open market is just plain incorrect. It's not right. It's not accurate.

The government somehow likes to weasel out of that situation by saying, "Well, it's the Liberals' fault," or "It's somebody else's fault." The point is, they've totally changed their mind on it. At least have the honesty of your convictions and say, "Yes, we tried the open market and the rates went up too high. We didn't want to saddle the people of Ontario with the tremendous rates out there so we decided to take this course of action."

At least I would have some intellectual respect for you and say, "OK, I think you're doing the right thing." I do believe you're doing the right thing. I totally believe there are certain public services that the people of this province should be able to rely on, in the highly developed country and the highly developed province that we're in. I think water should be a public utility and there should be no private involvement. I think electricity should be a public utility and there should be no private involvement. I think public education should be there for all to enjoy so that we can have that equal opportunity in life. I think the same thing about health care. That's why I totally applaud the Romanow report and what it stands for—totally and completely. I can tell you that right now, because I believe in good public health care and that it be accessible to everyone.

Let there be no question about that: you guys have changed your minds, and you're entitled to change your minds. I would hope that in a parliamentary system somebody changes their mind at some point in time about something, or else what the heck are we doing here? You've changed your minds. We're now on to something totally different, and that's the point of it.

There was a point made earlier today with which I totally agree as well, and that is that one of the reasons we enjoy such a good economy in Ontario and why we are the leaders in many respects has been the fact that over the last 100 years there has been cheap electric power available. It hasn't been at cost, but we have used the electricity rates in Ontario as an economic development tool in order to get industry to locate in this province, which we all want. We all want the jobs that are associated with industry. So this whole notion that somehow the stranded debt that Ontario Hydro has or its successor companies have is entirely due to mismanagement and everything else that is associated with it is totally incorrect. It has an awful lot to do with the economic policies that governments of all different stripes have had over the last 100 years in this province. That's the long and the short of it.

Could there be better management? Has there been some mismanagement? Absolutely. The Provincial Auditor in his report today certainly points to a number of different areas where this government during the past two to three years has totally mismanaged the electricity file. I just want to read some of that because it ties directly into what they're trying to accomplish in this bill.

I assume that one of the reasons the government was in favour of opening the market and privatizing a very significant portion of it was to get rid of the debt. We always heard it. It was to get rid of the stranded debt that's there. Well, what's actually happening is that by guaranteeing the rate to individuals at 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour for the next four years, you're going to add to that debt. If we have to buy power or produce power at more than 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour, whether it's done privately or through Ontario Power Generation, who is going to pay for the difference? The difference is going to be added to the debt. That's the reality of the situation. So it could very well be that at the end of four years, the debt is not where it is right now but it will be more, by whatever the difference is between 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour and whatever we produce it for or buy it for.

What the auditor talks about is how this government over the last two or three years has allowed the deficit situation and the total debt of Ontario Hydro to increase by something like $341 million. Let me just read you what he says. He says, "In my view, as of March 31, 2002, there is an increasing risk that part or all of the stranded debt will not be recoverable from the ratepayers"—the people who pay for the electricity—"and will therefore become a liability of the taxpayers."

You could argue that in many cases they're the same people, and in a lot of cases they are, but not entirely. He goes on to say, "My view is based on the following observations:

"The financial performance of Hydro's successor companies for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2002 was well below expectations. The government expected its two wholly owned Hydro successor companies—Ontario Power Generation Inc and Hydro One Inc—to earn $524 million"—that's what they thought they were going to earn—"during that fiscal year; instead, the two corporations jointly earned only $179 million, a shortfall of $345 million."

He goes on to say, "Accordingly, none of the $179 million in earnings is available to reduce the stranded debt, and as a result $341 million was absorbed by Ontario's taxpayers," as an increase in the debt.

That leads me to one other thing. I may not be all that popular, but I personally—I'm not speaking for my party now—don't agree with the $75 rebate to individuals. I think individuals should be protected, but wouldn't it make a heck of a lot more sense if we would take that $75 off the individual's next hydro bill—

Interjection: Credit.

Mr Gerretsen:—as a credit? You're already doing that after January 1. We're trying to somehow buy people off just before Christmas, and there may be people out there who need it. But the one way in which we could guarantee that as a result of people not getting the $75 they're not going to be inconvenienced, we could for example say in the legislation—and it may very well be there—that nobody's power can be cut off. You reach exactly the same conclusion, but you don't get involved in this silly nonsense of sending $75 back to people and then somehow getting it back from them again after January 1. It reminds me a little bit about the $200 cheques, you may recall. We got them just before the last election, which may have had something to do with the government winning re-election in 1999.

Do we really play people to be that stupid, that somehow we're trying to send them $75, but for the rest of it we're saying, "Well, we'll take it off your next bill"? Why can't we take that off their next bill right now and make provisions for those people who are in really dire financial straits, by guaranteeing that their power is not going to be cut off?

My time is almost up. Unfortunately, there are so many more things that one could say about this. All I can tell you is that whatever mess and whatever anxiety people have had about their hydro bills over the last three to four months, there's only one cause of that: the government of the day simply didn't know what the heck they were doing. It has nothing to do with the NDP policy; it has got nothing to do with the Liberal policy. They're the guys in charge. They bungled it. They didn't know what they were doing, and they've got to pay the price for it. And the price we're all going to pay as a result of their tremendous bungling of this whole situation is that the stranded debt of Ontario Hydro is going to go up even further.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I'm very pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill 210. That's really the issue we're discussing here. The opposition obviously have talked about a number of other things, as they usually do.

I listened earlier today to the member from Scarborough East and his comments. He's obviously been named to head a concerted effort on the part of the government to lead, really, the discussion on conservation. Conservation is a very important part of this Bill 210, as well as a number of other amendments.

I think for those viewing and for the record, I want to put on the record a couple of things, starting with a brief history of how long this has been an issue.

I heard the member for Hamilton West, Mr Christopherson, earlier today speaking about the economic model of supply, the generation of electricity, and demand, the consumer's part of the equation. There has to be some kind of balance there. If there's a shortage of supply, ie, gaming the market, then obviously the price goes up. He should be familiar with a report that was issued just recently here. This report I'm referring to is the Market Surveillance Panel Monitoring Report on the IMO-Administered Electricity Markets for the First Four Months, May to August 2002. It's dated October 7, 2002. It's a very worthwhile reference point for explaining some of the causes—I believe independently these people are trying to assess, audit and determine if in fact, as was suggested, that there was market manipulation—were indeed in place. In fact, the report clearly states that was not the cause. If there's enough time here, I'll certainly help the viewer understand what were some of the constraints in the system itself, beyond purely the demand side—that is, temperatures being up and us having to use more electricity to run our air conditioners.

I think if I want to go back to broader implications, we can go further back. Mr Christopherson talked about the marketplace as if he actually agreed with it. But if you go back far enough, you'll find that in 1993 the NDP froze the rates. If you go back far enough, you'll find that Sir Adam Beck's original concept was, and it's a well-known phrase, "power at cost."

So then it comes to, what is the cost? That is a fair question. Certainly my consumers in the riding of Durham want to know what the costs are. Well, the costs are a function of how efficient the organization is, how effectively they operate their various reactors or water turbines or turbines using fossil fuel, and how much competition they have.

It's my understanding that, under the Power Corporation Act, smaller companies and indeed large companies were not allowed to cogenerate. Inco Steel in Whitby wasn't allowed to use the huge thermal current going up their chimney to turn a turbine to create electrons to light the lights. That wasn't allowed. In other words, it was a monopoly. The monopoly was the old Ontario Hydro.

Did they provide power at cost? Well, in anybody's accounting reference, you'll find out that they had accumulated $38 billion in debt. Obviously, they weren't selling power at cost. They were actually doing what the NDP did: throwing it into the debt bucket and not dealing with the issue.

What did this government do? When first elected, they commissioned the Macdonald commission. As many people would know, Donald Macdonald was Trudeau's finance minister—and I don't want to cast aspersions, but he did a definitive amount of work on free trade, which is really something the Liberals have waffled on all their life. I really think that report indicated that the current model of Ontario Hydro wasn't sustainable.

There are really three parts. There's the generation part, the transmission part, which is the big lines, and the distribution part, which is generally the local lines—and part of it was Ontario Hydro, mostly in the rural parts of Ontario.

What they recommended was trying to find some relationship between the debt and all the assets. So they set up a market design committee and determined what the debt equity was for the generator, the transmission and the distributor. In fact, at the end of it, they determined that the amount of assets would not support the amount of debt. By anybody's measure, that is a definition of being bankrupt. But because it's a public corporation, they just keep going to the taxpayer, to the government. Indeed, the member from Kingston and the Islands admitted it. He said there was mismanagement. Indeed there was, by all governments of all stripes. But this government had the courage to actually study the issue with the Macdonald commission.

I was fortunate to be involved in an all-party committee. Mr Galt and a few others were involved in it. I think Howard Hampton was on it for the NDP. That committee was the select committee on nuclear affairs, I guess. They considered a report, a proposal, which was called, How Do We Bring Our Nuclear Plants Up to Optimum Operating Capacity? Let it be stated, first of all, that there's an acronym for that report. It was called the NAOP, the nuclear asset optimization plan. In that plan, what they found is that if you went to the fundamentals, if you compared the Candu reactor—a very robust nuclear reactor compared to other forms of nuclear reactors—they're quite robust, but they didn't run very well. In fact, they were down 60% of the time.

In fact, the big controversy right now with the Pickering A station—I live in Durham. That Pickering A station has been a problem for 15 years or more. They retubed that plant under the Liberal government in 1988 at a considerable amount of expense. Some would say the job was poorly managed then. In fact, it's my understanding that the reason it's being retubed now is because there was a problem after it was done in 1988. Anybody who works there, and many of them are my constituents, tells me that the job was done poorly then.

If you look at the operating reports for the nuclear plants, you'll find that in fact they haven't operated at capacity anything over the 70% until recently.

The point I wanted to make is that one of the important parts of the supply-demand problem is making sure we don't reduce what they call "built supply," or existing inventory of supply. One of the problems that was clearly in this report I referred to earlier—indicated the fundamental causes why there was a shortage of supply and how long that shortage of supply has existed. You should know, and we should all know, that the majority of our peak power has been provided from the United States for the last number of years. This is not something new with the market opening. It is not anything to do with the market opening. But I would also say that the peak load has in fact shifted from what used to be purely a winter peak load to a summer peak load because of air conditioning. So the balancing of the system's full capacity at peak demand is a significant problem because the increased consumption—I guess some would equate that to being our standard of living, more air conditioners etc—is going to cause the demand for energy to increase. So we have to increase the supply of electricity. Mr Gilchrist is leading a number of initiatives, basically around the framework of building more generation, but more specifically looking at conservation and also looking at new forms of green energy.

Another very technical area, and I don't have enough time because of the limited time I was allowed to speak, is the transmission congestion. That's something not well understood, but in fact the generating capacity in certain areas of the province can be stranded by the incapacity of the transmission system itself. It is referred to as constraints within the system. So to get the power that's needed in a certain part of the province, you can't get it from a water dam in northern Ontario. You may indeed have to import it from the southern United States. In fact, most of our peak load for the last number of years during hot periods and very cold periods has indeed saved our ass by bringing it in from other jurisdictions. Well, I'm not sure that's appropriate. I withdraw that "ass" part, but I'll say they saved our bacon, so to speak.

I do think it's important to put on the record that the current challenge of both the Bruce and Pickering nuclear plants needs to be solved. When you look at our overall base load and where it comes from, you'll see more clearly the issue that I speak of. I want to put that on the record. That's why I'm going quickly here. Our base load is basically made up of nuclear, which is about 32%; coal, about 27%; oil and gas, about 13%; hydroelectric is about 27%—that's from the water dams—and miscellaneous about 0.28%. Clearly we have to increase the generation. In fact, when the nuclear equation happened, with Bruce being partially available and being an unplanned outage and Pickering not being up, obviously we had a supply generating problem. Now, was that real or was that manipulated, or as someone would say, gaming the market? There are other people looking at that, but it certainly is a question we should all be interested in.

Our demand, looking forward, is going to increase from 27,000 megawatts of power to 37,000, and I can show you there is a considerable amount of work by Mr Gilchrist and others to increase that 10,000 additional megawatts by a number of projects that are either on paper or in the ground. I'm confident that we've identified the problem, but more importantly we've put consumers first. They have confidence in stability of price at 4.3 cents per kilowatt. This government is the government to go forward and address the deficiencies of the last decade. I say all three governments have had a part in that. It's this government that's made a difference by taking action. This bill will address that.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): It's a great opportunity to rise in the House and speak to Bill 210 about a very critical and important subject to all Ontarians, and that is the price of electricity and the price of their hydro bill. As you know, it certainly has been on everybody's mind over the last—I guess it's almost been a year now that it's been non-stop. Really, through all this, one of the things that is very apparent is that when I talk to people at the grocery store, the thing they keep asking me is, "What is the government going to do next?" "Frankly," I tell them, "I don't know what they are going to do next."

They ask me whether the freeze is a good thing. They ask me, "Do we have enough power if the weather gets cold, or if it gets hot again?" "Frankly," I tell them again, "I don't think the government knows whether we are going to have enough power." I don't think the government knows what is really going to happen to the generation of power, nor to the price of their bills. Certainly there is a cap here, but a lot of people are saying, "Oh yes, after the election the cap will be gone or they'll have some other loophole to get at us again." They've just lost total faith in reality, I think, a pillar of Ontario, and that is Ontario Hydro. People thought this was one of the real hallmarks of this province, our hydro, that we could depend on power and depend on it being there for us. But I think what's happened over the machinations of the last year is that people have lost faith in hydro and the government's ability to manage it.

The thing that really struck me was that earlier on we had a court ruling that the government of Ontario had no right to sell Hydro One. We were all told that we're lawmakers in this Legislature, yet this government said, "We don't care what the court said. We're going to pass a law to overrule the courts." And they did that. They're still asking all other Ontarians to obey the courts, to obey judges. This government says, "We don't care what the judges said. We make up our own laws and we don't like that law, so we're going to go ahead, overrule the court, and sell Hydro One."

Today in the House the MPP for Scarborough-Agincourt asked the Minister of Finance again whether they were hell-bent on selling off the other 49% of Hydro One, and the minister indicated that they were proceeding to do that. That is most disturbing in light of the fact that the government really doesn't have a game plan in terms of what they're doing with hydro, yet they're still going to sell off the other 49% of Hydro One. It's especially galling to the people of Ontario that they're proceeding to do this when they've seen the fiasco created by these same ministers, Premier Eves included, when they basically gave away a public asset called Highway 407.

They gave it away to some Spanish-Quebec consortium. Through these years, the value of that 407 highway has almost quadrupled. But that increased value doesn't go back to the Ontario taxpayer; it goes to this offshore Spanish consortium with SNC-Lavalin in Quebec. And then to add more venom to people's kitchen table, if you ever talk to people who ride the 407, they pay the highest toll rates in North America when they ride this highway that they built with their tax dollars. In the history of what happened to 407 and the gouging of the public that continues in southern Ontario, they are now going to proceed, and it's basically the same characters on the government side. They have already set up the fire sale for 49% of Hydro One. If you think the people of Ontario have any kind of confidence that this government is doing the right thing in selling off the rest of Hydro One,

I tell you it's clear—I'm sure in all our ridings, if you did a poll and asked the people in your riding whether they think that Premier Eves should continue on his plan to sell off the rest of Hydro One, they would tell you no. Is there anybody out there who thinks we should sell off, especially in this time of uncertainty when we don't even know whether we're going to have enough power at times, whether we should proceed with the fire sale of Hydro One?

This government doesn't listen to anybody. They proceed to do whatever they think is best, for whom I don't know, but they're hell-bent on selling off Hydro One, no matter what the court said. Never mind what the opposition says and never mind what their constituents are saying. The constituents on both sides of the House are saying, "Don't sell off the other 49%." They're still going to sell it. They're not listening to their constituents or the courts.

In this legislation there is more uncertainty because there are so many giant questions left unanswered. The future of generation: what's happening at Pickering? What's happening at Bruce? There's British Energy, near bankruptcy, having to be bailed out. There are so many huge, unanswered, troubling questions. It's like a black cloud over the province of Ontario because this government, as usual, is so reckless. They don't listen to people. They make decisions in some kind of convoluted way.

It's the unnamed, faceless backroom consultants. That's what they probably did. We know they were paying consultants. The Provincial Auditor said today that they were paying some consultants $2,800 a day. I wonder how many consultants they brought in on this hydro mess and what they paid them. Maybe you should ask those consultants on the hydro mess to give us their money back. They certainly didn't give them the right information, because they had to redo things. Is this the fourth, fifth or sixth hydro bill we've had before us? You lose count.

I wonder how many thousands of dollars a day the hydro consultants got paid when they advised the energy minister, the Premier and the finance minister. It must have been a consultants' holiday around here at Queen's Park. Every consultant probably looks down at Queen's Park and says, "Hey, there's my pension plan." Every time they see Ernie Eves, the consultants smile. "Boy, what kind of contract am I going to get today?" That's who is making the decision on Hydro One or on these bills. It's not the legislators, the lawmakers. I'm sure it's these highly paid Tory consultants who get these blank cheques to live off the government trough. You can't ask them questions. They're nameless, faceless people. Thank God we've got a Provincial Auditor who at least has the independence to challenge the hiring of all these consultants.

As you know, we had this fiasco with Andersen Consulting spending hundreds of millions of dollars with the minister of community and social services. Now they've changed their name to some other name. I don't know what it is. They're still ripping off the taxpayer; Andersen is ripping off another $300 million from the taxpayers. These are the people making up our policies that we're supposed to try and somehow explain to our constituents. They hired some guy to come in here the other day. He's going to write the hydro bill. They're paying another guy, Sal Badali, a consultant from Deloitte and Touche or wherever he's from. He's coming in.

I don't know what the energy minister is doing for his salary. Let the energy minister, who couldn't even understand the hydro bill and has probably never paid a hydro bill in his life, write the hydro bill. They've got to bring in somebody from Bay Street to write a hydro bill so that people in small-town Ontario who will have to read this thing, or people in my neighbourhood who will have to try and read a consultant's makeup of a hydro bill—this is how the government works. If they've got a problem, hire 10 consultants. Pay them 2,000 or 3,000 bucks a day. Whatever they ask for, these consultants get. It would be interesting to know how many hundreds of millions of dollars this government has paid on consultants.

Mr Gilchrist: You guys spent it on researchers.

Mr Colle: I saw the member for Scarborough East today. He's supporting the consultants because they're his friends. He says, "How dare you attack consultants?" They're the friends of the government. The consultants are untouchable. "The Provincial Auditor is wrong," you heard them say today—Minister Tsubouchi over there. The Provincial Auditor is wrong. They're right. The consultants know all. They know best, and that's how this government makes its policies. It's not by listening to people or to the courts. It listens to these hired guns, these consultants who get paid—what did the auditor say?—$2,800 a day.

What does that consultant do for $2,800 a day? They will never tell us who the consultants were on the hydro mess. They will never tell us how many hundreds of thousands of taxpayers' dollars they gave to these consultants whom they refuse to name. They're still the mystery consultants who should give their money back for the mess they've created in this province.

This is hydro by consultants. It's hydro policy by $2,000- and $3,000-a-day consultants. That's not the way to write legislation

The Deputy Speaker: The time for debate has ended.

Mr Stockwell has moved government notice of motion number 81. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1750 to 1800.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR EXPENSES ACT (CABINET MINISTERS AND OPPOSITION LEADERS), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR L'OBLIGATION DE RENDRE COMPTE DES DÉPENSES (MINISTRES ET CHEFS D'UN PARTI DE L'OPPOSITION)

Mr Wilson, on behalf of Mr Tsubouchi, moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 216, An Act respecting access to information, the review of expenses and the accountability of Cabinet ministers, Opposition leaders and certain other persons / Projet de loi 216, Loi concernant l'accès à l'information ainsi que l'examen des dépenses et l'obligation de rendre compte des ministres, des chefs d'un parti de l'opposition et de certaines autres personnes.

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent that we go in rotation this evening.

Interjections.

Mrs Munro: Twenty minutes each.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): How be you read it again, so I know what you're—

Mrs Munro: Give me one second.

The Acting Speaker: The minister has the floor, and I would presume the minister would start to make his speech.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines) On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think we've agreed to split the time, 20 minutes each, stand down the leads, and it will count as one sessional day. I am asking for unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker: The minister has asked to stand down the leads, 20 minutes per party in rotation, and this will be one sessional day. And no other business is called. Agreed? Agreed.

Debate.

Mrs Munro: It is my pleasure to begin the debate today on Bill 216, the Accountability for Expenses Act (Cabinet Ministers and Opposition Leaders), 2002. This is just the latest plank in the government's platform of important accountability measures to bring greater openness and transparency to the way in which MPPs and their staff spend taxpayers' dollars. Since 1995, the Public Sector Salary Disclosure Act, the Balanced Budget Act, and the Taxpayer Protection Act have all given the taxpayers of Ontario greater legislative protection over the taxpayer dollars government spends. It gives greater assurance to the people that their government will not return to the tax-and-spend days of Liberal and NDP governments and that their interests are protected.

This bill is only the latest addition to this impressive track record. For decades governments of all stripes in this House have operated under different sets of rules which were hidden from public view, too open to interpretation and inconsistently applied. Acting in good faith, ministers, parliamentary assistants and their respective staffs have claimed expenses which in turn have been called into question by their critics. Whether they were claims from dinners, trips or hosting delegations, all parties at some point have been on the receiving end of this criticism.

Now is the time to take action to end the uncertainty and speculation, and to give taxpayers real assurance that the people who spend their hard-earned money are truly accountable for it and have clear, consistent rules by which they must abide.

That's why this past June, Premier Ernie Eves asked the Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet to review these rules and bring forward a proposal about how to improve the system and ensure it is open, accountable and fair. This bill is the result of that review and encompasses the need for a clear set of rules backed by an independent third party who has the power not only to advise, but to impose remedial action if necessary. If carried by this Legislature, this bill would be the first in Canada to bring legislative oversight to the way in which members of Parliament handle their expenses. Giving the Integrity Commissioner the power to establish rules, regularly review them and table an annual report would give unprecedented transparency and accountability to the entire process. By giving this role to an independent third party, the bill would provide much-needed impartiality to this process to ensure it is fair and reasonable.

This works on a number of levels. By referring this to an independent third party, it removes the partisan and adversarial nature of interpreting this issue in the Legislature. By doing so, it would help focus its energy on the real policy issues of the day that the people of Ontario sent us here to resolve. Health care, education and the environment are all more important to taxpayers than how ministers, parliamentary assistants and opposition leaders spend their money on dinner. We owe it to them to come to a real resolution on this matter so that the House can focus its energy on these substantive issues and move forward.

This bill would help to do that by preventing endless partisan accusations, by providing for a mechanism to resolve disputes that might arise, and for the first time, by giving the people of Ontario a glimpse at how the leaders of the opposition spend the taxpayer dollars for which they are responsible. Requiring all ministers, parliamentary assistants, leaders of the opposition parties and their respective staffs to submit their expenses to the Integrity Commissioner will in itself provide a greater level of accountability.

As a person who enjoys the unqualified confidence of this House, the Integrity Commissioner is in an excellent position to judge with impartiality whether or not an expense was reimbursed according to the rules, rules which he is now in the process of developing. Similar to the way in which the Provincial Auditor encourages the responsible use of public funds, this reporting system would add a level of scrutiny never before seen in Ontario and not seen anywhere else in Canada. The commissioner would, on a proactive level, be able to provide advice to a person who seeks it, giving all persons under this bill the advantage of non-partisan advice before incurring an expense. This advice would be the same for all parties, whether Progressive Conservative, Liberal or New Democratic. It would apply equally to all those included under the bill and would provide much-needed consistency that is lacking under the current system.

I think it's really important to highlight this particular aspect of the bill with regard to the opportunity for this non-partisan advice. I know that many members take advantage of the ability to inquire currently under the Integrity Commissioner's responsibility with regard to areas that they face, questions on which they wish to have a decision made. It is this kind of non-partisan advice that would be available to all members in this particular piece of legislation.

I know that when you look at the Integrity Commissioner's report today, as it stands, and in his current function, there are often many examples in his report of the kinds of situations that he has been asked to give advice on. I know that many members find this opportunity to be very, very valuable. Obviously, having that non-partisan advice in this new context will, again, provide the members with the security that they have his advice and his position, his interpretation, and therefore are able to move forward in the same way they are able to seek that advice under the legislation we currently have.

Of course, we all know that no matter what the system, situations will arise that were never contemplated, the grey area that requires the use of judgment. Should a person exercise judgment that the commissioner feels was inappropriate, he would then be able to direct a person to repay the reimbursement and to do so within a set period of time. I think this simply underlines the point I made previously with regard to the current legislation with the Integrity Commissioner, that obviously seeking the advice ahead of time is an absolutely foolproof way of ensuring that you are in fact not stepping into that grey area. This is, I think, a very, very important protection for all members who need to have that kind of impartial judgment.

While I anticipate that the vast majority of people would defer to the commissioner's decision, there is always the possibility that a person could choose not to do so. In that case, the commissioner would then be able to name the person in the annual report. As all members of this House know, this may well be the most damaging of punishments: public humiliation.

Again, following the same kind of pattern that currently exists with the Members' Integrity Act, the Integrity Commissioner has that ultimate tool available to him in naming a member. I know that all of us in this House are very conscious of the need to ensure that we follow within those guidelines currently set up in the Members' Integrity Act, and this simply runs in a parallel way for the members of cabinet, parliamentary assistants and the leaders of the opposition. Should there be a situation where that is not sufficient, the commissioner would also be able to recommend to the Legislature any other remedial action that he or she sees fit. Again, this is consistent with the commissioner's power under the Members' Integrity Act, and fits the government's commitment to accountability and openness.

One of the most important features of this new regime would be the evenness and consistency that would exist between offices. The same rules would apply to me as a parliamentary assistant, cabinet ministers past and present, the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the third party and all our respective staff. We would all be held to the same standard and, more importantly, the public would be able to hold us to the same standard because this bill would require the government to post the rules on its Web site and to make them available upon request. Again, this level of openness is unprecedented.

I know there are a number of members across the way who are opposed to the legislation. I have heard them say that it leans on them a little too much and that it holds the opposition to a higher standard than the government. Nothing could be further from the truth. This bill would open to public scrutiny the expenses of the leaders of the opposition parties. It may be a shock for the opposition parties, whose expenses have never been the subject of public scrutiny; however, the goal of this bill is to be fair to all members and accountable to all taxpayers. On this side of the House, we don't mind the scrutiny. After all, governing brings with it the responsibility and obligation to be called to one's actions. We do that for an hour in this House each day. However, we also know that a taxpayer is a taxpayer and a tax dollar is a tax dollar, and it is unfair to the people of this province not to be able to request or review the expenses of the Leader of the Opposition and his staff.

I know it is possible that the Liberals may claim that this bill would actually hold the former Premier, Bob Rae, and Lyn McLeod to a higher standard, but before I get to that, let me say that I never thought I would see Monte Kwinter, the Liberal member for York Centre, standing in front of a portrait of NDP Premier Bob Rae defending his legacy. I also wonder if the honourable member had forgotten about the $300,000 trip to Italy that he took when he was part of the David Peterson government—

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): How much?

Mrs Munro: It was $300,000—until Graham Richardson reminded him of it on last Friday's 6 o'clock Global news. I'm not sure about him, but I certainly would not have forgotten a $1,000-a-night, four-star hotel. But I digress.

There is nothing in this bill that would hold the former leaders of the parties opposite to a higher standard than our former leader and Premier, and that's well understood. The Liberals know full well that Premier Harris's records have always been subject to freedom of information legislation. They seem to not have had a problem obtaining the records of other cabinet ministers, so I find it somewhat confusing why they think that the records of the prime minister of a government would not be subject to a freedom of information request. This has always been the case and there is nothing in the current legislation before the House that would change that.

Of the 56 government members, 49 of them can have their expenses examined under freedom of information legislation—under the current legislation, I should emphasize—because they are ministers or parliamentary assistants. Out of the 37 members of the opposition caucus, none of them can fall under the freedom of information requests, not one. The same is true for the caucus of the third party and their nine sitting members.

Under the proposed legislation, the numbers for the government side would not change. We would still be held to account, as we always have been. On the other hand, we would be taking the giant step, I might suggest, of increasing those covered under the opposition caucuses to one each. I recognize that to increase those covered under freedom of information legislation—I should say, to make them covered by it at all—is a giant step in accountability for the members opposite, but I hope they will agree that this is a reasonable step.

It is also important to remember that even when the leaders of the opposition parties are covered by the legislation, they would not be covered nearly to the same extent. These amendments would only allow a person to request or review the records dealing with expense claims. It would only extend the freedom of information legislation to deal with those dealing with travel, meals, accommodation and hospitality, and that's it. Caucus research offices would not be covered, and neither would the expense records of the deputy leader of the opposition, nor would their education critic, health critic or any other member of their shadow cabinet.

The only new people covered by this legislation would be the leaders of the opposition and the staff. If that's not a level of scrutiny they can handle, they should come out and say it. They should vote against the bill, and then explain themselves to their constituents over the inter-sessional break.

These are important changes to the way in which ministers, parliamentary assistants, the leaders of the opposition parties and their respective staffs can claim business-related expenses. For far too long, the rules governing those expenses have been vague and inconsistently applied. I think it's extremely important to emphasize the fact that the rules have been there, they have been vague and they have been inconsistently applied. This is an opportunity we have taken to ensure that we do what is expected. The people of Ontario expect their elected officials to spend their tax dollars reasonably and responsibly. It is time to set in place a system that will provide for greater scrutiny and consistency.

This bill has been carefully crafted to make leaders of the opposition parties accountable for the taxpayer dollars with which they are entrusted. At the same time, it does not provide for any additional disclosure of any member's constituency work, which would still be overseen by the Board of Internal Economy. This is a fair process that recognizes the important leadership roles of the opposition party leaders as distinct from the rest of their caucus. It would provide a more equitable standard of openness, which is sorely lacking under the current system. By having the Integrity Commissioner report annually, it provides for an ongoing system of fairness and accountability.

This is important legislation that is needed to ensure the accountability that the people of Ontario expect from us. I look forward to the continued debate on this bill and encourage the House to give it speedy passage.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I'm very pleased to join this debate this evening and to tell you that one of the things I've been interested in over the last seven years is the whole question of accountability. I certainly will be supporting this bill and I know our caucus will be supporting this bill.

I don't like the way the member for York North, for whom I have a high regard—she was a very prominent member of the public accounts committee for many years and made very valid contributions. But she kept talking about the opposition leaders as if this bill dealt only with the opposition leaders. Let's clarify it for the people of Ontario. This bill deals not only with the two opposition leaders we have here, the opposition and the third party, but it also deals with the 25 or so cabinet ministers we have. That's where the main focus surely should be, if for nothing else than in pure numbers. There are 25 over there and two here.

I don't think the public should somehow be left with the impression that the individual members shouldn't be held accountable. I think we should be held accountable for every tax dollar that's spent, whether it comes out of our individual global budgets or whether it comes out of cabinet ministers' budgets or leaders of the opposition's budgets, whether it's spent in any government department.

It's kind of ironic that we should be talking about this bill this evening. That's really what the Provincial Auditor's report annually is about. It's all about accountability. It's all about making sure the taxpayers' dollars, which are the dollars that you and I and the people of Ontario put into the system, are properly spent. Whether we're talking about spending it in programs for health care, education, the environment or anything else, or whether we're talking about spending it through our own individual global budgets or through ministerial budgets or the leaders of the opposition's budgets, it should all be accountable. No money should be wasted at all, because a dollar wasted is a dollar out of your pocket and my pocket. I think the people of Ontario deserve better than that.

But let's have some honesty to the system. The reason this bill is here is because of a number of unfortunate situations that happened in this House. I happen to believe that all the members here are honourable members; there's no question about it. But there were a couple of things that happened here. I'm not going to go into detail as to which cabinet minister spent more money or who spent less or what have you, but we all know why this bill is here: because of certain embarrassments that happened on the government side which caused one minister to fall and high expenses of other people—

Interjections.

Mr Gerretsen: You can see all my expenses. I've got absolutely nothing to hide. But what this gentleman doesn't understand is that we're already accountable. Our global budgets are accountable. On June 30, or sometime near the end of June, we get a report as to how all our global money—all our money for accommodation, all our expense money and travel money—is being expended. There should be full accountability for that, absolutely no question about it. But to somehow make it sound as if the members' budgets aren't accountable is, I think, doing all of us a disservice, because that's not the case. If somebody is spending money in an outlandish fashion and not having the due diligence that you would in spending your own money, then that is wrong, absolutely, and this bill is here because the government was embarrassed, which caused one minister to resign and a couple of other parliamentary assistants apparently to come up with tremendously high individual travel bills or what have you. That's what this is all about.

I see another very prominent former member of the public accounts committee here, the member for Niagara Falls. I can't for the life of me understand why you would include the current opposition leaders—you take the opposition leaders right back to June 1995, and you do the same thing with your own cabinet ministers—but anybody who has left this place or was the leader of government is somehow exempted. Why isn't Mr Harris part of this? I realize full well—

Interjections.

Mr Gerretsen: Well, include him in the legislation, then.

Mr Wettlaufer: You could have FOIed him.

Mr Gerretsen: Of course I can FOI it. I can FOI it right now, and the cabinet ministers too. But the whole idea of having a piece of legislation is to make sure it's easier for the general public to do it. It's not what you and I can do by way of freedom of information; it's how does the general public get to know this? All I can tell you—

Mr Wettlaufer: Give us your leader's expenses.

The Acting Speaker: I've brought the member for Kitchener Centre to order a number of times, and if he wishes to continue, he won't be here.

Mr Gerretsen: My leader's expenses you should know about, and we should know about your leader's expenses too.

If there's one bit that I didn't agree with from the member for York North, it's that somehow she talked about something that a minister was involved in during the Peterson years and how much money he spent. I can assure you in that particular case that he probably took a trade mission somewhere, so that the money that was spent included an awful lot of money probably for salaries for civil servants and whatever else goes along with that. Let's be honest about it: that's what happened.

I, by the way, don't have a particular problem with, for example, people who may want to do business in Canada, from which we can all benefit in Ontario, being wine and dined to a certain reasonable extent so that we can get their business here. I've got no problem with that at all, because I know that sometimes you have to spend a dollar in order to make $10 and in order to make our economy grow. So I've got absolutely no problem with it at all. But what I would like to know is, why have you somehow exempted Mr Harris and Bob Rae—and I'd forgotten that Bob Rae was actually here—

The Acting Speaker: Point of order, the member for Kitchener Centre.

Mr Wettlaufer: Mr Speaker, under the point that the member opposite is raising, he is wondering why, under the point of order—no, no.

The Acting Speaker: No, what's the point of order?

Mr Wettlaufer: I'm trying to get to that. Mr Harris's expenses have been FOIed 12 times—

The Acting Speaker: That's not a point of order. Sit down. The member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr Gerretsen: They may have been FOIed a hundred times. That still doesn't make it any easier for the general public to—

Mr Wettlaufer: They're there for you.

The Acting Speaker: I name the member for Kitchener Centre, Mr Wettlaufer.

Mr Wettlaufer was escorted from the chamber.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr Gerretsen: Well, I must admit that I'm a little surprised. Here I got up and I agreed with everything that's in this bill, I think there should be something more in the bill, and I get heckled by the government members.

Interjection.

Mr Gerretsen: Thank you very much, the member from Scarborough Centre. Another wonderful individual on the public accounts committee that really contributes a lot.

So I guess what I'm saying is that if we're going to have this kind of a bill, and I think we should, let's include everybody. If you want to go back to 1885 or 1995, I don't care. If somebody has been taking money out of our pockets for improper purposes, they should darned well be—I was almost going to say that word—accountable for it.

If you want true accountability, I was going to suggest tonight, why don't you just pass my audit amendment act? Mr Maves had a similar bill like this about five years ago. This bill has been given second reading, which basically will give the auditor full auditing powers to follow the money to the grant recipients, to the hospitals, to the universities, to the colleges, to the municipalities etc. It's been given unanimous approval on second reading in this House, it's gone to committee unanimously, it was given clause-by-clause. It's sitting there waiting to be called, and I would just ask you to call it.

As a matter of fact, even the auditor today, in his statement—and I was very pleased he did this, by the way, and it came as a bit of a surprise to me—endorsed my bill and he said, and I will quote from his speech today, if you will permit me:

“Finally, on a further positive note, last Thursday the standing committee on public accounts unanimously approved Bill 5, as amended by the committee in its clause-by-clause review. Bill 5 is an act to amend the Audit Act to permit my office to carry out full-scope value-for-money audits of hospitals, universities, colleges, municipalities, school boards and other organizations that receive transfer payments. Since the government has the majority on the public accounts committee, I urge the government to give an early and successful third reading of Bill 5. Bill 5 was introduced by Mr John Gerretsen, the Chair of the committee, some time ago. Passing this bill would fulfill the commitment to amend the Audit Act made by the government in the speech from the throne in April 2001.”

So I would ask the government leader to call this bill some time between now and a week from Thursday. Let's pass it. Let there be true accountability. And I know the hospitals won't like it, the universities won't like it. I've heard from them already. I've heard from them locally in my community as well. Quite frankly, I don't care. I think if we're giving millions and millions of dollars to hospitals, universities and colleges, then we, through the auditor's office, should have the right to make sure that money gets expended on the programs for which it was intended. Now, does that mean that he's going to go into every hospital, university and college overnight and do an audit? Of course not. He doesn't have the human resource power to do that. But on the other hand, if there are concerns, he has the ability to do that and he should be able to do that.

By the way, this is something that Mr Maves called for, this is something that the Premier called for when he was Minister of Finance back in 1996, it is something that was sort of included in the Public Sector Accountability Act in a different sort of way, which I think was included in the speech from the throne, in the last one in 2001. It's all here. It's all here in this Audit Act amendment act. Let's pass it and let's get on with it. That, to my way of thinking, is true accountability. Because we need that in the system. We need to make sure that when people pay their money to government, it's being expended properly.

We have seen all sorts of examples where that's not the case. When you look at the Provincial Auditor's report this year and you see how money has been wasted in consulting services—just think about it. There have been some ministries where basically, in order to meet the human resource guidelines as far as the number of people who could be employed in a certain ministry, certain people have, in effect, been let go or have been retired or whatever, and they came back the following day and were hired as consultants. That's included in this year's report. That is just atrocious, absolutely atrocious.

Let me just give you an example of that. They came back at a much higher salary—if I can find the page here, and I'm looking very quickly to see if I can find it. Some of these people were making, let's say, $200 to $300 per day as employees and they came back in basically the same capacity the next day and were making three times as much. Here it is. This was for the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care on page 182 of the Provincial Auditor's report. In other words, it isn't my propaganda. It's in the report from the Provincial Auditor who, again, doesn't work for the opposition. He doesn't work for the government. He works for all of us. He's an officer of the Legislative Assembly. He's totally independent, although at times, particularly when he comes out with bad news for the government, I know a lot of government members think that he somehow works for the opposition, but he doesn't. He doesn't. He works for all of us here because all of us, surely, want to make sure that our taxpayer dollars are being spent properly and correctly. Because if it is spent properly and correctly, there is more money available for education, there is more money available for health care, there is more money available to look after the environment properly etc.

Let me give you an example. There's a chart on page 182 of this year's report which shows that in the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, for the employees that were let go, the average overall per diem rate for staff was $273 per day. When those people came back the following day as consultants, do you know what their average per diem was? It was $847. It's unbelievable. There are all sorts of ranges in there, but to me it's almost incomprehensible as to how that can happen. This is kind of interesting. When the auditor was asked by the media about this, as to how this could possibly happen, what was his response? That a business case had not been made on a value-for-money basis and that consultants shouldn't be hired on that basis. He found that there was money being wasted.

There are so many other areas, and I'm sure that over the next little while we will have an opportunity, over the next 10 days, to ask questions about some of these issues.

For example, on the corporation tax situation—this is another one that absolutely baffles me—did you realize that we have 763,000 corporations in Ontario? That's a lot of companies and a lot of them are probably very small. But did you realize that 355,000 companies last year didn't even file an income tax return? They didn't file a return.

Now, in the olden days what would have happened was that a letter would have gone out from the Ministry of Finance saying, "You haven't filed. You need to file." As a result, in 1995 only one in five companies had not filed. Of course, some of these companies may not be operating. I'll admit, some of them may be very small. There may not be any reportable taxable income for that given year. I'll grant them that much. That may happen, but in those days, back in 1995, only one in five corporations didn't file a tax return. You know what it was this time around? More like one in two; 355,000 corporations didn't file an income tax return. My golly, if we did that on an individual basis, the revenues in the province would probably drop by $10 billion to $15 billion and it would be totally untenable.

Why don't we do the same thing with respect to corporations? Why don't we send out letters to these corporations and say, "Hey, you haven't filed. Why don't you file?" It may very well be that in some cases they did pay their corporate taxes on a quarterly basis. I don't know that. He didn't know that either. The point is, they didn't file their returns. You can be assured that, if they didn't file their returns, in an awful lot of those cases there was money owing. I think he came up with a figure on that as well that I won't have an opportunity to go into in great detail.

I think one of the functions that we have as parliamentarians, whether it's in government, as a cabinet minister, as a parliamentary assistant or being a Chair of a committee, on a board or what have you, or whether it's in opposition, is to make sure that the people's tax money that's being collected—it's the people's money; it's not the government's money—is being spent in a prudent way, whether we're talking about the individual expenses that any of us have, which should include everybody, or whether it's in the larger programs that are out there.

As the member earlier said, health care and education are more important than to ask the kind of questions that were going on about a month or so ago when we asked about particular expenses that individuals had incurred etc. She's right in that. We shouldn't have to talk about that. It's from that viewpoint that we think it's a good idea that the Integrity Commissioner is involved. That gentleman in that office is totally beyond reproach. I've got the highest regard for him and I'm sure he will do an excellent job for us—for the taxpayer, in effect. And we should be much more concerned about health care and education issues.

Of course the problem is, as I've been told many times, it's question period that takes place here; it's not necessarily answer period. Maybe the whole House would function an awful lot better if the government ministers were actually there to answer questions rather than to quite often come up with anything but an answer to a question that's being asked. That would help, I think, an awful lot. I think one of the reasons why this place gets so loud and boisterous at times is that the opposition members, and I would dare say even sometimes the government backbenchers, are so frustrated by the fact that they're not getting any answers to any of the questions that are being asked. That's one way in which this could be alleviated.

I see that I'm into my last half-minute here, and I'm sure some people will be happy that that's so. But let me just say once again, we support this bill, but include everybody. Do not let the former Premier off the hook. If you're going to take it back to June 26, 1995, take it back for everybody, whether they were in cabinet, whether they were in opposition and I would dare say whether they were even private members or individual backbenchers on the government side, or opposition members. Everybody should be accountable. That's what it's all about. That's what the taxpayers and the citizens of this province demand.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): It is so good to be here amongst all my colleagues tonight debating this most important bill, the bill I want to call the tit-for-tat bill because, quite frankly, what this is all about is a government that is frustrated by some of the excesses of their own members and have decided to participate in a little bit of partisanship by way of legislation. I think it's quite interesting.

I want to say up front, our caucus will be supporting this bill. We see this, quite frankly, for what is probably not a bad thing as far as being able to make expenses accountable.

I just want people to know why we're here with this bill tonight. Let's review it. The Liberal opposition has raised a number of allegations toward certain cabinet ministers when it comes to excesses that they have with their expenses. We're not going to get into names, but we know a number of them have got caught with expenses that were a little bit beyond the pale. The public reacted badly. The government looked bad and probably took a couple of hits in the polls because they were seen as coming to Queen's Park as the accountable party, the party that was going to be different and frugal for the taxpayer. They were just going to watch out for the taxpayer. They were going to make sure that taxpayers get everything they deserve when it comes to the frugality of the Conservative Party.

The opposition raised a number of instances where members in the cabinet unfortunately were not as frugal as their mantra set out to be. Therefore, the Tories feel kind of bad about that because they're supposed to be seen as the frugal government, the anti-government government, the government that came to Queen's Park to clean things up, the government that was going to be different, and the public figured out, when they got their chance to get their time at the trough, that they were pretty good themselves.

Now you've got a government that says, "I'm mad as Dalton McGuinty. Oh that guy, he came in the House and he accused my ministers of doing all kinds of things." So the government drafts up a bill, and I want to call it the tit-for-tat bill because the government now says, "Let's stick it to Dalton." We know how this place really works. We know that leaders of the opposition, in the thought of the Tory caucus, are maybe not as frugal as they put it out to be when it comes to their expenses. This is an opportunity for the government to say, "Come on, Dalton. We're going to stick it back to you."

I don't know what we gain in doing these kinds of things because, quite frankly, I think we all look bad when we start doing this kind of stuff. At the end of the day, we're all honourable members, and I would hope, as honourable members, that we try to treat ourselves as well as the public with a little bit of respect.

So this government has come forward with this bill and they've said, "Now we're going to get an opportunity to make totally clear the expenses of the opposition leaders," and they're going to make totally clear that the public has the right to know how much Dalton McGuinty or Howard Hampton spends when it comes to them going out.

I want to put forward the expenses of my leader, Howard Hampton, because we know my leader is compulsive. My leader, I have to admit, at times has been seen walking into Mr Submarine and ordering a vegetarian sub, and I know my leader likes to drink black coffee and I've seen him walk into Tim Hortons time and time again as we went around on the tour with the hydro bus. I'll tell you, any time we stopped it wasn't at Hy's Steak House in downtown Toronto and it wasn't at Hy's Steak House in Ottawa or the London Café in Timmins. Howard, I've got to say, has got a thing for Tim Hortons and Howard has a pretty good thing for Mr Submarine.

I look forward to the day when the opposition leaders, the Liberal opposition or the government will be able to FOI my leader's expenses, because I'll tell you, it's going to be pretty hard to try to figure out exactly what Howard was trying to put in when they look through the coffee stains on those $5 receipts that he has for those subs he gets from Mr Submarine.

I want to say, we're going to make sure that Howard, the next time he goes out to a Tim Hortons or a Mr Submarine to order those garden fresh salads and those subs that have no meat on them, only vegetables—God, imagine that, somebody eating something without meat on it. For me, that would be almost sacrilegious, but that's another story.

I've got to say, we're going to be watching Howard. We've told our staff at Queen's Park, "It's important when you go out with Howard that you're the first to grab the bill and make sure he doesn't drop any of that sauce that you put on top of the salad"—what do they call that? Salad dressing. I don't eat a lot of salad, as you might have noticed, so I'm not too sure what that's called. But we've told Jeff Ferrier and Stephanie Levesque and others who travel with Howard, "Get that receipt right away." We've got to make sure Howard doesn't get his hand on it because we know once Howard gets it, he might drop a bit of coffee on it or a little bit of salad dressing. Or when he's eating those subs and he's got the receipt on his lap, what happens, you've got that miracle sauce they put on at Mr Submarine and sometimes that falls down on to the receipt. I know that the auditors or the Conflict of Interest Commissioner or the public, if they were to get hold of those receipts, might have a difficult time trying to read my leader's receipts because they're so outrageous: $7 and $10 and Mr Sub and Tim Hortons.

We will try to be straight as a caucus. We will do all that we can to make sure that Howard, when he gets those receipts, keeps them in good shape, that they're not too dirty, not too many coffee stains on them, and that they're organized in such a way that it's easy for people to read. So that's the first thing I want to say from our caucus.

The other thing I want to say is I find this debate and the idea of this legislation a little bit passing strangle from another point of view, and that is that we've got the government saying, "We're going to look at the opposition leaders' expenses and we're going to be a little bit more clear when it comes to the expenses of cabinet ministers and the current Premier." I would just say bring it on. I don't think the Liberal opposition and I know we don't—we don't have anything to hide; we're pretty clear. We have a budget and we spend that budget according to the rules. I don't know of any instances where people have done things that they shouldn't have done, but maybe those who toss rocks into glass houses should be careful where they toss those rocks, because at the end of the day they may find some surprises in their own backyard. I just want to say for this debate, at the very beginning, I hope that others have been careful on the other side of the House when it comes to their expenses.

The other thing I want to say is in regard to how far back this legislation goes. We say we're going to bring it back to June 26, 1995, and I presume we're doing that so we don't have the opportunity, FOI, with Mike Harris's expenses when he was leader of the third party. Why is that? I would like to see and I would like to compare, if we're looking at opposition leaders, how different parties and different leaders have dealt with their expenses. I would hope, as one friendly amendment, if we're going to make this legislation retroactive to June 26, 1995, presumably to line up with the Tories' election, we try to go back a little bit further.

What we're trying to do is compare opposition leaders, so I want to compare them well. I would like to see Mr Harris's receipts for the time he was the third party leader, from 1990 to 1995, so we can take a look at what the expenses were for one Mike Harris, leader of the third party, the Conservative Party; one Howard Hampton, leader of the NDP, the third party; and now Mr McGuinty, who is the leader of the official opposition, and compare them. Who knows? We might find some little surprises.

If we're going to start doing this, I think we should do it in a way that is as clear as possible. What we're trying to say to the public is that we're all honourable members, we all take our jobs seriously, we're all frugal when it comes to expenses and we want to make the process clear. So I want to propose a friendly amendment that we make this legislation retroactive to, let's say, September 6, 1995, so that we're really able to compare apples to oranges to see what people have done and when they did it.

The other thing I want to say—and this quote might come back to get me at one point, but I'm going to say it anyway. They've got a section in this legislation that deals with a complete ban on alcohol. There is one thing that bugs me: when we deal with public servants and how we do business within the public service, we have much different criteria for how we judge ourselves than the private sector judges itself. As members, as critics and as ministers, we all know, because we deal with private sector people in our ridings on a regular basis, man, if we had to FOI the credit cards of most people who work in corporations, at the upper echelon of that corporation, or sales people, I think the stockholders and the consumers who buy the goods might be a little bit surprised. I just bemoan the point that sometimes we do it to ourselves in this Legislature. I don't argue for a second that we shouldn't be as clear and transparent as possible and that we shouldn't be frugal with taxpayers' dollars. That's not my argument. But I would just say that we tend to treat ourselves differently and hold ourselves to a different standard.

As I look around downtown Toronto at places like Barberian's, Hy's Steak House, Bigliardi's and other restaurants out there that are known to be quite good, you don't see too many cabinet ministers and backbenchers and opposition leaders in those types of restaurants. It's by and large the private sector, and I would be willing to guess that most of them aren't paying that out of their pockets; most of them are paying with the credit card they get from their company.

I would just say to us, as members inside this House, that once we start throwing this stuff at each other in these types of tit-for-tat bills, I think we're racing down to the lowest common denominator. We tend to beat ourselves up far too often in here, which I don't think serves any of us.

I give as an example the whole debate around pensions. I get an opportunity to put this on the record. The government was elected in 1995 on the idea that they were going to scrap the gold-plated pensions. Government backbenchers of the day, because they were not vested in the pension system, thought, "Oh, what a great idea. We're just going to stick it to those people who have been here a little while," not thinking for one second that they might make it to a second term. So now I hear government backbenchers bemoan the fact that they haven't got the gold-plated pension and how stupid they were—

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: I'm going to get to that—putting forward such a piece of legislation, which treats us as different and beats us up to any extent. The point I make is that sometimes we in this place tend to do that to ourselves, to our own detriment. I look forward to the day when there is a minority government back in this Legislature and we can actually get to negotiations, when the three parties are able to sit down at the government House leader's meetings and take a look at how the rules of this House should operate, how we deal with expenses and how we treat ourselves and the public fairly on all these issues. I think, by and large, doing these kinds of things, this tit-for-tat type of legislation, in the end is a disservice to all.

If we want to talk about how we make government more transparent and how we deal with open accountancy when it comes to how we spend dollars, fine. We, as members of the assembly, do that every day. Every dollar we spend as individual members, by way of our constituency budgets or by way of expenses for travel, is published every year. I think that's a pretty good system.

They look at it, they grab the book at the end of the year and they say, "Ah, who are the highest-spending members in the assembly?" And normally I'm one of them. I'm normally number two, number three, sometimes number one, because I live in a riding that's far away. It's $980 for airfare, a $40 cab ride there and back from the airport, and I travel about 60 trips a year. So I'm normally one of those members who gets really high on the expenses. My point is that at the end of the day, I like that system. They look at it and say, "Gilles Bisson, MPP for Timmins-James Bay, he's the second- or third-highest-spending member of the Legislature." I'm held up to public accountability in my own riding. The people in my riding have to make up their minds, "Do we think it's excessive for our member to be spending that kind of money?" The final test at the end of the day is that they will decide when it comes to election day if I have or haven't done a good job.

I just argue that this legislation we bring forward tonight is more of us beating each other over the head, and for what? At the end of the day, I don't think we're treating the public fairly in this process. If we want to talk about transparency, let's talk about a system that says that members are allowed to expense.

For example, I was just talking to a friend of mine, Mr Ron Millette. By the way, we came in from the airport together on the first Jetsgo service from Timmins, the second flight today; $147 one way from Timmins to Toronto on jet service. I couldn't believe it. It was an MD-89, I think it is, or MD-83. But anyway, that's another story. We were chatting today about how we, as members—and we all know this. You get called in your constituency office to meet with X group in your riding, or as a critic you get a phone call to attend a particular meeting, and you end up at a coffee shop or a restaurant for lunch. Who gets stuck with the bill, normally? The MPP, right? Are we able to expense any of that? Not a dime. We can't expense any of it. I don't bemoan the fact. I knew when I got into this job I was going to get caught in those things, but we don't get to expense any of it.

I'm just saying that this type of legislation doesn't deal with the real issues. I would rather have a completely transparent system that says that anything I receipt as a member is FOIable, just as it is in this legislation, and we're allowed to incur certain expenses when it comes to what we do as members in our job. People just automatically assume you have an expense card because you're an MPP, and even though you don't, you end up picking up the bill anyway.

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: Our federal members? I don't want to go there. I'm going to get really upset.

What we need to have is a completely transparent system that says that any receipt I hand in as a member should be FOIable. Anybody in my riding or across Ontario who wants to check my expenses should have the right to do so. I think that's the sort of check of honesty to make sure we don't do things we shouldn't do, because I think there is a temptation if you don't have an accountability process.

At the end of the day, publish it. I think that's the best system. At the end of the day, members are published in one book, and we turn around and say, "OK, who are the ones who spent the most in various categories?" You look at it. The media will figure out who to talk to. They're obviously going to go, "Oh, restaurants and meals, member X spent the most." They're going to go and talk to member X. If member X has a good explanation for what he or she did, fine; if he doesn't, fine. Then the voters will decide.

But I don't like the idea of putting a cabinet minister in a position of saying, "Oh, God, sorry, visiting dignitaries from Belgium, I can't afford to buy you a drink because we've got a ban on alcohol." And we're hosting these people? They're going to say, "What kind of province is this? Here we are, we've come all the way from Belgium to meet with the government minister on an issue"—or an opposition leader, because we meet with those people as well. I met with groups from Ireland, I met with groups from different parts of the world. But to put ourselves in a position where a cabinet minister is afraid of submitting a receipt because of this public sort of debacle we have going around with this stuff I think is a disservice not only to the minister but to the people with whom we're trying to do business as a province.

At the end of the day, let me tell you, if I worked in the private sector and I had visiting dignitaries from Belgium, the credit card would be going, if they had been one of my customers, and my employer wouldn't say a bloody word. Do you think he cares if two thirds of my bill is alcohol versus meals? The employer wouldn't care. He'd say, "How come? Did you get a sale? Yes, you did? Good job, boy. Have a good day." That's what they would be telling me.

This idea of treating us differently I think is a disservice to all of us. I just argue, don't put people in a position of feeling as if they can't do their jobs. I'm advocating for cabinet ministers here. Because as backbenchers, private members or opposition members, we have no credit cards; we can't do that. I cannot expense one glass of wine or one bottle of beer. It's against the rules; I can't do it. But don't put our cabinet ministers in a position of their being so afraid to charge something because possibly they're going to be doing something wrong because of this sort of debate that we have in this Legislature where we start yelling, "Oh, I'm purer than the other guy." Come on. We've all been on all sides of the House. We all have a job to do.

I just look forward to a day when we in this House start treating ourselves a little bit better and giving the public some good, clear rules about how they can FOI our expenses and how they can see what it is we've been doing, and letting the public, through the voters in our ridings, decide if we've been doing it properly or not. To get into these kinds of debates with this legislation today is a bit of a disservice to all of us and, I would argue, to a certain extent a disservice to others.

With that, I would just say that I look forward to the leads that will be happening certainly from other people as they go into this debate. I also want to just repeat, to make sure that people who tuned in lately understand, that we as New Democrats will be supporting this legislation. We believe in transparency. We believe that it's public dollars, that you should have the right to know. We don't have a problem with that concept.

But I just want to say what I said at the beginning: this is more of this tit-for-tat stuff that we're doing in this House that I think is a disservice to all of us. At the end of the day, if we don't start treating ourselves a little bit better in this House, who will?

SCHOOL BUS SAFETY

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): A two-month campaign to educate drivers on school bus safety wrapped up in Chatham-Kent last week. During this blitz, police reported 107 violations where motorists drove past school buses while their overhead lights were flashing. We were very fortunate that no one was hurt or killed. One hundred and seven incidents of illegal passing in just two months are absolutely unacceptable. This blatant disregard for the law must end. We need an effective deterrent. We need to give teeth to the current law so that offending drivers can be held accountable.

I have spent six years lobbying the Harris-Eves government, six years gaining support from local, provincial and national organizations that advocate vehicle liability to protect the 810,000 children riding on 16,000 school buses in Ontario. What is it going to take for the Harris-Eves government to finally understand the need for Bill 112?

Our children must be protected from drivers who illegally pass school buses here in Ontario. How can this government justify the idea of vehicle liability for electronic toll roads, parking fines, red light cameras or flying truck tires if it is not prepared to extend the same practice to the protection of our children?

This government's double standard must end today. Pass Bill 112 immediately.

LAMBTON GENERATING STATION

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): I rise in the House today on behalf of the constituents of Lambton-Kent-Middlesex. I would like to encourage the Minister of Energy to continue working toward providing the residents of Ontario with a commitment to providing affordable, plentiful and environmentally friendly power, unlike the McGuinty Liberals, who want to close the Lambton generating station located in Sarnia township. Shame on you.

I would like to share a letter that the Sarnia Lambton Chamber of Commerce recently sent to Frank Chiarotto, the manager at the Lambton generating station:

"At its recent meeting, the board of directors of the Sarnia Lambton Chamber of Commerce recognized your achievement of significantly improving air quality at Lambton generating station. Your investment in scrubbers has considerably reduced emissions in an affordable manner for the taxpayer.

"The board made an additional motion that we will also forward to the Minister of Energy, Honourable John Baird:

"As a result of these environmental improving initiatives by OPG, the chamber supports the continued use of thermal coal-fired generating stations in Ontario, as a most cost-effective alternative to our supply concerns."

"Congratulations on your recent efforts and best wishes for many more years of improvements for our taxpayer and energy users."

ANAESTHETISTS

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): What is so frustrating is that this Minister of Health with the Harris-Eves government wants to declare war on a particular type of specialist in Ontario. Today it's the anaesthetists. So he decides that he wants to publicly say he won't be intimidated or he won't be bullied.

Let me tell you what's happening to the residents in this province. They are the ones who are having their surgeries cancelled because we have a health minister who refuses to act; a health minister who knew last year that we have a significant problem, this time at the Toronto General and Toronto Western hospitals, dealing with anaesthetists; and that we have a shortage of these specialists across the province.

This minister says publicly that he won't let those operating rooms close. Guess what? They've already closed six of them. The current discussion is about closing yet another four. So we already have delayed surgeries because this government refuses to act on a problem they know has existed for some time.

He wants to bring it down to the base level of how much we are going to pay them. How about talking about what these people have to do for a living at the Toronto General and Toronto Western hospitals? How about starting their first surgeries at 7 am and working right through until 6 pm?

How many surgeries are being cancelled? Well, the hospitals are being honest with patients: "We don't know if we can keep up this kind of schedule with the limited number of anaesthetists that exist." They're suggesting they need at least 30 more for the required surgeries they have booked.

This requires action, not just talk about bullying by this government.

MEDICAL ARTS BUILDING

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): I want to inform you, Speaker, and the other members that I was at a rally this past Sunday with Olivia Chow, a city councillor from my area, trying to prevent the closure of the Medical Arts Building at St George and Bloor.

Many of you will know that this building has housed many medical professionals providing essential services for many in the community, not just in my own little riding but in the surrounding community, for over 70 years. They have served about 200,000 people.

I understand the University of Toronto has bought the building and wants to close it down. My problem and my point is that I support the University of Toronto and its needs. They have many needs to take care of, one of which is the double cohort and the demographic changes that obviously will force the university to accept over 70,000, 80,000 or 90,000 more people in the next couple of years. I understand that. My point is that you don't serve your own needs by displacing the needs of our health care community, which has been well served by the Medical Arts Building.

The Medical Arts Building is strategically located and accessible to everyone, including people with disabilities, and it serves a number of the university students who are in the area.

My point is, Minister of Health and minister of post-secondary education, get together with the university and solve it so that all our needs can be taken care of.

DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): Today, I had an opportunity to meet with Bart MacLean, Hans Vink and Bill Mitchell, who are with us in the gallery. They represent the Dairy Farmers of Ontario, and I am honoured to say a few words about their industry.

In Waterloo-Wellington, we understand that the success of our dairy farmers means success for us all: for our economy, our rural way of life, our nutrition and our health. The Dairy Farmers' own newsletter recently explained the significance of this sector by stating that the riding of Waterloo-Wellington is one of the largest areas for dairy farming in Canada, with milk having a huge economic impact.

The Dairy Farmers noted that last year Waterloo-Wellington's 731 dairy farms shipped about 284 million litres of milk, worth about $170 million. To give a sense of how dairy farmers provide opportunities to people in Waterloo-Wellington, they stated that dairy farms directly employ 1,000 dairy families and provide jobs for nearly 2,900 workers.

The income value of Waterloo-Wellington's dairy farms is also massive. If we ever had to replace the income from milk, manufacturing plants would have to create jobs for over 5,600 workers with salaries of more than $30,000 a year.

This success in Waterloo-Wellington is a credit to the entrepreneurial drive of our farm families, and it's a clear and positive result of our supply management system. In the 12 years I have been privileged to serve in this House, I have always maintained that supply management is fair to both producer and consumer—quality and stability at a fair price. The maintenance of supply management is absolutely crucial to our rural economy in Ontario. I will continue to support it and encourage all members of the House to help keep this system strong.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): The abysmal record of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care when it comes to dealing with our long-term-care facilities and the people who live in those facilities goes on.

Back in 1995, the auditor reported that the ministry had "not developed either standards to measure the efficiency of facilities in providing quality care or models for staff mixes for providing nursing and personal care."

Not only have they not done that seven years later, but it's worse. The few standards that there were with respect to the number of hours of nursing and personal care and the fact that the seniors should get at least one bath per week have been deleted. There are no standards at all, as far as the ministry is concerned.

The auditor also noted that "the ministry had not addressed the results of a 2001 consulting report"—which he himself paid for—"that noted that residents of Ontario's long-term-care facilities 'receive less nursing and therapy services than [those in] similar jurisdictions with similar populations.'" We are dead last in the 10 jurisdictions that were studied.

Not only that, it gets worse. Of all the nursing beds that have been opened since 1998, not one licence has been issued. None of the nursing homes in Ontario currently had current ministry licences issued at the time of the audit.

Our seniors deserve better. Minister, shape up.

JADE SINNESAEEL

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): It gives me great pleasure to tell you a bit about a 13-year-old from my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant. She has earned the title of Lady Llama in the local press after overcoming setbacks to be named grand champion at this year's Royal Winter Fair.

Jade Sinnesael, who hails from the village of Wye-combe, wowed the Royal judges with her llama named Kit Kat, placing her first overall out of 49 competitors in the youth division.

What makes Miss Sinnesael's accomplishment even more impressive is the fact that a week before the competition the llama that Jade had been training for months had pulled up lame. Instead of allowing the setback to defeat her, however, she rose to the challenge and began intensive training with Kit Kat that would earn her top honours a week later.

Following the award-winning show at the Royal, Jade's accomplishment and her reputation for drawing the best out of her animals will take her to a different stage. Television crews are filming her story for an episode of Animal Magnetism, a show that looks at the bond between people and their animals.

Jade Sinnesael is a shining example of what young people can accomplish on our farms across rural Ontario. I would certainly like to take this opportunity to congratulate Jade, better known as Lady Llama of the Royal Winter Fair.

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): All the Tory hogs are lining up at the Eves trough again. We learned yesterday that Ernie Eves is spending more than $600 million on consultants this year, more than double what he spent just four years ago. It seems that the Premier of Ontario offers the best severance packages in the history of humankind: quit your job today and come back tomorrow at double or triple the pay.

I would say it's like winning the lottery, but in this case your odds of hitting pay dirt are virtually guaranteed. They don't have money for our schools or for our hospitals, they can't be bothered to go after killers or rapists, they couldn't care less that half of the corporations in our province don't even file a tax return, but they certainly care about looking after themselves and their friends in the consulting business. The taps are turned on and the pigs are lining up at the Eves trough.

I said in the Legislature a few weeks ago that it looked like Ernie Eves and his friends were driving their limos up to the Queen's Park loading dock and shovelling the money in by the millions. I was wrong. It was hundreds of millions of dollars. When it comes to slick government, this Tory bunch takes the cake.

Ontario wants a Premier that is honest, has integrity and leadership. They want a Premier who will put their needs first and not throw away hundreds of millions of dollars on their friends. They want a Premier who is the exact opposite of Ernie Eves. They'll get that Premier. His name is Dalton McGuinty.

EID UL-FITR

Mr Bob Wood (London West): Over one billion Muslims throughout the world have been observing a month of fasting and inner reflection during Ramadan. Ramadan ends with the sighting of the new crescent of the moon, which will be December 5 this year, and is celebrated by the festival of Eid ul-Fitr. Literally the Festival of Breaking the Fast, Eid ul-Fitr is one of the two most important Islamic celebrations.

Eid ul-Fitr is a day of joy and thanksgiving. At Eid ul-Fitr people dress in their finest clothes, adorn their homes with lights and decorations, give treats to children, and enjoy visits with friends and family.

A sense of generosity and gratitude colours these festivities. Although charity and good deeds are always important in Islam, they have special significance at the end of Ramadan. As the month draws to a close, Muslims are obligated to share their blessings by feeding the poor and making contributions to mosques. Eid ul-Fitr also honours the universal values that are embodied in Islam: love of family and community; mutual respect; the power of education; and the deepest yearning of all to live in peace—values that can bring people of every faith and culture together, and strengthen us as a people and nation.

I know I speak on behalf of all members of this House in extending our best wishes and greetings to the Muslim community in Ontario as they celebrate this auspicious occasion.

To our Muslim friends: Kullu am wa antum bi-khair. In Arabic that means, "May you be well throughout the year".

VISITOR

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to note the presence in the members' west gallery today of someone who is a truly great Canadian. He has been a mentor to many people on this side of the House, I know, and someone whom we all respect. He's known affectionately as the rainmaker, Senator Keith Davey.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We welcome our honoured guest.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that today the Clerk received the 12th report of the standing committee on government agencies. Pursuant to standing order 106(e), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CONSULTANTS BOONDOGGLE FREEZE ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE GEL DE L'ENGAGEMENT FUTILE D'EXPERTS-CONSEILS

Mr Colle moved first reading of the following bill:
Bill 219, An Act to promote fiscal responsibility by limiting payments to consultants / Projet de loi 219, Loi visant à promouvoir la saine gestion des fonds publics en plafonnant les paiements versés aux experts-conseils.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for short statement?

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): As you know, yesterday, with the Provincial Auditor's report, there was some outrageous spending exposed, whereby $662 million was spent on consultants by this government. We had consultants that were paid up to $2,600 a day. We had people who were given $360,000 for two years' work—just over and over again, examples of how spending for consultants is totally out of control in this province. The people of Ontario want this stopped.

I've introduced today a bill called the Consultants Boondoggle Freeze Act, which would cap the pay for consultants at a very good, hefty wage of $100 per day. That would be the minimum. If this bill is passed, we will—

The Speaker: Order. I thank the member.

POLICE SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT (INDEPENDENT POLICE COMPLAINTS COMMISSIONER), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES SERVICES POLICIERS EN CE QUI CONCERNE UN COMMISSAIRE INDÉPENDANT AUX PLAINTES CONTRE LA POLICE

Mr Hampton moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 220, An Act to amend the Police Services Act with respect to the disciplining of police officers and to reinstate a fair and impartial process with respect to public complaints about police officers / Projet de loi 220, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les services policiers relativement au processus disciplinaire d'agents de police et visant à restaurer un processus équitable et objectif pour traiter des plaintes du public concernant la conduite d'agents de police.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): The bill amends the Police Services Act to require an independent police complaints commissioner, appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, to deal with complaints by members of the public about the conduct of police officers. The commissioner is independent of police forces and reports annually to the Attorney General. Any member of the public may make a complaint, whereas at present a member of the public may make a complaint only if directly affected by the subject matter of the complaint.

The bill also amends the act to reinstate the process for disciplining police officers that existed before the repeal of part V of the act as of November 27, 1997.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): I'm pleased to provide the Legislature and the people of Ontario with a report on Ontario's finances and the state of our provincial economy.

The Ontario economy is performing better than expected at the time of the June budget. Our economic growth and job creation are leading the average of G7 countries and the United States. The government's plan for a balanced budget this year, our fourth consecutive balanced budget, is on track. We're making the needed investments we promised in health care, education and the environment.

Here's the best news of all: since our government's first throne speech in 1995, the Ontario economy has created one million net new jobs. That represents more than 46% of all the jobs created in Canada over the past seven years.

Our government is keeping its promise to restore opportunity and prosperity to Ontario, but it hasn't been easy. My June budget noted that we were emerging from an economic slowdown that had negatively impacted our revenues. This year, I'm pleased to report that the performance of our economy is exceeding expectations. Despite ongoing challenges in the global economy, private sector forecasters now anticipate real economic growth of 3.5% this year, up from a consensus forecast of 3.2% in June.

This strong performance in the face of adversity did not happen by accident. In the first half of the 1990s, Ontario had one of the weakest economies in the industrialized world. High taxation, overregulation, huge deficits and spiralling debt came with a terrible price. When the recession hit in the early 1990s we fared much worse than our trading partners. Companies closed their Ontario plants first. Investment and jobs went elsewhere. By 1995, the welfare system was in crisis, with 1.3 million Ontarians relying on social assistance.

Our government addressed these challenges directly. We chose prosperity. Since 1995 the people of Ontario, and governments, led first by Mike Harris and now by Ernie Eves, have worked together to put this province back on track. By cutting taxes, balancing the budget and restoring prudent fiscal management we have positioned Ontario for growth and jobs. Ontario has truly gone from worst to first in its economic performance. Between 1985 and 1995 our real per capita GDP grew by only 6%, less than one third of the G7 average and only half the average of the other provinces. By contrast, since 1996 the per capita GDP has risen almost 17%, well above the average of the G7 countries and the United States. The recently released second quarter economic accounts show continued strong growth in real GDP of 4.4% at an annual rate following exceptionally strong growth in the first quarter.

We are also reducing the mortgage on our children's future, represented by the provincial debt. With a surplus of $375 million for 2001-02, Ontario achieved three consecutive surpluses for the first time in nearly 100 years. Since we've turned the corner on deficits in 1999, our government has paid down $4.5 billion of net provincial debts.

We continue to manage spending carefully. Since 1995-96, real program spending per person, excluding health and education, is down by close to 30%. As a result of getting our fiscal house in order, our credit rating has been upgraded three times in the past two years, and we've regained the ability to invest in those priorities that mean the most to our economic prosperity and our quality of life.

A growing economy and tax cuts have raised the average after-tax and after-inflation income of two-parent families with children from over $57,000 in 1995 to over $68,000 in 2000, a 19% increase. In the same period, single-parent families have seen a 33% increase, and more than 600,000 people have left welfare since our government took office in 1995.

Despite the strong gains we've made in growth and jobs so far this year, many uncertainties remain in the global economy as we move toward 2003. Ontario is not immune to external influences. Private sector economists have lowered their forecasts for real growth next year from an average of 4.3% last June to 3.5% today. This more cautious outlook reflects the fallout from the economic events of the past year coupled with many uncertainties on the horizon. World stock markets remain weak. Tension is high in the Middle East, and oil prices continue to be volatile. Prospects for the US economy remain unclear.

At the same time, demands continue to grow for additional investments in priority programs. That's why we must remain committed to our prudent fiscal and economic plan. This government's strong record of lower taxes, smaller government and balanced budgets has encouraged business and consumer confidence in the past year, and it has helped keep the economy on a path of strong growth.

Lower taxes are central to our plan to increase the competitiveness and the productivity of our economy. We cut Ontario's personal income tax rate by 30% between 1996 and 1998, and subject to approval by the House, an additional 20% personal tax reduction will be fully in place in 2004. This year alone, a typical two-earner family of four with $60,000 in net income pays over $2,000 less in Ontario income tax.

Ontario's small business income tax rate was 9.5% in 1995, one of the highest in the country. We are bringing the rate down to 5.5% on January 1, and by 2005, it will be further reduced to 4%.

We have lowered the general corporate income tax rate from 15.5% in 1995 to 12.5% today. This rate would drop to 11% in 2004 and reach 8% in 2006.

Consumers are also benefiting from other tax cuts. For example, the retail sales tax on auto insurance premiums has been cut from 5% to 2%, and it will be reduced to 1% next April and entirely eliminated in April 2004.

When you put it all together, Ontarians are now receiving a total of $14 billion a year in tax relief. Sustained and long-term tax cuts are the engine that has helped the economy create one million net new jobs since 1995.

We will complete our current multi-year plan to make tax rates more competitive. We will outline additional steps in next year's budget. I look forward to the upcoming pre-budget consultations for advice on a new multi-year plan to ensure that Ontario's tax structure continues to drive increased economic growth and prosperity.

Ensuring that Ontarians receive the best health care in the world remains one of our highest priorities. This year alone, we have increased our commitment to health care by almost $2 billion. Since 1995, our commitment has increased by $8 billion, and these investments are paying off. Ontarians have more access to increased diagnostic services, improved cancer care, cardiac care, dialysis services and more nurse practitioners. More long-term-care beds are coming on stream.

But no province can indefinitely continue these kinds of increases to health care without additional support from the federal government. The recently released Romanow report recognizes this, but the solution that it proposes falls far short of what is required.

Over the years, the federal government has cut its share of health care spending from 50% to 14%. If Mr Romanow's recommendations are implemented, next year's federal contribution would represent only 16% of provincial health and social spending. His proposed $15 billion over three years is almost $5 billion less than the minimum need identified by the provinces.

The financing of health care is a long-term and growing challenge, particularly for provinces. The Conference Board of Canada forecast that health care spending will grow at an average rate of 5% over the next 20 years, far in excess of the projected average provincial revenue growth of 3%. In addition, federal surpluses are forecast to grow rapidly, while provinces continue to face huge challenges in balancing their budgets in the foreseeable future.

Ontario will continue to balance its budget and respond to our citizens' health care needs. Ottawa must pay its fair share, and it should not be making matters worse by attempting to claw back over $1.3 billion from the province to cover mistakes that it made in calculating tax payments to this province.

Excellence in education is the key to opportunity for our young people. That's why we have put in place a new, more challenging curriculum, higher standards, and comprehensive testing to ensure our students are learning.

It's important that we support them with a funding formula that remains fair and equitable. To ensure that it does this, we have appointed Dr Mordechai Rozanski, president of the University of Guelph, to review the formula. His report will be released shortly, and we are committed to addressing his recommendations within the government's fiscal plan.

Mr Speaker, as we committed in the June budget, we will also continue with our plan to invest in other priority areas that support our quality of life and our prosperity. These include a clean and safe environment; innovation for a more competitive economy; healthy and growing communities; and infrastructure investments in transportation, schools, hospitals, colleges and universities.

Ontario's economy is sound. The fundamentals our government has put in place—lower and more competitive taxes, balanced budgets, reduced debt and key investments—have set the stage for Ontario's turnaround. They have produced a period of outstanding job growth and economic prosperity that is unparalleled in our history. Our approach is helping this province withstand the challenges of a difficult world economy.

But we all know more needs to be done. We want more opportunities for our citizens. We want the Ontario economy to create even more jobs. With the pre-budget consultations about to begin, I look forward to hearing advice from members of this House, as well as the comments and suggestions of Ontarians from all walks of life, on how we can accomplish this.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I am pleased to respond. One of the great urban myths is that the Conservatives know how to manage finances. The first piece of evidence is yesterday's auditor's report. Nothing I could say could be more damning than the Provincial Auditor's report of yesterday, where he essentially said you're incompetent.

He said half the corporations in the province of Ontario aren't even filing their income tax return, let alone paying it.

He said you laid off 40 people and hired them back within days and paid them twice what you were paying them.

There are 10,000 people out there on arrest warrants and nothing is being done about it, and the minister said, "Well, that's not a problem. There are only 6,000; there aren't 10,000."

The negotiated deal with Accenture put a cap of $180 million on it and you paid $60 million more.

I want to focus on the second shoe that dropped on your fiscal management today, and I want to point out several things to the people of Ontario about what I call the urban myth about the Conservatives being able to manage the finances.

The first thing I want to point out to the people of Ontario—it's on page 53—is that the only way this budget is balanced is with a fire sale of $2 billion of our most treasured assets in the next four months; that's the only way. We saw this before. Premier Eves, then the Minister of Finance, sold the 407 in one of the worst deals for the public ever, on May 5, 1999, when the last election was called, and we see today that the only way these books are balanced is by selling $2 billion worth of prize assets in the next four months; otherwise, the books aren't balanced.

Second, I urge the public to turn to page 59. Since Mr Eves became Premier—he was then the finance minister—the debt of the province of Ontario has gone up more than $21 billion. According to this document, it's now $112 billion. On March 31, 1995, it was $90 billion. Those are the numbers—almost a 25% increase in the debt of the province under Ernie Eves.

Two days ago, Mr Baird said, "Oh, it was immoral"—he used the word "immoral," referring to Mr Hampton—"to run up the debt $21 billion." I would say to the people of Ontario, do you know how much you're paying in interest on the debt now? It's $700 million more than when Premier Eves took over as Minister of Finance—$700 million more in interest; again, on the books.

The prime interest rate in the province of Ontario in 1995 was 8.5%; it's now 4.5%. It has dropped almost in half, and we in Ontario today are paying $700 million more interest on the debt. Since the Conservatives took over, the average household in Ontario has had $5,000 in debt added to it by this $22-billion increase in debt.

Again I say it is an urban myth that the Conservatives can manage the books. The auditor yesterday pointed it out, and this points it out today.

I hate to break the news to you on the job front—and I'm simply quoting the numbers from your economic table. The unemployment rate in the year 2000 was 5.7%; in 2001, 6.3%; and in 2002, 7.1%. I'm just saying to you that the unemployment rate is going up.

Standard and Poor's is the organization that rates our credit. In 1990 the province had a triple-A credit rating. It was downgraded three times. We still have a credit rating two points below the triple-A we used to have. It has been upgraded once, not three times as the minister said.

I say to the people of Ontario, don't listen to what they say; watch what they do. Watch the debt going up. Watch the auditor's report saying it's incompetence. It is an urban myth that these people know how to manage the finances of the province. Look at the facts of the matter here in this book.

Interjections.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): Speaker, I always listen with interest whenever the Minister of Finance—

Interjections.

The Speaker: I will allow the member to start over. We'll reset the clock at five minutes and make sure it's quiet when he begins, as he was quiet for the Minister of Finance and the critic for the Liberal Party as well.

Order. Come to order. It's now the turn of the leader of the third party for a response.

Mr Hampton: I'm always interested whenever the Minister of Finance stands to give a selective accounting of Ontario's economy, because I'm always interested in what she leaves out.

What did she leave out today? She left out the fact that Ontario's unemployment rate is increasing, that in this so-called era of prosperity for the government's consultants and corporate friends, there are more people unemployed this year than last year and more people unemployed last year than the year before.

I also look for some indication that after eight years of freezing the wages of the lowest-paid people in this province, people who work for minimum wage, the government might recognize some element of fairness and increase the wages of the lowest-paid people. But eight years after freezing the minimum wage at $6.85 an hour, this government still boasts about more tax cuts for the well off, more tax cuts for its corporate friends, but is freezing the wages of the lowest-paid people. That tells us in a picture what's going on here.

We saw yesterday from the auditor's report: 40 people laid off in the Ministry of Public Safety and Security. They go out the door, and they come back in the door three days later as this government's private sector cronies and get paid more than twice as much. If you're a private sector crony, a corporate crony of this government, then there is no limit. But if you're one of the lowest-paid people in this province—and I think the Minister of Finance deserves to know that most of the people who work for minimum wage are women: women who are trying to support a family; women who are often working not at one minimum wage job but sometimes two or two and a half minimum wage jobs to make ends meet. This government thinks nothing of giving more loot, more tax cuts, more consulting contracts to your friends. Meanwhile, you attack the lowest paid.

Then there is the auto sector. Isn't it interesting that recently 23 mayors from southern Ontario communities came together to point out that after all this government's ballyhooing about tax cuts, we continue to lose in the auto sector; that the Ford truck plant in Oakville is headed for closure unless this government realizes that tax cuts aren't working and it has got to come forward with an auto policy; that the Chrysler van plant in Windsor is going to be closing unless this government recognizes that simply giving Chrysler and GM more tax cuts is not doing the job. And the auto parts sector points out that after you close the Chatham international plant, you lose tens of thousands of auto parts jobs as well.

Then there is the pulp and paper sector. The minister doesn't mention that we just had another closure in Sault Ste Marie; that recently the manager of the sawmill in Wawa came forward and said that deregulated hydro prices will put their mill out of business. Then we've had closure of a paper mill in Kenora, another 150 jobs, and Sturgeon Falls, where the company is going to close the mill and lay off 140 employees but is going to continue to run the hydro dam because, under this government's crazy set-up, you can make more money laying off the employees and simply selling the hydro power into the private market and watch the prices go to $1,000 a megawatt hour. No jobs for people, no future for the community, but the corporate friends of this government do just fine.

Then there is this government's statement about hydro debt. It's so interesting to read the statement. It points out that in order to hide the high cost of privatized, deregulated hydro, this government is actually going to run up the hydro debt.

Then we have the other point: the government doesn't have a balanced budget but for the fact that it's going to sell off about half of Hydro One. What's this like? This is like a farmer who sells off a piece of his farm every year to temporarily impress his friends, without noting that two or three years down the road you don't have a farm any more. This government is selling off one of our strategic economic assets, our power system, and the whole of the economy, not to mention the consumers, is going to suffer as a result.

VISITOR

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex):

On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I draw to your attention that my youngest and tallest daughter, Danielle, is sitting in the members' gallery.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We welcome our guest.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: As you know, the Provincial Auditor is an officer of the Legislature. He reports to us as members of the Legislature. It has come to my attention that the Minister of Public Safety has called the auditor's report "inaccurate and misleading." An officer of this Legislature, according to a member of the crown, has been accused of being "inaccurate and misleading." He further made the inference that the Provincial Auditor was motivated by a political bias. When asked to be specific, he said: "I can't talk to what his motivations are."

I believe this is very offensive to this Legislature. I believe it is very offensive to the process we try to carry on here and to the examination we're here to conduct on behalf of the people of Ontario. I request that the Minister of Public Safety withdraw those remarks and apologize to an officer of this Legislature forthwith.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader):

On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I appreciate the point of order of the member of the third party, but I don't believe the member is in the House at this point in time. It becomes rather difficult to even talk, or speak or accommodate the member of the third party when he's not here. I beg your indulgence, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: Thanks very much. The members will know that we can't ask a member to withdraw things that are said outside the House. We have enough trouble with what members say inside the House. There's nothing out of order. What members say outside the House cannot be policed by the Speaker of the House.

Mr Hampton: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member is now present. I repeat the request I made earlier. If that is not the case, I ask you to consider whether or not contempt has been shown for this Legislature and an officer of this Legislature.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I would ask the member opposite not only to withdraw, but to apologize. He's basing this on innuendo and rumour. I have never said such things, and I would ask him to apologize to all members of the House.

The Speaker: I thank the minister for his input. You will know that there are disagreements about what people say. Members can disagree on things and I certainly can't ask all members to withdraw when they disagree; otherwise, we'd never get anything done. But I thank all the members for trying to set the record straight.

ORAL QUESTIONS

GOVERNMENT ASSETS

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Minister of Finance. We're now coming up to eight years of the Eves-Harris management of the province's finances. Today's fiscal statement shows that in order to balance the budget this year, you are going to have to sell off about $2-billion worth of provincial assets over the next four months. That's the only way, I gather, that you can balance the books. My question to you is this: why, after almost eight years of managing the finances of this province, are we in a position where the only way the province's books can be balanced is by a fire sale of the province's assets?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): There are a number of forecasts and expenditure plans in the budget. The total picture gives us a balanced budget. We laid it out very clearly in June. We are following our plan. Job growth is up. Revenue is up. The take-home pay for our families is up. The budget will be balanced.

Mr Phillips: Again, I go back to the incompetence. The people of Ontario simply want an answer, Minister. You just presented a report here, that you were talking about selling off $2 billion worth of the province's assets in a fire sale over the next four months. I simply want to know, on behalf of the people of Ontario, who have a right to an answer to this, how in the world is it that you and Mr Eves got the province into a position where the only way our books are going to be balanced is by a fire sale over the next four months of $2 billion worth of the province's key assets?

Hon Mrs Ecker: Coming from a representative of a government that never balanced its books, I can appreciate that he might find this a bit of a different situation, because we're balancing ours.

The plan that we laid out in the June budget is very clear. We made revenue and expenditure forecasts. We talked about how we could go forward. We are following that plan to do what we said we would.

Mr Phillips: This kind of drivel, frankly—

Interjections.

Mr Phillips: You just got up and presented to the people of Ontario a report. We, on behalf of the people of Ontario, are asking you a question about that report, and it is this. You said you are going to sell off a major chunk of our province's assets. You said yesterday you're going to sell off a major part of Hydro One. The auditor, in this report condemning the government, urged you caution in it. In fact, I would say he went further than that.

So on behalf of the people of Ontario, I want to know why you got us in the position where you've got us in a fire sale to sell off half of one of the most treasured assets in the province of Ontario, that being Hydro One. Why did you get us in a position where we've got to do this in a fire sale in the next four months to balance the books? I'd like an answer perhaps.

Hon Mrs Ecker: I appreciate that the honourable member doesn't agree with this government, but no one is parting with control of Hydro One. We've been very clear what the plan is. We recognize the need for a strategic partner. We've laid that out. The government will retain control of Hydro One as the people of Ontario asked us to do, but we need a strategic partner for the private sector discipline that that will bring, for the investment that will bring, to make sure that Hydro One can continue to be depended on by families in this province.

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question for the Premier.

Yesterday, Premier, the Provincial Auditor delivered a stinging indictment of your government. He exposed that when it comes to consulting contracts you're wasting literally hundreds of millions of dollars. In fact, he said that your government is bending and breaking its own rules when it comes to awarding those rather lucrative contracts.

The Provincial Auditor points to a number of untendered contracts that your government awarded. In some instances he says that they purposely broke up contracts into smaller parts to avoid having to go to public tender and the type of scrutiny that those tenders would yield. In effect you were avoiding or you were attempting to avoid complying with your own rules.

Now that the auditor has exposed this, will you do the right thing and release every single untendered contract your government has signed in the last seven years?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I believe the Chair of Management Board can respond directly.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): First of all, yesterday I indicated we welcomed the recommendations of the auditor. I also indicated yesterday that almost all, if not all of them by today, have those recommendations, have them implemented into the directives. We have the intention to make sure we follow his advice.

Having said that, I don't believe we've gone far enough. We've taken his recommendations. His recommendations are good, but I believe we need to do a more comprehensive review of the way the government does business. That's part of what we're doing now, and that's what we intend to do.

As I said yesterday with respect to these contracts, yes, there were some circumstances that had occurred. The auditor has pointed them out to us and we've taken all the steps we have to do to make sure this does not occur again in the future.

Mr Duncan: Minister, in the Common Sense Revolution, on page 3, you said you would do more with less. It turns out you're doing less but it's costing us more. On page 9 of that same document you complained about the NDP hiding the number of government workers by putting the vast majority of them on contract. That's a quote. You said that you would stop that, but in your government, staff quit one day and are hired back the next day at double and triple the cost. For example, when the Premier was Minister of Finance, Bev Hammond was given an $84,702 consulting contract after she left his office.

The auditor looked at consulting contracts in just six ministries. In every single ministry he found abuses totalling in the millions of dollars.

Will you now agree that a special audit needs to be done that includes every single ministry of your government? Will you agree that in order to find out how the Eves trough got so full, we need to have a full, independent, forensic audit of the consulting contracts of every single ministry?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: I indicated yesterday that in addition to what we're doing in terms of reviewing the procurement and consulting areas, the government has now embarked on a tremendous exercise, called program review, to review everything in government. That has never been done before in a very comprehensive way.

I will tell you as well that not only do we take the auditor's recommendations to heart, but have implemented almost all of them and will implement all of them before the end of the year. We'll go further than that and take a very comprehensive look at the way government does all business. We intend to do this in any event.

Yesterday, when the leader of the opposition stood up—he's not here right now—he indicated that I shouldn't talk about their past record because it was the last millennium. I wonder whether that mean's he's saying people like Jim Bradley or Alvin Curling are dinosaurs, because they were around then, and I guess they survived that ice age. Yesterday he indicated many instances of the type of circumstance the people across are pointing out to us. What they were criticized for by the auditor in their day—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

Final supplementary?

Mr Duncan: This is the government that has sent in forensic auditors to look at school boards. This is a government that set up snitch lines on welfare recipients. In fact, the Provincial Auditor has pointed to some serious rot in your own government.

Let's look at some examples. Paul Rhodes was rewarded with $248,142 worth of contracts. The person running your next election campaign got a contract from the Ministry of Finance for $67,157.

While your cabinet ministers are out in the hallway feebly attempting to discredit Mr Peters, we think it's time to see some real action and close off the Eves trough. Will you now agree to table in this House every single untendered contract your government awarded in the last seven years, as well as all contracts awarded to former political advisers, whether tendered or untendered, in your government, and will you agree to a full, independent forensic audit of every ministry and its untendered contracts and documents, so there can be an honest, full and clear accounting of what I think, and what the auditor believes, is an abused process—

The Speaker: The member's time is up.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: It's fairly ironic: yesterday I stood in my place quoting the auditor's report about some of the abuses that occurred, whether it was consultants being paid more than ministry staff or a consultant being paid more than ministry staff hired on a continuous basis or poorly defined cost of government. By the end of my statement and the quote from the auditor's report, they were quite surprised that the government I was talking about was the Peterson Liberal government.

You stand up there with a holier-than-thou view of life, but let me tell you what we've done. We've embraced what the auditor has said. We've accepted his recommendations; we've accepted them all in this area. We're moving forward with them, and in fact we're using that as a jumping-off point. We're going to implement more stringent rules, because we believe it's important to have accountability. That's what we're going to do—not what you did, which was nothing.

HYDRO ONE

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Premier. Over the last two years, your government has sold off part of our hydro system, the Bruce nuclear station, to a British company that is now bankrupt and is allowed to operate only because of loans from the British government. Through hydro privatization and deregulation, we have seen hydro rates go through the roof in the province. Over the last two days, we've seen the Independent Market Operator issue warnings of an emergency regarding hydro supply. Now the auditor raises the point that selling off part of Hydro One is not a very good idea.

In view of all the things that have gone wrong with your strategy of hydro privatization, could you tell the people of Ontario why you want to continue on the course of selling off 49% of Hydro One?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, Bruce A is being brought back on stream, which never would have happened if somebody hadn't taken it over. Hydro rates in the province are guaranteed for consumers until at least 2006. He criticized the way Hydro One was being run every day in this House, stood up on his feet and screamed and yelled and said, "It's being run terribly." We are bringing some private sector discipline to that entity without parting with control of the entity. So I think he should be very happy today.

Mr Hampton: I want to talk about this private sector discipline. The only thing that's keeping British Energy and Bruce nuclear running is a government bailout. The only thing that is hiding the high cost of privatized, deregulated hydro is another government bailout. The only thing we got from the first move to privatize Hydro One was Eleanor Clitheroe's $2.5-million salary, a $6-million severance payout and a yacht. Is this what you refer to as private sector discipline, Premier, and if so, how does this help Ontario's hydro consumers?

Hon Mr Eves: No, exactly the opposite. That's why we have to bring private sector discipline to the entity. The government he talks about bailing out happens to be a Labour government in Great Britain. I'm not surprised.

Mr Hampton: I gather the Premier is thankful that a Labour government is throwing him a lifesaver.

The auditor's report is like a how-to guide for people who want to make big bucks off the government. This government handed a consultant a $3-million SuperBuild consulting contract even though everybody else bid half that price. Then untold numbers of consultants were paid over and above the absolute ceiling for consultant payments. Get this: consulting rates went from $725 a day in April to $1,800 a day in May to $2,600 a day in September. This is private sector discipline. Premier, is that the kind of private sector discipline you want to bring to Hydro One, by selling it to your corporate friends?

Hon Mr Eves: I don't know what this supplementary has to do with the previous two questions, but I'm sure the Minister of Finance can answer this different question that the leader has now posed.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): The auditor has pointed out that an inaccuracy occurred in one of the particular tendering processes. That has been corrected, as it should have been. In the meantime, we got great value on that particular project. The advice they gave us was very helpful, very useful, to successful completion of that project.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question. The leader of the third party.

Mr Hampton: The auditor was very clear. On dozens of contracts you grossly overpaid, and in many cases you got private sector discipline that produced a product that was worthless, that was useless.

I want to go back to the Premier on this issue of hydro because, Premier, this is a strategic economic asset for the people of the province. What the auditor's report tells us is that your so-called private sector discipline amounts to one rip-off of the public after another: overpayments, payments that were not—in effect, there was no request for proposals or there was no competition or people went out the door on Monday being paid $40,000 a year and came back on Thursday as private sector consultants at twice the price.

How does any of your experience in terms of wanting to move everything to the private sector help Ontario citizens, Ontario consumers, in terms of a strategic economic asset, their hydro system, Hydro One, which you now admit you want to sell?

Hon Mr Eves: Talking about privatizations and rip-offs, he was part of the Bob Rae government, whose plan to privatize Highway 407 was to ask for private sector bidders to build the highway. If they made hundreds of millions of dollars, they got to keep it, and if they lost hundreds of millions of dollars, Bob Rae was going to pay for it. Meanwhile, he was part of the cabinet who decided to fork out $1.3 billion of taxpayers' money to build the highway so they could give it away, cover any losses that future prospective purchasers might have and allow them to keep all the profits. No wonder they don't like privatization. That's their idea of privatization: costing the taxpayers billions of dollars and giving away assets, and guaranteeing the losses of private sector companies. No wonder you have something against privatization. I agree with you that that is absolutely nuts.

Mr Hampton: Premier, you need to check the history books, because the person who gave away Highway 407 was none other than Ernie Eves, who sold it at a fire sale price, and the company that you sold it to waited a little over a year and then flipped it at three times the price. That's what you call a giveaway, Premier.

I want to take you back to Hydro, because you were the government that said that if you privatized our hydro system, which you intend to do with Hydro One, in effect the debt would go down. But, Premier, the auditor says that through your privatization scheme, while you've been manipulating this and doing that and trying to sell off this, Hydro's debt has gone up by $700 million. In fact, in your own economic statement today you allude to the fact that Hydro's debt is going to go up even more because you're going to have to find some way to finance the cover-up, the rate caps which are designed to hide the high cost of privatized, deregulated electricity.

If you're forcing up the debt at Hydro by $700 million already, and you admit in your own economic statement that you're going to force it up even more, how does this private sector discipline help the hard-pressed hydro consumers of Ontario? You're just loading more debt and more cost on to them. How does this private sector discipline help them?

Hon Mr Eves: A member of the New Democratic Party is probably the last person who should be standing in this House and talking about adding to debt. First of all, the Minister of Finance's statement today shows that the overall debt is down $500 million. That's what it shows. The reality is, as he knows, that OPG, in the rates they were charging and continue to charge to customers, have to set aside, and they have well over $700 million set aside, to be paid out in rebates to consumers. That's what he wanted; that's what he's getting.

If he wants to go back to the Highway 407 example, he was one of the members who stood in this House and said we'd never get what your government put into it: $1.3 billion. What we got was $3.1 billion, plus another $500 million to $700 million in future improvements that they had to do. We got close to $4 billion for an asset that he was going to give away. He was going to give away the $1.3 billion, plus he was going to give away any future profits or future losses. We got $4 billion for the taxpayers of Ontario to get the money back from the asset you wanted to give away, and we don't happen to believe that we should be in the toll highway business. You did.

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question to the Chair of Management Board respecting Management Board directives and tendering. Minister, in the weeks leading up to Walkerton, the then-Minister of the Environment was Mr Dan Newman. Your government at the time brought in a consultant, Gord Haugh, on a contract to run Mr Newman's office. Mr Haugh was the same consultant who had been paid at an annualized rate of $300,000 as Tony Clement's press secretary. He also ran your election tours in 1995 and 1999.

Yesterday we learned the price tag for Mr Haugh's two-month stay at the Ministry of the Environment. He was paid $55,000 for two months' work. On an annualized basis, that's $329,400. After yesterday's scathing report on the abuse of consulting contracts, do you believe your guidelines are serving the people of Ontario well?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): I will reiterate the fact that we have brought in new directives that clearly and definitively follow the recommendations of the auditor.

You were asking about consulting services. Now, as opposed to in your day—and we'll get into that in a second, in response to your next part—we've included such sections as fully documenting the process for determining, first of all, the availability of internal ministry or government resources prior to going to consulting services. We are also looking for tag-on reports at the end of contracts that set out clear contractual obligations and that also ensure, in the event we bring in consultants who bring specialized knowledge to the government, that there is a transfer of that knowledge to our employees so we can then retain and use our government employees first, prior to using consultants.

This is clearly in our directives, which we've implemented now. We're taking the instructions and the recommendations of the auditor to heart. He clearly had good suggestions. Governments prior to us didn't do things that way either, so be careful where you're going.

Mr Duncan: Well, it gets a little worse. When Mr Haugh was making the equivalent of more than $300,000 a year, he was also running up quite the expense account. In just six days, Haugh billed taxpayers more than $6,400 in expenses, including $2,500 for hotels, $600 for phone calls and $2,783 for meals, including six bottles of wine.

I have in my hand a memorandum dated April 13, which is called an "Exception for sole-sourcing in the minister's office." This alleviates the minister and the department from any kind of process you've established. He was engaged for a two-month period to provide the following: communications advice to the minister, personnel screening, staff selection, media training, preparation for the opening of the House, question period and other events.

The question is: how is it that a consultant with a document that clearly exempts any kind of public accountability, any kind of accountability to your department, your responsibility—how can this happen, and will you now release all the untendered contracts that your government has entered into across all the ministries? That's the only way we'll get to the truth of all these matters.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Clearly we've taken further steps than the auditor was suggesting, but let's put some context to this. Sometimes when you read public accounts, it is interesting reading material. There are a number of public accounts from—let's see, the Ministry of Labour; Mr Sorbara was the minister then. Let me share with you some of these from the public accounts: ARA Consulting, $158,000; Bay Consulting Group, $32,000; Harry Waisglass Consultants Ltd, $59,166; JB Marketing, $75,000; McKim Advertising Ltd, $113,000. This goes on and on, and these are only part of the ones that say "consultant" in here.

Clearly it was very important not only for us to bring in these rules and directives to comply with the recommendations the Provincial Auditor has given us, but we believe we have to go further than that. We've already gone to the point where we've got the implementation of the recommendations. We're going further now to a full consultation and review of the government rules to make them tougher and make sure they have the integrity that's required of government in the future.

ONTARIO INNOVATION TRUST

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation. It is my understanding that your hard-working parliamentary assistant from the great riding of Nipissing, AL McDonald, recently announced funding of $3 million to the University of Waterloo. Maybe it's because I've been away much of the time in the last little while, but I didn't realize this announcement was being made. I was wondering if you could tell this House what the funding will accomplish. Also, Minister, where is the money coming from?

Hon Jim Flaherty (Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): This is about the Ontario Innovation Trust and a major investment at the University of Waterloo. The $3-million investment will support the establishment of the Institute for Quantum Computing at the University of Waterloo. This is an important initiative for the university and one the government proudly supports.

Hon Mr Flaherty: The investment will enable the institute to set up a theoretical and experimental program to study the implications of quantum mechanics for information processing, which I know is a matter of great interest to the member opposite from Hamilton.

The funding came from the Ontario Innovation Trust. Since its creation in 1999, the trust has committed investments of $50.8 million in infrastructure support for 86 research projects just in the Kitchener-Waterloo area. Funding partners have added $77.9 million, for a total of $128.6 million invested in research infrastructure. These investments in the Waterloo region underscore our commitment to research that drives our knowledge-based economy. This is essential for the future prosperity of all Ontarians.

Mr Wettlaufer: It's pretty evident that this government is committed to investing in science, technology and innovation. The success of the University of Waterloo is very important to the people of Kitchener and Waterloo. The university employs many people in the area and the positive economic spinoffs from its success are felt throughout the region, not just direct employment but indirect employment in many facets of the region.

Minister, I am very happy to hear the government is supporting such an important initiative with the university. It is my understanding that since its creation in 1999, the Ontario Innovation Trust has helped many other research institutions around the province. I wonder if you could please inform the House of what else has been done to support innovation in Ontario.

Hon Mr Flaherty: I thank the member for Kitchener Centre for the question.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Flaherty: Since its creation in 1999—I know the member will want to hear this—the Ontario Innovation Trust has committed a total of $654.6 million in 808 projects at more than 30 institutions throughout Ontario. These are universities, colleges, hospitals and research institutes. Including the Canada Foundation for Innovation money, this is an investment of more than $1.1 billion in research infrastructure in Ontario.

The member opposite is right when he mentions the Provincial Auditor's concern. As a result of that, the board, which is an independent board of the trust, hired a consultant to ensure that the best practices and accountability were implemented by the OIT, as well as a requirement that the OIT fund be audited annually by an independent third party.

This is a major investment in research infrastructure, which is absolutely essentially in a knowledge-based economy—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): My question is to the Minister of Public Safety. The independence and the integrity of an officer of the Legislature, the Provincial Auditor, is a cornerstone, of our democracy and our system here in Ontario. Yesterday in the House you were quibbling with the numbers of the Auditor General. Outside the House apparently you said, and it is on tape, that the auditor's conclusions were misleading. This is a very serious allegation of a minister of the crown. I ask you to please clarify: are you impugning the integrity and the independence of the auditor general? If you are not, why are you questioning whether or not he misled the people of Ontario? Will you clarify this, Minister?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): I indicated yesterday that the numbers indicated in the Provincial Auditor's report were not the numbers the ministry recovered by simply checking CPIC with respect to a response to the auditor's report. The auditor indicated, and he did it in his report, that he was using an estimate based on a visit to five probation and parole offices, and extrapolated, based on what he found in those five offices, that that was a situation that existed across the province. He used an estimate of 10,000 outstanding warrants; in reality, the number off CPIC was 5,900.

He also suggested there were a significant number of serious offenders with outstanding warrants that were not being pursued. In fact, once again, reviewing that, the number was 178. When you look at 65,000 to 70,000 individuals that probation and parole have to monitor on a daily basis, that's a very modest amount. I think we have something to be proud of rather than to be concerned about.

Mr Bryant: The minister wants to quibble with the numbers from the Provincial Auditor, but I think most Ontarians find it extremely chilling that there are thousands, literally, of sex offenders out there in the province who are supposed to be supervised by this government and who are in fact not getting the treatment needed to protect Ontarians from sex offenders. I would have thought that the minister would not be defending that kind of result.

The minister says, "It's only 5,900 outstanding warrants. It's only 178 of them that are serious." I would have thought that no government would tolerate anything less than zero tolerance when it comes to cracking down on dangerous criminals who breach their probation and parole orders.

The bad guys out there must be saying, "What's the point of meeting our probation and parole orders, because the government of Ontario isn't going to do anything about it?" I would have thought that the minister would not defend even one of those bad guys being out there violating those parole orders. You may think that's OK; I say, the people of Ontario do not.

I ask you, Minister: are you really going to defend this record?

Hon Mr Runciman: Talk about scare tactics: the member is engaging in that exercise today. The reality is, if he wants to talk about parole boards, he should talk to his friends in the federal Liberal government. I think we have a lot to be proud of on this side with respect to the parole board—the significant decrease in releases through the parole board versus what was the case with the Liberal government and NDP government.

We have given additional money to the ROPE squad to pursue people who have outstanding warrants against them. Many of the 5,900 people are for technical breaches. The serious offenders are being pursued very actively.

With respect to sex offenders, if they're given a conditional release or put on probation, our hands are tied with respect to the decisions of the courts. If they do not mandate treatment, we are not in a position to offer it. In any event, they have the right to refuse.

So again, this is something of a red herring being reinforced by the Liberals in terms of their concern for law and order in this province. Their record does not support the fact that they really care. When they were in government they had very loose parole rules as a government. They did not have the numbers of police officers on a per capita—

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): My question is for the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. Minister, we all know that Ontario is the only place in Canada where the federal and provincial governments operate two separate training and employment systems. These are programs that help both unemployed and underemployed people receive training so they can make a greater contribution to the workforce. This is not an efficient use of taxpayer resources. It means confusion and duplication for people who need help entering the labour market in Ontario.

Some time ago, the federal government promised to sign a training agreement with Ontario to create a single, results-oriented system that would provide greater benefit to people who need training in our province. Minister, what is the status of negotiations on a labour market development agreement between Ontario and the federal government?

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): I'm happy to respond to this question. I think the people of Ontario should know that we accepted the offer from the federal government in July of 2001. Despite this, the Minister of Human Resources Development Canada has told us that they do not intend to sign an LMDA for Ontario. Ontario is the only province or territory that has been denied an LMDA.

What does this mean? This means that people on employment insurance in Ontario do not have the kind of access to training programs that every other person who pays into the EI fund does across this great country. We need a training agreement in order to be competitive.

Last night, members from the Liberal caucus and the NDP caucus attended the Canadian Manufacturers and Exporters' reception; they went there and smiled and acted like they knew nothing. They do know nothing. Why are you waiting? Because you think you could be the government, to ask the federal government to get this job done? Whom do you represent in this province, anyway? Get up there and get it done.

Mr Miller: I'm pleased to support the efforts of our government to secure a training agreement with the federal government to deliver more and better services to Ontarians.

Ontario is the economic engine of the country, as demonstrated by the finance minister's report today. It has the largest workforce and need for skilled workers. By supporting the workforce in Ontario, we are having a positive impact on the whole national economy. Some members of the federal government have claimed that two separate systems, federal and provincial, ensure a strong support for training in Ontario. I know that our government is increasing the resources it devotes to training programs, especially apprenticeship training for work in skilled trades. Minister, can you give us an update on the support that the federal government is providing to Ontario under the current system?

Hon Mrs Cunningham: It's really refreshing to have the member from Parry Sound-Muskoka care about people who have opportunities for training programs. It is so refreshing. None of you people care. You haven't done one thing to talk to your federal Liberal colleagues to get up there and talk to the Prime Minister. Not the minister; she has no authority. I will tell you right now. Listen to this: in 2001 HRDC had a budget of $538 million for Ontario.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. It is getting too noisy in here. I don't want to have to get up again.

Hon Mrs Cunningham: The only reason they are screaming is that they think they'll be the government and then they'll do something. Give me a break. In 2000-01, Human Resources Development Canada had a budget of $538 million in Ontario. They only spent $380 million, which is a shortfall of $150 million. Instead of this money going into apprenticeship training, it's going into kiosks. This is not a federal government, this is not a Liberal provincial government that gives a hoot about—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

CANCER TREATMENT

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have two questions to the Premier. On the same day that Roy Romanow was telling Canadians that there is no evidence that for-profit clinics provide cheaper or better care, your government extended the for-profit cancer treatment clinic at Sunnybrook for another six months. The decision was made behind closed doors at a meeting at Cancer Care Ontario. This is the second time you have renewed this contract, even though the Provincial Auditor has shown, first, that it costs $500 more per patient for treatment than in the public system; second, the original contract was awarded without an open, competitive tender; and third, no effort has ever been made to see if this work could be done in the public system. Premier, it's time to cancel this for-profit contract and invest this money in the public cancer system. Will you do that?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The Minister of Health will respond directly.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I welcome the opportunity to respond. In fact, the contract has been extended so that we can do precisely as the honourable member suggests and have competitive bids for the provision of the service. It's a simple extension of the contract until the bid process can go out, pursuant to the Provincial Auditor's request. It is another example of us heeding the advice of the Provincial Auditor and moving ahead with Cancer Care Ontario, with having a bidding process that we can all be proud of.

Ms Martel: The current contract isn't due to expire till February. Isn't it strange that it was renewed on the same day that Roy Romanow released his report? But there's no justification for continuing to pay for this for-profit provider. The minister will know that the president of CCO himself has already publicly said that there is not a crisis in cancer treatment. So why is there a need to continue with this for-profit clinic? I think your government is responding to a very questionable political lobby. We know that the Premier's special adviser on health, Ms Kristina Filmer, was registered as a lobbyist for this for-profit cancer clinic before she rejoined his staff. We also know that the for-profit clinic has been handing cancer patients a letter, as they leave after their cancer treatment, urging them to lobby the government to keep the clinic and their treatment going. I think that is a very questionable tactic by a health care provider. There is no need and there is no justification to continue funding this for-profit cancer treatment. Will you do the right thing now, cancel this contract and use this money in the public cancer system?

Hon Mr Clement: The reason this is quite humorous is because there has been an extensive letter campaign from Maude Barlow and all the assorted persons who are part of various left-wing causes. But I'm glad the honourable member mentioned letters, because I'd like to read into the record some excerpts from certain letters from patients, which is what we care about on this side of the House, rather than the ideology of the other side.

One patient says, "It's time to express my appreciation for the fine work done by you and your staff at Canadian Radiation Oncology Services. Your clinic provides a valuable and much-needed service. Cancer patients are spared a protracted wait for treatment and are able to access radiation therapy in a timely and efficient way."

I could go on: "I'm writing to thank the CROS clinic." "Many thanks for making this clinic a place for help, resources and reassurance." "Thanks for making my problem"—which was to be able to have tests done and offer suggestions. "I wanted to thank you," and, "How much we appreciated the caring and efficiency"—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The minister's time is up.

SERVICES FOR ABUSED WOMEN

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): My question is for the minister responsible for women's issues. Today survivors of domestic violence, women and children from rural areas, join us. Many of these families here in the gallery above today are from Norfolk county. Women in rural areas face special barriers. They are a $60 cab ride away from Ontario Works, which provides no transportation help and suspends payment if they miss one appointment. Other barriers include high rents, a result of no rent controls, and landlords unwilling to rent to women on welfare.

The provincial government used to assist women with these barriers by funding second-stage housing. You pulled that funding the minute you got into government in 1995. Second-stage housing gives families a year of affordable housing, security and much-needed on-site counselling, after being in emergency shelters.

Jennifer is here today. She voluntarily gave her children up to children's aid so that she can find affordable housing. Minister, will you do the right thing and reinstate funding for second-stage housing and give these rural women and their children a second chance to a secure life?

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): This is a question about affordable housing, so I'll give the question to the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague across the way. She presents a question that has a number of different facets to it, so it is very difficult for us to know how to answer that. She's talking about a number of things. I think the focus of her question is women who are fleeing domestic violence situations, and I think on all sides of the House, if we're talking about a situation where women have to flee their homes with their children in fear for their lives, then we all agree that we must do what we can to help those people.

Our commitment on this side of the House is unequivocal. We spend about $160 million across a variety of ministries, trying to find ways to provide programs to help these individuals who are in desperate need in a desperate time in their lives. Whether it's through shelters, through counselling programs, through 24-hour help lines, we try very hard to provide the kinds of services that will help them when they need it at a critical time.

Mrs Bountrogianni: My supplementary is for the minister responsible for women's issues. My question is on second-stage housing. Let me tell you what these women told me today. "Many of us had to relocate in order to be safe." One of them said, "I live on a bowl of bran cereal every day so that I can feed my kids. It kills me to tell my children that there's nothing to eat when they're hungry." Jennifer said, "I had to give my kids up so that I'd know they could eat."

Imagine, in the year 2002, giving up your children so that they can eat. Most of us are parents here. The women ask in desperation, Minister, "What do people like us do? What will happen to us?"

Don't insult them by referring the question. I want you to answer this question. You are the minister involved. Shelters are much needed, yes, but they are a short-term emergency respite. Last year the Provincial Auditor found that 1,000 women were turned away from one shelter alone. This is where second-stage housing kicks in. This is what you cut in 1995 totally, and I'm proud to say that under a Dalton McGuinty government we would reinstate second-stage housing.

The women from rural Ontario are here to ask you, Minister Cunningham, "Will you reinstate second-stage funding?" They're here to ask you, "What will happen to us?"

Hon Mrs Elliott: Because municipalities know better what kind of housing will work in their communities, the kind of second-stage housing my colleague across the way is referring to—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order, order. Stop the clock, please.

Interruption.

The Speaker: We've removed everybody from that side because I don't know who's a part of it. I would ask the co-operation from those who are remaining. I have allowed some people to stay. It's very difficult to know who is part of a group when we throw them out. I would ask for your co-operation if you do stay. Obviously, you know that you won't be able to shout out, and I hope the members who remain will adhere to the rules.

It is the minister's turn to respond.

Hon Mrs Elliott: I think this speaks to the concern that we all have in trying to find solutions to some of these very complex and troubling problems.

Second-stage housing is the responsibility of the municipalities. We've put in an additional $4 million to try and assist with that. We have increased the number of rent supplement units for abused women, and of course in each of our ridings those women who find themselves in an abusive situation have priority for the existing social housing.

On a different note, I guess, what are we doing to assist women who find themselves in the situation of welfare? When I travelled this summer I spoke to a number of women whose marriages have broken up or who have found themselves in difficult situations and are trying to make it on their own. I talked to them about how the welfare situation was helping them. What I can report to this House is that those women said to me that our changing the welfare system from just a cheque, a deadend of ongoing dependency, transforming that into an opportunity to learn new skills, to get a job, to find income, to stand on their own two feet, was the best thing that we could do for them. Our welfare transformations were working for them and, more important, for their families.

LEGAL SERVICES

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): My question today is for the Attorney General. Minister, you recently introduced legislation to regulate the use of contingency fee agreements. You and I both know that for many working families, affording a lawyer can be very, very difficult. The costs associated with starting a civil action can be very discouraging.

Access to justice is particularly crucial because the courts of the province play an important role in resolving disputes. What improvements would this legislation provide for access to justice and, in particular, to families with very modest incomes?

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I appreciate my colleague from Simcoe North raising this very important issue. Indeed, I think the greatest single challenge that we have in this problem in relation to the justice system is one of access. That's why the Ernie Eves government came forward and tabled a piece of legislation that includes regulation of contingency fee arrangements, and, what that will allow is for individuals to enter into contractual arrangements with lawyers to ensure that they don't have to pay anything until there is a resolution of the case that results in money coming to them.

We recently had the opportunity to read the decision that was rendered in September of this year by Justice O'Connor. Obviously, shortly after he rendered his decision, we began to study it, and in accordance with the direction from Justice O'Connor, we are now in a position to move into this area and to regulate this important field.

Justice O'Connor clearly said that contingency fees were legal. It's now our obligation as a government to ensure that proper regulation is in place.

Mr Dunlop: Minister, one of the key parts of the contingency fee system is the cap that will be set on payments. It's important that the system balance the rights of the lawyers to be paid for their services with the interests of the clients. We must make sure that no one can be exploited in any unscrupulous conduct.

What steps will you take to make sure that the system we put in place is fair to our clients and also to protect the interests of the consumer?

Hon Mr Young: Certainly it's very important that the government become involved at this point in time, and we certainly don't want to have a situation where lawyers across this province can enter into situations where they receive multi-million-dollar sets of costs and the injured party, the individual who has experienced damages, is not in receipt of the money that they are entitled to.

I will say to you that most lawyers operate in a most professional fashion, but I think it is incumbent upon this government to ensure that we have a system in place, we have rules in place, to avoid any difficulties. There are a number of ways we can do that, and this legislation will allow us to proceed forward either by way of a straight flat cap that would apply to all damages and then the lawyer for the injured party would just get a portion of that, or alternatively we could have a sliding scale or we could have some wording ensuring a fair and reasonable outcome that the judiciary would ultimately interpret.

DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): My question is for the Premier. I have a copy of a letter written by former Agriculture Minister Coburn to Gord Coukell, chair of the Dairy Farmers of Ontario, dated December 5, 2001, a year ago tomorrow, during this government's foolish attempt to ram through a repeal of the Edible Oil Products Act. The letter reads, "I, the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, am willing to submit to you today that in order to ensure the proper safeguards are in place, it is my intention to amend Bill 87 at the earliest possible date to remove reference to the June 2003 repeal of the Edible Oil Products Act."

The letter is clear. The deadline must be amended out of that legislation, the former minister states, "at the earliest possible date." We sat through an entire spring session and now we're in the last days of the fall session, Premier, and nothing has been done. Your Minister of Agriculture has sat on this.

The question here is simple: when exactly do you intend to make good on the commitment to the Dairy Farmers of Ontario?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The minister responsible for rural affairs can respond.

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): In response, the Minister of Agriculture and Food is certainly aware of this situation and is working with the stakeholders, the dairy farmers and the other stakeholders in this particular situation and is working toward a solution on it.

Mr Peters: Mr Speaker, my question was for the Premier, and certainly the minister of rural affairs has been hived off from agriculture so it troubles me to understand that.

Mr Premier, supply management has provided this province with the safest and most nutritious milk supply in the world and your government's foot-dragging is jeopardizing that. Without delay Ontario would become the black hole of North America for non-regulated blended products.

I have another letter, this one written by your current Minister of Agriculture just two weeks ago, regarding your government's commitment to supply management and I quote, "Nonetheless, it is important that supply management commodities continue to evolve in order to respond to the changing environment in which they operate." What is that, Premier? Do you have qualified support for supply management? What evolution is the ministry talking about? The Dairy Farmers of Ontario are here today, and I'm sure they'd love to hear your answer. Poultry, eggs and tobacco would be fascinated as well.

What is your secret agenda for supply management? First you fail to honour your commitment to the Dairy Farmers of Ontario and now your support for supply management comes with a codicil. Premier, what is going on here?

Hon Mr Coburn: Certainly our government has an outstanding record in terms of consulting with our rural stakeholders, the Dairy Farmers of Ontario and other rural stakeholders. It's a very important part of our economy here in Ontario.

We are currently conducting extensive consultations. For example, on the Nutrient Management Act, we have had and are continuing consultation with the Dairy Farmers of Ontario with respect to the edible oils act and food safety. These are ongoing consultations, and the Ministry of Ag and Food is conducting those, and we'll work with them toward an appropriate solution.

ALTERNATIVE ENERGY SOURCES

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question is for the Minister of Energy. Minister, can you please tell my constituents in Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale and other Ontarians what our government is doing to promote clean and green energy in Ontario?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): We established an all-party committee of this House, the select committee on alternative fuel sources, chaired by my colleague the member for Northumberland, Doug Galt, where a good number of members from all parties came together to look at suggestions and recommendations on how our province could promote clean, green energy. Many thought these recommendations would gather dust. I can say that over the past month and a half this government has been working tremendously hard to implement those initiatives. We appointed Ontario's first Commissioner of Alternative Energy, Steve Gilchrist. Steve will work very closely not just with the Minister of Energy but with the Minister of the Environment and his staff and the Premier's staff as well.

We're also bringing in a whole series of initiatives to promote solar power and wind power. I was very pleased to be in Bruce county with my colleague Helen Johns to open the first commercial wind farm in Ontario, which is good news. I was pleased to see my colleague Steve Gilchrist open another one.

Mr Gill: Thank you, Minister, for your response. Our government's action plan to lower and freeze the price of electricity and to create standardized billing is great news for Ontarians.

Can you please provide us insight into why every member of the opposition stood in their place yesterday and voted against giving speedy passage to the government's legislation, legislation which will bring financial relief to seniors, businesses and millions of people in Ontario?

Hon Mr Baird: I too shared the surprise that the member from Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale had when we saw all the Liberal opposition members try to delay passage of this bill. As the public will know, this House is adjourning for Christmas and for the holidays in a few short days, and some want to sit here while hydro customers are concerned about their families and their futures and debate and debate and debate. We want to provide relief to that farmer; we want to provide relief to that small business; we want to provide relief to the auto workers in St Catharines. That's why, on a bill every member of the official opposition says they support and want to pass, it's important that we have a vote and get on with providing some relief to the hard-working citizens and people of Ontario. They're supporting the action plan to lower hydro bills, and they want to see it brought into law.

HIGHWAY MAINTENANCE

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): My question is to the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. You know that the situation on our highways in northern Ontario is not getting any better. In fact, this last weekend 180 kilometres on Highway 11, from Smooth Rock to Hearst, were closed. Why? Because the private sector contractors couldn't put salt on the road. Minister, are you going to finally admit that your privatization scheme ain't worth the salt—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Minister.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): I think when we made a move to make government more efficient in that area we certainly improved the standards that had existed before. If the Minister of Transportation were here, he would indicate to the honourable member that very good standards are in place—in fact, some of the best in the world—with respect to snow removal and de-icing. In fact, this year we're doing pilot projects in the honourable member's part of the province with even newer technology, which we hope will make our winter road conditions even safer for drivers in this province.

Mr Bisson: Minister, we're not feeling any better in northern Ontario, because every time you take your car out on Highway 11 or any of the provincial highways it's the same story: the road is closed by the OPP. Why? Because the private snowplows are either not clearing the snow off the roads or they're not dropping the salt on the highways.

I asked a question of the Chair of Management Board last year with regard to the question of the privatization of contracts for highway maintenance, and the response I got from the minister of the day was that if there wasn't a saving for the taxpayers, they wouldn't go ahead with the privatization of winter road maintenance. The auditor says you haven't saved money. Will you finally admit this is a question of you not doing better with less, but us getting less because you're giving the private sector more?

Hon Mr Wilson: Regardless of who's delivering the service, as the honourable member knows, standards are in place. They're world-class standards and we're very proud of them. In fact, we've spent over $1.6 billion on improving highways in northern Ontario since this government came to office in 1995, an absolute record for any government in the history of this province. We don't need any lectures from the honourable member about improving highways, road conditions and safety in northern Ontario. In spite of an $11.7-billion deficit in their last year, and several multi-billion-dollar deficits in the fiscal years prior to that when they were in government, they didn't do anything to improve northern Ontario highways.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I wish to express my dissatisfaction with the answer that was provided to my oral question. Under 37(a) of the standing orders, I have filed my dissatisfaction, for a late show.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the member. The member will know he needs to file it with the table.

PETITIONS

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): One of the great frustrations to the people of Marathon and the area is the fact that the Attorney General has not appointed a full-time justice of the peace to replace the ones that were let go more than eight years ago. I have a petition signed by 379 people in Marathon, one tenth of the population, related to this issue:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the town of Marathon does not have a justice of the peace to serve our community and Heron Bay;

"Whereas Marathon used to have two justices living here; however, they retired in 1995, and were never replaced;

"Whereas Marathon and Heron Bay residents are now forced to travel to Manitowadge or Thunder Bay to acquire the services of a justice of the peace. This is unacceptable and unfair;

"Therefore, we want the Ontario government to appoint a justice or several justices of the peace in Marathon."

I am grateful to Rose Marie Comeau for putting this together. I am very pleased to add my name to the petition and ask the Attorney General to move quickly in this regard.

CHILD CARE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly from the Welland campus of Niagara College and also from E. Marks of Toronto. It reads as follows:

"Whereas 70% of Ontario women with children under age 12 are in the paid workforce;

"Whereas high-quality, safe, affordable child care is critical to them and their families;

"Whereas the Early Years Study done for the Conservative government by Dr Fraser Mustard and the Honourable Margaret McCain concluded quality child care enhances early childhood development;

"Whereas this government has cut funding for regulated child care instead of supporting Ontario families by investing in early learning and care;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Ontario government adopt the NDP's $10-a-day child care plan and begin implementation by reducing full child care fees to $10 a day for children aged two to five currently enrolled in regulated child care, by providing capital funds to expand existing child care centres and build new ones, by providing proxy pay equity for staff and by creating new $10-a-day child care spaces in the province."

I agree with the petitioners. I have affixed my signature to it.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the province of Ontario has experienced record levels of electrical consumption this summer, along with lower than expected generating capacity to meet the demand; and

"Whereas this has resulted in higher electrical bills for Ontario consumers; and

"Whereas short-term spikes in the cost of power are a particular hardship to persons on fixed incomes and a detriment to business in Ontario;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, request that the government of Ontario act immediately to develop a plan for protecting consumers against excessive short-term increases in the cost of electricity. We further request that the government of Ontario also review the impact of charges other than wholesale electrical rates, including the goods and services tax (GST) and the debt reduction charges appearing on electricity bills of Ontario consumers."

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): I keep getting petitions about the ever-increasing hydro rates. I'll read this petition to you, Mr Speaker:

"Whereas the Ernie Eves Conservative government has legislated the opening of the Ontario electricity market as of May 1, 2002, and the price per kilowatt hour for electricity in the province of Ontario has nearly quadrupled since May 1, 2002; and

"Whereas Ernie Eves has done a poor job in educating the public as to the ramifications of an open electricity market in the province of Ontario and has done little to punish the unscrupulous sales practices of door-to-door energy retailers; and

"Whereas the ... Eves government appointed the board of directors for Hydro One, who approved exorbitant salaries and compensation packages for Hydro One executives;

"Be it resolved that the Ontario government move immediately to protect our province's electricity consumers by addressing the serious generation problem in Ontario, by punishing unscrupulous electricity retailers and by moving forward with a rebate to offset the increasing costs of electricity in Ontario."

Since I agree with this petition, I'm signing my name to it.

1530

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have petitions that read as follows:

"To the Ontario Legislature:

"Whereas the Harris government's plan to privatize and deregulate Ontario's electricity system will lead to higher rates because private owners will sell more power to US customers whose rates are typically 50% higher than Ontario's; and

"Whereas selling coal plants like Nanticoke to the private sector will lead to more pollution because the private owners will run the plants at full capacity to earn a profit; and

"Whereas electricity deregulation in California has led to sky-high rates and blackouts; and

"Whereas Ontario needs a system of public power that will ensure rate stability, environmental protection and secure access to power;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the undersigned call on the government to scrap electricity deregulation and privatization and bring in a system of accountable public power. The first priority for such a public power system must be incentives for energy conservation and green power. Electricity rates and major energy projects must be subject to full public hearings and binding rulings by a public regulator instead of leaving energy rates to private profit."

I agree with the petitioners, and I've affixed my signature to this.

CAT SCANNER

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, request approval for installation of a CAT scanner at the Woodstock General Hospital. It is an essential piece of equipment for the practice of modern medicine. The arrangements to go to London for a CAT scan are unsatisfactory, cumbersome and cause unnecessary delay. It is standard equipment for a hospital of this size in North America. All counties in southwestern Ontario have at least one CAT scanner except Oxford county."

It's signed by a great number of my constituents who live in Woodstock and the surrounding area, and I sign this petition along with them because I believe it's the right thing to do.

HYDRO RATES

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This petition is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"The following signatures are signatures of complaint in regard to the severe and drastic increases in the hydro bills of customers in St Catharines and the surrounding area. Such increases have been difficult for seniors, people on fixed incomes, disability pensions, and low and middle incomes. As well, it is not our responsibility to assume Ontario Hydro debt. We pay while big corporations get breaks.

"If such unrealistic increases continue to occur, average people will become increasingly irate, if they have not already, and find it difficult to maintain normal, happy homes, let alone people in restricted situations.

"As citizens of Ontario, this is our opportunity for our voices to be united and heard in opposition to these unrealistic increases."

I affix my signature. I'm in complete agreement.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a petition that carries over 2,500 signatures of people dissatisfied about electricity deregulation, which brings it up to 9,037 signatures.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government deregulated electricity on May 1, 2002, in the province of Ontario without it being in their election platform in either 1995 or 1999 and without the mandate of the people of Ontario; and

"Whereas the price of the commodity of electricity has reached outrageous levels, having risen at times over 100% since May 1, 2002, causing Ontarians great financial hardship; and

"Whereas Ontario Power Generation (owned by the Ontario government) has applied to the Ontario Energy Board for a 20% reduction in the promised rebate to Ontarians if the commodity price of electricity rose above 3.8 cents per kilowatt hour; and

"Whereas competition in the electricity market has been scared off by the uncertainty of the Harris-Eves government's attempts to sell off a portion of Hydro One, leaving electricity commodity prices high; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government authorized exorbitant salaries and bonuses in the amount of $2.2 million per annum to be paid to the former president of Hydro One, and in excess of $1.6 million per annum to the vice-president of Ontario Power Generation;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario, and that the Conservative government and its leader, Ernie Eves, call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on this issue."

I also affix my signature.

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I have received thousands upon thousands of signatures. I continue to read this petition in the Legislature.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ernie Eves Conservative government has legislated the opening of the Ontario electricity market as of May 1, 2002, and the price per kilowatt hour for electricity in the province of Ontario has nearly quadrupled since May 1; and

"Whereas the Conservative government of Ontario has done very little to address key issues such as energy supply, which forces the province to import power and causes the price of electricity to skyrocket; and

"Whereas Ernie Eves has done a poor job in educating the public as to the ramifications of an open electricity market in the province of Ontario and has done little to punish the unscrupulous sales practices of door-to-door energy retailers; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has saddled the population of Ontario with additional debt reduction charges, which further increase the amount that the citizens of Ontario have to pay per kilowatt hour, yet the Hydro debt continues to increase; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris-Ernie Eves governments appointed the board of directors for Hydro One, who approved exorbitant salaries and compensation packages for Hydro One executives;

"Be it resolved that the Ontario government move immediately to protect our province's electricity consumers by addressing the serious generation problem in Ontario, by punishing unscrupulous electricity retailers and by moving forward with a rebate to offset the increasing costs of electricity in Ontario."

This is signed by many good persons from places across my riding such as Blenheim, Thamesville, Dresden, Chatham, Merlin and Highgate. I too have signed this important petition.

HYDRO RATES

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I have petitions signed by people from Milton, Mountainview and Brampton, and it reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas electricity bills have skyrocketed under the Harris-Eves government's flawed electricity plan; and

"Whereas some consumers have signed higher fixed-rate contracts with retailers, without adequate consumer protection; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has failed to address electricity supply shortages in Ontario, forcing the purchase of American power at premium prices, driving up prices still further; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government appointed a board of directors for Hydro One that has been paying themselves extravagant salaries, compensation packages and severances for senior executives; and

"Whereas Hydro One bought 90 municipal utilities, serving about 240,000 people across Ontario, at premium prices and with borrowed funds. These purchases with borrowed funds have increased Ontario's debt burden; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has added additional fees and taxes on to local electricity distribution companies. These charges have also been passed along to consumers;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Harris-Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair and reasonable prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario and that the Harris-Eves government and its leader, Ernie Eves, call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on this issue."

It has been signed. I totally agree with it and will sign it as well, and I'll hand it over to our page, Evan, here.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01, totalling approximately $150 million; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

"Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

"Therefore, be it resolved we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas, and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases."

This is signed by hundreds of residents from areas such as Merlin, Cedar Springs, Chatham, Blenheim and Ridgeway. I too have signed this petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): I have a petition here from residents of Don Valley East to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 per month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on the government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas the government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by at least $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan;" and that would be back in 1999, "and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

I wholeheartedly agree with this petition and I have affixed my name to it.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TIME ALLOCATION

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): The motion reads that, pursuant to Standing Order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 209, An Act respecting funerals, burials, cremations and related services and providing for the amendment of other statutes, when Bill 209 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill, without further debate or amendment; at such time the bill shall be ordered for third reading, which order may be called on that same day; and

That, when the order for third reading is called, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

That the vote on second and third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred; and

That, in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Mr Hudak has moved government notice of motion number 80. Minister?

Applause.

Hon Mr Hudak: Thank you, Mr Speaker, and I thank my colleagues for their adulation and their applause—

Interjection: Colleague.

Hon Mr Hudak: OK, colleague—on this motion.

I'm very pleased to speak on the motion with respect to Bill 209, also known as the Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002. I had the pleasure to speak on this bill on first and second readings. I will add some thoughts on the debate I've heard to date on this legislation and give an indication of why I, as the minister responsible for the bill and as an MPP, feel it's important to move forward expeditiously on Bill 209 to ensure that the next steps can be taken for consumer protection in this area and, finally, I would argue, to modernize legislation that is practically 100 years old. It was almost a century ago when this legislation was first written. At the latest stage—it has been on and off over decades—the latest discussions have been in the works for a number of years.

You could say with a grain of fact to it that some of the staff in the ministry who have worked on this bill are getting near retirement, they have been working on this bill for so long. I know there have been four ministers—I'm the fourth—in this government who have worked on Bill 209, in the run-up to the bill, the consultations, the policy decisions, and now in its form, Bill 209. That's just this government. I know previous governments attempted to deal with this legislation. There were some changes in 1989 or 1990, but no substantial reform in this sector for 90 to 100 years, despite the fact that in reality cultural practices, preferences, the cultural face of Ontario have changed substantially from a century ago.

As well, there has been throughout that time a great deal of discussion, not only in government circles but among people who are interested, who have a business interest, a personal interest, or from the point of view of the consumer, a consumer protection interest in this industry. This consultation, in a more intensive form, has been happening over the last couple of years, culminating in the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee, aka BSAC, report submitted to Minister Sterling not too long ago, the principles of which form the basis for Bill 209 that we have in the Legislature today.

I want to not only talk about the importance of the bill and the timeliness with moving forward to the next step, but to respond to some of the comments people have made with respect to Bill 209. I want to point out that this is not a partisan bill. It's not something where I was sitting in my office one day daydreaming of the bereavement sector and thought I should move forward with this type of legislation.

The work on this bill had started long before my time. The point I am making is that it was not a partisan bill or an election campaign item. I don't recall it being part of a campaign. It was something that was made by the industry themselves in consultation with the consumer sector. You want to make sure. The Stewart family, for example, want to be assured of Will's future, that Will will have options when he is making those plans. Will is a young fellow, but we all have to be realistic that the time comes for all of us, and we need to know that we have the consumer protections in place for our loved ones who live beyond us, or that we make the decisions ourselves ahead of time in some sort of planning.

We want to make sure that the consumer protections are in place, that decisions are made with as clear a head as possible, and also that the legislation is modernized so it can reflect the realities of today and the choices we all can make.

A bit of background: it began in the more concentrated form in 1998 when Minister Tsubouchi asked the Red Tape Commission to consult and come up with some policy options. That was done with members of funeral home businesses, small and large cemeteries, I have mentioned consumers, monument builders, casket makers, transfer agencies—those industries that are involved in the bereavement sector.

The Red Tape Commission made some recommendations that were used for further consultations. My predecessor Norm Sterling I think deserves a lot of credit for the developments that have taken place. In 2001, Mr Sterling was the minister who established the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee, the BSAC committee that I mentioned a bit earlier, a group with representation from all the participants in the sector and, importantly, with the consumer voice being there at the table to act on behalf on those who are going to be using the service at some time in their lives.

An important ingredient for success was the presence and the leadership of esteemed Justice George Adams. Justice Adams's expertise and skills helped to develop a consensus around that large table that had chairs assigned to the various individuals in the sector and to consumer groups to reach a consensus on a number of the principles. In fact, all 18 of the BSAC principles have been embraced in Bill 201.

Interestingly, I want to point out to members of the House that of the 18 recommendations, fully 17, or 94%, deal with consumer protection. So we can say, I think very fairly, that this bill, pure and simple, deals with consumer protection issues in embracing those BSAC principles that have been recommended.

The fact of the matter is that while it's often something we don't think about, bereavement services are one of the biggest purchases that individuals will ever have to make in their lives. There are auto purchases and home purchases, but often for the average Ontario family, bereavement services are in the top five single items or services they purchase. In fact, the average funeral cost in Ontario today, according to our figures, is about $5,700, so a substantial amount of funds are invested to see off a loved one.

I think there are differences here. While a funeral may not be as expensive as buying a car or a home, one important difference is the uniqueness of the situation, the vulnerability of the consumer at this very delicate time in their life. Even a normally cautious or skeptical consumer can become confused or rush to judgment when making decisions in a very emotional period of time.

When you're purchasing a car or a home, you tend to take the time to shop around and check out the options—to kick the tires. Sadly, often when dealing with the bereavement sector, if planning has not been done ahead, you need to make the decision in a relatively short period of time when you're in a very difficult emotional state. That's why the consumer protection mandate is so important in this bill and is something we want to make sure is prominent in the communications down the road as this bill rolls out, if passed by the assembly. We believe it's vital for consumers to have very clear information on what their options are and what their protections are as well, and how to utilize the rights that are in the bill, if passed.

I'll give you a few examples. Under Bill 209, if passed, operators would have to maintain standardized price lists and make them available in accordance with the regulations in the bill. For example, under the possible regulations, licensed operators would be prohibited from charging more than the price on the price list. So consumers would have that list up front, and if they wanted to choose a budget route or a more expensive route, or if they are making a pre-planning decision, they would have clearly laid out in front of them the options that are available in a standardized price format.

Regulations also could require a very easy-to-understand informational brochure. Having communication material on hand when making that decision is an important part of the consumer protection initiatives in this bill. To give you an example of what the brochure could contain, it would list consumers' rights and obligations, and the obligations of the funeral home, the cemetery etc.

An important idea as well is a toll-free number to contact the provincial regulator, so that consumers can call if they are not sure they are getting a square deal. If they are not sure they have been given full information, they could virtually have the provincial regulator there at the table with them to make sure they are being dealt with in a forthright manner.

I believe, from those I've met who work in this sector, that the vast majority are hard-working, legitimate operators who care about their clients and do a good job in their communities, whether it's in Ridgeway or Vineland or Manitoulin. At the same time, we do receive concerns from time to time about consumers who are not dealt with in a fair manner. That's why these types of consumer protections are important, especially at such a sensitive time in their lives.

Other important BSAC recommendations of the 17 of 18 on the consumer protection side are the 30-day cooling-off period, trusting requirements and compensation fund as well.

This bill, if passed, would provide a 30-day cooling-off period where consumers could cancel the contract if, for example, they changed their mind about a prepaid package, or what have you, before that is used. Such a cooling-off period is common in consumer protection legislation currently before the assembly. Bill 180 also envisions a cooling-off period, especially for high-pressure sales. So as part of a consumer protection package coming from the Ernie Eves government, those two pieces work hand in hand in terms of a cooling-off period if you feel you are a victim of high-pressure sales, to take sober second thought, to take a step back and say, "I've re-evaluated my decision. I've spoken with my friends; I've spoken with an adviser. I've changed my mind." This would give them 30 days in which to do so and to make sure they got the deal they intended, just like it would work in Bill 180, consumer protection, if advanced.

I'll give you another example. This bill, if passed, will provide protection for consumers in the event of a bankruptcy of a funeral home, cemetery, monument retailer etc.—basically, any licensee under the act—because it would ensure that all the prepaid money would be held in trust. So if you made that investment, if you bought a prepaid package, for example, or a grave plot or what have you, and that business was no longer in business, went bankrupt, the compensation fund and trusting requirements would ensure that you would not be out of pocket on such a substantial investment.

A cross-industry compensation fund would also be established to help consumers who paid for services but who did not receive them. Currently, that exists in the funeral sector act, but as I've said before in this House, there are two separate pieces of legislation. It doesn't exist in the other sectors that form part of bereavement services. This legislation, if passed, would ensure that that type of compensation fund, that consumer protection initiative, would apply whether you're at a funeral home, a cemetery, or buying a casket, a monument etc.

Not to belabour the point, but I do think it important: all of these consumer protection regulations came out of that BSAC process—a credit to those in the industry who were part of that panel because they themselves are helping to raise the standards of the industry right across the board.

Consumer choice: there is an interesting article that many of us may have seen in the Globe and Mail last weekend, where journalist Jan Wong noted that the baby boomers are—this is her quote—“beginning to redecorate life's departure lounge.”

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. There's way too much noise back behind the chair here. Minister.

Hon Mr Hudak: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I appreciate that.

Anyway, I've spoken quite often about the importance of the consumer protection aspects and consumer choice part of that as well. That's why I think it important that this legislation should be passed by the assembly. I hope we do have that. We need to move on to the next phase of the bill, which is working in a similarly consultative process with those who work in the community, the faith-based churches and cemeteries and such, as well as consumers, seniors' groups etc, to make sure that in doing the regulations and building the industry for the future a similarly sensitive and consultative approach is used. That's been the success, finally, after many, many years to get the legislation in the House, and I look forward as minister, if this is passed, to the opportunity to continue that on the regulation side and help set up this industry acting as one whole, one voice, and to have consistent consumer protection and consistent codes of ethics and high standards right across the industry.

There have been some arguments I've heard in the assembly that I would like to address as well. There has been a discussion that somehow this legislation creates an uneven playing field between small, family-run operators and large corporations. It's important to set the record straight on this. Quite frankly, there is a very, very uneven playing field, as we speak today.

By way of example, funeral homes and visitation centres: funeral homes fall under their legislation; they have a code of ethics; they have standards; they have qualifications and licences; and, by their definition, are located on town property, pay taxes, pay the municipal taxes. You could have a creature called a visitation centre, pretty much the same thing as a funeral home save for the fact that there's no embalming done at this particular place. But being on a cemetery property, they paid no property taxes; they weren't governed by any legislation—they're in a grey area—and I think levelling that playing field as well helps in that respect. This—and many other reasons I'd be pleased to comment on, if I have that opportunity down the road—is why I support this bill too, and I quite strongly support this motion and hope to see it get a positive result.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I'd like to continue the debate on Bill 209, the bill that was introduced a few days ago with respect to making supposedly improvements surrounding funeral homes and all the services that go with providing funerals—cemeteries and other places where funerals can be held and so forth.

I spoke last week, perhaps with a little bit more time on second reading than on closure, with respect to some of those things that I don't agree with in the content of the bill. I did say last week, however, that this is a good step. It improves some of the aspects that surround funeral services and those services that are necessary and needed at that particular time. I want to address to the minister the point that it is at that time the public must truly be protected and given assistance. Consumers should not spend time, because they don't have the time, deciding what is good and what is bad. I think we should be very straightforward. It is a time of deep sorrow and bereavement. Consumers should not be given the opportunity to be taken at the funeral home, at the casket place, in selecting a headstone or anywhere providing one of those services.

What does this bill do? It improves the existing situation when it comes to choosing a casket, going to a retail store, if you will, a cemetery or other places, as they have been called in the past, funeral centres—not a funeral home, and I'll come back to that in a couple of minutes—but a funeral centre which is allowed to sell caskets and other paraphernalia attached to burials.

What else does the bill do, as it is presented? It improves some of the standards and, yes, that is an improvement since it has been so many years that the standards have not been touched, and the ethics. That is important. I think it's very important that at a time of bereavement people don't have to deal with problems other than dealing with the situation at hand and dealing with making provisions for the person who has just passed away.

So what is the thing that really bothers me with this particular bill? It is the fact that we are opening the door not only to competition, because I think competition in many ways is good, but what we are doing—and I will touch briefly on the content of my bill that I introduced some two years ago. It is the fact that now unlicensed funeral homes can hold visitations and they can also sell caskets. It is not permitted at the present time.

The legislation, as it has been introduced, will allow cemeteries to both do funeral services and be a visiting centre. I see a problem with that. We will see the creation of franchising funeral centres or funeral homes. Why do I say that? It is because if this legislation goes through the way it is proposed, the large corporations—and there are now some large corporations that control several funeral homes; maybe under different names but they are controlled by one entity. They also control a number of cemeteries.

When we say we want to offer the most protection to consumers, this is a very serious grey area. Now, if you shop around, and you don't have much time to shop around at that time, you're bound to get a number of cemeteries or funeral parlours that belong to the same entity and thus you will get the same answer every time. I'm asking you, Mr Speaker, what kind of protection is this for consumers out there? It is none.

One thing that we've been fighting in my community, for example, and that was the reason for bringing in my bill, is that funeral services were being conducted from an unlicensed place. This bill will now do exactly that, which means that they can prepare the body, whatever preparation that is, in a licensed funeral home, and this legislation will allow them to transfer the body to another location that is not licensed as a funeral home. That's where visitation can take place, and eventually that's where the funeral service will take place as well. This can be very damaging because a funeral centre, a funeral parlour, can locate in a commercial area next to a residential area, creating the traffic problems that the people in my community were against in the first place. We may not see it now, but this is exactly what is going to happen. I've asked the minister to look into this particular concern that I've had, and I hope he will.

By introducing this piece of legislation, and we hope, as the minister says, that we can support it and it will all go through, he also has to take into consideration that we don't want to approve a particular piece of legislation that may give the suspicion or the impression that it is being driven by large corporations. When I say "large corporations," I mean corporations of funeral homes, funeral centres or cemeteries, and there are some large corporations which own both. So if we want to do the right thing, we have to make sure that the bill does exactly what the minister says it's going to do. But the way it is, I can't see it.

We want it to be seen that we will create a very solid, clear, level playing field. But if the bill goes through the way it is, I'll tell you today that a lot of small businesses out there will have to close because they cannot afford to compete with the large corporations. Under the bill the way it is now, those large corporations or cemeteries or whatever will provide services from A to Z, squeezing out the little guy, not only the small individual funeral centre or funeral home, but also those small businesses that provide the sale of other goods such as caskets and headstones. We just don't want to give the idea that this is going to offer more protection. We have to make sure that if it becomes law, the bill indeed will deliver that needed protection. Again, the way this bill has been written, it will not offer that particular protection.

At a time of need, people don't have time to decide what headstone or casket or whatever they will have to choose. Is that a time when we need more pressure on family members to choose the kind of headstone or the type of casket: a light one, brown, dark, wood, steel or whatever other kind? It should be their choice, so we should not provide any more pressure at that time. We believe that by limiting the competition, this is exactly what is going to happen and, ultimately, not only is the service going to suffer, but the costs are going to go up as well.

We have seen, for example, some of the so-called no-frills stores or no-frills services. Do you know what? Some of these so-called no-frills stores or cemeteries and funeral services are more expensive—more expensive—than the small operators. Do you know why? Because those so-called no-frills services are owned, operated and managed by the large corporations.

I don't have to tell you that this is a huge business. Let's face it: it's a huge business. It is being exploited, and that's why protection must come in. But unfortunately, while the minister has good intentions in introducing the bill with some changes that are necessary, it does not go far enough. It does not address all those concerns to give the public 100% peace of mind. You may say no bill will ever give consumers 100% peace of mind.

That minister said the other day that this bill, the way it has been presented now, has received unanimous consent from all sides. I have to tell you, Minister, that if you did indeed speak to a lot of the consumers and various groups that have a stake, like small businesses, they have not been consulted. There is no total consensus on this. There is a lot of apprehension out there. There are a lot of problems with the bill. The public knows it and those small operators know it as well, because if the bill goes through the way it is, they are going to be out of business because they cannot face the stiff competition of the large operators and, therefore, they will be squeezed out.

Getting to the end of my time here, let me say to the minister again, as you're pushing to bring this to a close—because we are being pushed by the government to limit our debate and send this through the House—please, maybe you should send it to public hearings and give those people out there a chance, an opportunity to dwell on the bill as it has been presented. Give those who have a concern the opportunity to come to Queen's Park or other places and voice their concerns, and then make those necessary changes so that we can present to the public, the consumer, a bill that will offer better standards and protections and is much more ethical.

Having said that, Mr Speaker, my time is up and I thank you again for allowing me those 15 minutes.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I want to say off the bat that there are now three things for certain in life: taxes, death—and we're talking about that here in terms of this bill—and that on Wednesday afternoon in this place there will be time allocation motions. It's the modus operandi of this place. The member for Nickel Belt and I show up here to work on Wednesday afternoon, to do our duty, and sure as God made little green apples, we'll be debating another time allocation motion. We say, "It's Wednesday afternoon so it must be a time allocation motion," or "It's a time allocation motion so it must be Wednesday afternoon." That's how much of a pattern is developing here.

There is no process any more. There is no opportunity for input; there is no interest on the part of the government side in good ideas that we might bring forward. There's no interest in going out and around the province on hearings on any of this legislation. It's just, "Get it done," "We know what's good for you," ram it down your throat, "It's good medicine; you'll be better off in the end." Well, we know now, after seven or eight years of this Conservative government, that almost everything that they've done has turned out to be a lump of coal, to use the analogy as we move toward Christmas in the province at this point in time.

Let me share with you very briefly, before I get into the act and bill itself, what's happening here this afternoon. We've had groups come and lobby us, faith groups, groups representing family-owned mom-and-pop funeral services in communities across this province. We've had municipalities concerned about this bill come and talk to us. We've had the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, for goodness sakes, come and talk to us New Democrats about concerns they have re this bill. They asked us, if nothing else, to ensure that the government takes the time necessary to go out and have committee hearings and give us opportunity to have some input to put on the record some of our concerns, to make some suggestions, to bring forward with you some amendments that might improve this piece of public business so that it actually does what is laid out in the opening of the bill.

Alas, that's not going to happen. We're here this afternoon, much to our chagrin and, I'm sure, much to the disappointment of those groups that have come to speak to us, particularly the faith groups who took so much time and made so much effort to find convenient times for all of us to get together so that they could share with us the concern that they have over this bill.

Well, this afternoon is going to be the end of it. This afternoon, we're not really talking about the bill; we're talking about this time allocation motion, although we'll take the opportunity to in fact do that. But this afternoon, in the next couple of hours—it's now a quarter past 4—in the next hour and 45 minutes we will have dealt with a major change in the bereavement industry in this province, change that has taken a long, long time to be developed. Traditions that have built up over years and years will be changed in this place with the little bit of debate that we will have here this afternoon.

Let me just share with you the motion that was tabled by the Minister of Consumer and Business Services this afternoon on behalf of Mr Stockwell. I'll read it for you, and then I'll explain very clearly and simply exactly what it means.

"That, pursuant to standing order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 209, An Act respecting funerals, burials, cremations and related services and providing for the amendment of other statutes, when Bill 209 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill, without further debate or amendment; at such time the bill shall be ordered for third reading, which order may be called on that same day"—so we can have second and third reading on this bill on the same day—"and

"That, when the order for third reading is called, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

"That the vote on second and third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred; and

"That, in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bells shall be limited to five minutes."

What are they saying there? What they're saying there very simply is, after today, at the end of today, when we vote on this time allocation motion, the next time that the government calls the bill forward, the next time the government decides it wants to put this Bill 209 on the table for debate in this place, we will go immediately to a vote.

Once we have finished that vote on second reading, we will move then, immediately, without any debate, any amendment, any opportunity for amendment, without any committee hearings whatsoever, not even downstairs for 20 minutes like we had for the budget bill the other day, or the red tape omnibus bill; not even the 20 minutes that we got for that will we get in committee so that we can bring forward amendments. That's not going to happen, never mind go out and across the province and speak to small and medium-sized and large communities—because they all have different perspectives, and the industry in those communities all have different perspectives on this bill. We're not going to do that. There will be absolutely no committee hearings, zero, none in this instance, as is the pattern of this government these days, it seems, as they rush headlong to the end of this session because they don't want any more question periods than they can get away with.

We know that we're going into an election come early spring of next year. We say, let's have it now. If that's where you're going, let's do it now, and let's drop all this legislation so that we can get a government back in here, led by Howard Hampton, that will in fact have respect for the processes that have built up over a long period of time in this place that reflect the democracy that we all are committed to and that have served us for so long.

But no, this bill will come back for second reading; we'll vote on it; there will be no committee; we'll go straight to third reading; we'll vote on it. There will be no committee. It will go straight to third reading. We'll vote on it and then it will become an act of this Parliament and the rule of the day where bereavement services are concerned. That's what we're about here this afternoon. That's what's happening. We're ramming this through.

This is an important bill. We heard the minister this afternoon say that we shouldn't have any real concern about this bill, that it was built around a consensus they arrived at in consultation with the industry out there and with the communities and other folks who will be affected by it. We're here to say this afternoon that this legislation is based on a discussion and consultation conducted by Justice Adams, which produced a document outlining the current course of action. While the government calls it a consensus, having heard from so many of the affected parties over the last few months, we say this afternoon that it certainly was not a consensus at all.

Many of the groups were unhappy with the results, but there are so many competing interests in this sector that it would be very difficult to produce a balance. However, that doesn't mean that, once legislation is tabled and we get a look at what it is the government is proposing after having had this consultation under Justice Adams and having heard from people, we shouldn't give them a chance to come back and speak to the bill and how it might affect them and how we might improve on what it is that's being put forward. That's not going to happen.

Many of these groups are very unhappy. For example, the monument and casket retailers are unhappy. Small, independent funeral directors are unhappy. Municipalities are unhappy. Some of the faith groups are unhappy. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business is unhappy.

The government is definitely telling a story when they describe the current situation as a consensus. It is, rather, a situation in which they needed to move forward and have chosen to charge ahead despite the criticism and not take the time necessary to hear everybody out so that we might, at the end of the day, have something that reflects full consultation and at least some attempt at some moderation and some interest in what others are saying this bill is all about.

The impetus for making these changes came primarily from the cemeteries and crematoria in the province. The faith groups and the family-run funeral service organizations would have been just as happy to have stayed the old way, to have what's in place now continue in place, to work around that and work with everybody involved to improve on that. This bill is an attempt to strike a balance, but we suggest it's a precarious balance, among the various constituents involved in the issue. However, when you start messing around with something that has been under stable regulation for so long there are bound to be difficulties.

There need to be considerable committee hearings, but alas, it isn't going to happen. The member for Nickel Belt and myself were here last week making that point over and over again in our responses to speeches by various members in the Legislature here, and in our speeches themselves, that we needed to have considerable and travelling consultations on this bill to find out if the legislation accomplishes what they agreed to in the consultations as the drafting happened.

We said they just couldn't ram this through and then cross their fingers and close their eyes and hope it works. We've seen them do that before and we're all wearing the result. The government has avoided those bumps, those challenges by leaving the real problems to the regulations, which causes us real concern because regulations are done by the government with no input, no requirement that they consult or talk with anybody, and with no opportunity for the opposition in particular to have any say. There are so many details left to the regulations that most groups involved in the process are reserving judgment about the effect of it.

Given this government's propensity for pandering to big business, it wouldn't surprise us if the regulations were heavily favoured or tilted in favour of corporate shops. That brings me to another point I want to put on the record here this afternoon. That's the potential for corporate takeover of the whole bereavement industry. We've seen it in health care, we've seen an attempt to do it in education and we've seen the fiasco that hydro has become in this province. Now we see the government, cajoled, encouraged and lobbied by their corporate friends on Bay Street, taking another very important, sensitive and critical area of public life and saying to them, "What can we do to help you become involved and take over," so they can apply this notion of private sector discipline in the area of bereavement services.

Well, we know what that was all about when we heard our leader speak of it this afternoon in the context of the auditor's report that came down this week. We now know very clearly what private sector discipline is going to do to the public life of this province, and it's my belief that that's where we're now heading in the bereavement industry. We're going to turn it over more and more, or at least provide the opportunity or open the gates for the corporate sector—I'm talking about the big corporate sector here—to come in and take over this area.

I have to tell you that in conversations I've had, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, the faith groups and the smaller family-owned industries in this area are very concerned. Those who make caskets or who do markers on graves are very concerned, because they don't know, if the big corporate sector takes over and it becomes one or two or three major interests, whether they will have a niche or any opportunity at all to do what they've done well for a long period.

I know myself, from having stickhandled legislation through this House to regulate franchising in this province—by the way, there was a nice big piece in the latest edition of the Ontario Business Report that the ministry puts out, with the smiling face of Mr Flaherty, Mr Right Wing himself, on the second page talking about this wonderful legislation they now have in place in Ontario regulating franchising, without any effort to indicate that if it hadn't been for me and our caucus, that wouldn't be the case. There would be no regulation. The big corporate interests, where franchising is concerned, would have their way with so many small, dedicated, hard-working and committed individuals and families across this province. The damage that was doing continues, because what they put in place was so minimal as to almost be hurtful in some instances where franchising is concerned. Now they're out there promoting it as something they did, that they initiated and put in place, when in fact it was the last thing they wanted to do and only did it when we had a chance to sit down, talk to them and work with them. As a matter of fact, I give credit to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations at the time, Mr Runciman, for working co-operatively with me to put that piece of legislation in place. It's an example of what can be done creatively. Mind you, as I said, it wasn't enough, but at least it was an opening of the door, a foot in the door, to put that in place and begin thinking about regulating an industry.

If the government was equally forthcoming and interested in our input and what we have to say about these things, we might be able to put in place a piece of legislation to move forward the delivery of bereavement services in this province—yes, to do what is in this bill that we think is supportable, but on the other hand to deal with some of the issues that have been raised by interested parties that we can't support. But at the end of the day, what will it matter? They have the majority and they'll ram this through.

It was interesting: this weekend, I went home to Sault Ste Marie and I went to mass on Sunday morning and heard the priest say to the congregation from the pulpit that the bishops are sending out a warning that they should tell the funeral service they go to when somebody in the family passes away that they want to have a church service at the church they attend regularly, week after week, because I guess there's now a fear, with this new legislation and with the very aggressive nature of some of the big corporate entities in the funeral business across the province, that even the churches will be pushed out. As you know, when you go into some of the larger funeral homes now, there's everything. They're selling caskets, they're selling packages. They have the wake service and now, usually attached, not very far away, is a chapel. If you talk to the funeral director, he can get for you any number of ministers or spiritual leaders who will come in and actually lead a service right there in the funeral home. You don't have to go anywhere to be connected to your church community at this very important time in life, when spirituality is such a central part of what's going on, to celebrate and to mourn with your community the passing away of a loved one.

The bishops are concerned, and so they should be, that with this new legislation and with the new attitude that's out there toward corporate control of everything, in fact even funeral services now will be taken more and more out of the hands of church communities and turned over to corporate interests. That should concern everybody. It certainly concerns me. It perked me up on Sunday morning, when I heard the priest in the pulpit saying these things to our congregation, warning our congregation about this without being overtly political. It's funny that, when I spoke to him at the back of the church after and asked him if he was concerned about the corporate takeover, that wasn't a discussion he wanted to engage in, but certainly that's the interpretation I brought to the whole thing.

I put it on the floor here this afternoon that out there across Ontario now there is a knowledge of this piece of business that's before us. There is some very real, important and significant concern that needs to be addressed. Alas, we have before us a time allocation motion that's not going to allow us the opportunity to put on the record any more than we already have. It will not give us the opportunity to go out across the province and hear from, for example, the bishops, perhaps my pastor, and others who might want to raise some very real concern about this and challenge the government to slow down, to take a deep breath, to take a sober second look at this and then maybe come back at it again and see where we can perhaps go from there.

You see, the corporate world, the corporate sector, the big business interests in Ontario and Canada and the multinationals don't need our help. They don't need our help. What we should be doing here in this place is making sure that as the corporate sector do their thing—and they have many valuable things that they do. But government has a responsibility to make sure that corporate interest does not work its way into the common interest that we all have in our province, in our jurisdiction, in a way that begins to take away opportunity, freedom, protection and rights that we are so proud of here in this province and in this country, rights and traditions and ways of doing things, freedoms we've long fought for and that people have gone to war over. We need to make sure even today, as we stand in our place in Legislatures such as this one, that we're protecting these with every inch of our being, with every ounce of intelligence that we have.

It is with heavy heart that I recognize there is no more that I can do on behalf of those people who have come before me, particularly the small family-owned funeral businesses in my community, and small and medium-sized communities across this province in particular. There's nothing more I can do on behalf of the faith communities that sat down with me in my office and shared with me some of their very real concerns and anxieties where this bill is concerned. There's nothing I can do any more in this place to reflect the very real concern that my pastor this Sunday shared with his congregation, where the corporate creep that's going on in this business is now perhaps ready to take over the very important work and responsibility that churches and church groups and church communities have always exercised in community after community across this province.

I turn the time that we have left in our caucus over in a few minutes to the member for Nickel Belt, who wants to put some thoughts on the record on this important piece of public business.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): Here we are, once again dealing with a time allocation motion or, as my colleague Mr Caplan described it, the guillotine notice, cutting off debate. I think it's safe to say that we on this side of the House and the citizens of Ontario should have grave concerns over the frequency that closure—the shutting down of debate—is being put forth in this Legislature.

As legislators, we are elected to ensure that we undertake a complete debate. But you know, this government is bound and determined to cremate the relevance of this Legislature. I think the epitaph of this government is going to read, "1995 to 2002, 207 bills passed, 87 time-allocated." In 40% of the legislation that has come before this House, the debate has been shut down. You buried the opportunity again for public hearings on this bill.

It's most interesting when one goes back to review Hansard. My colleague Mr Crozier from Essex predicted that we would see closure with this legislation. He predicted it. But we thought, "Wow, maybe we're not going to experience that," because that very night, on November 25, we heard Minister Norm Sterling stand up in this Legislature—and one just needs to refer to page 3227 of Hansard—and say, "Let's pass this bill on second reading, put it out to committee and we will have public hearings."

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): Norm said that?

Mr Peters: Norm said that.

Mr Caplan: What happened?

Mr Peters: They introduced notice of motion number 80, and debate has been buried, it has been cremated, and I think it's a sad day for democracy in this province. This government continues to do this.

I think the citizens at home expect that when they send us to this Legislature every one of us would have an opportunity to fully debate a bill. It's incumbent on the government members to put forward their views and ideas and it's incumbent on Her Majesty's loyal opposition to point out those areas where bills could be improved, where bills that are flawed could be made better. One of the ways we can do that is, first, by having a thorough debate in this Legislature and, second, by allowing a piece of legislation to go out for public hearings after second reading. I read that the Minister of Transportation thought public hearings would be good for this bill, but obviously not. This government is just bound and determined to stifle debate.

We've heard the faults of this government. We heard yesterday the Provincial Auditor, Mr Peters, rip them apart for their mismanagement. We heard today my colleague Mr Gerry Phillips talk about the mismanagement of this government and the façade that they put forth. But I think, because debate is being stifled, the public doesn't always get all the information. It's incumbent on us and it's our opportunity as Her Majesty's loyal opposition to use the debate to ensure that the public is fully informed. I think the most damaging of initiatives, and there are many damaging initiatives, is that this government has added $21 billion to the debt of this province.

Mr Caplan: That doesn't include hydro.

Mr Peters: It doesn't include hydro, not at all. That's been—what?—$500 million or $700 million alone in the past year that has been added to hydro. What a terrible legacy to leave for future generations. What a terrible legacy to leave for the pages who are here in the House. What has happened is disgusting.

It is a shame with this legislation. We heard the minister talk of the consultations that took place in advance, but there wasn't unanimity coming out of the consultations, and that's often the case. The goal then is that out of the consultations, legislation is drafted and presented to us to be debated in the Legislature. Then it's incumbent on us to take that legislation out for public hearings. But that hasn't happened.

There are a lot of areas of concern in this bill, not only to myself but I would hope to all members of this Legislature, and I would hope to the public as well. There are a lot of positive things in this legislation. I can't stand here and say this a piece of legislation that should be sent to the crematorium, because it's not fully faulty. There are some areas, though, that need improvement and clarification. Hence, public hearings would have helped make this a better piece of legislation.

Some of the areas I'm concerned about are telemarketing and solicitation. We've got people in this province right now who read the obituaries on a daily basis, and while a family is right in the grieving process, they're receiving letters about monuments, in particular, and about other areas, things they should be looking at. Families shouldn't be harassed at that time.

Also, around the countryside you're seeing more and more signs being erected around cemeteries: "Call ABC Memorials." The government talks about what they're going to do to protect the consumer, but what they don't address with this legislation, and unfortunately with a lot of pieces of legislation that come before this Legislature, is the whole question of enforcement. You can draft the legislation and the regulations, but is the government going to be there to enforce the legislation?

Mr Caplan: It could have been done at committee.

Mr Peters: Exactly. That is something we could have worked on in committee, improving the legislation. That wasn't done. I think cemeteries themselves—this is a point I raised in the debate and I'm going to come back to it, under section 47 of this legislation. Section 47 talks about speculation, that one should not be going out and buying a funeral plot or a number of plots and then at some point down the road selling them at a profit. But this legislation in many ways contradicts itself, because you have thousands of cemetery plots across this province that have been purchased by families that to this day remain unused.

I sat on the St Thomas Cemetery board for 13 years. We have thousands of vacant plots in that cemetery. What this legislation is going to do is it is going to say to somebody who bought 10 plots 50 years ago at maybe $10 apiece that, wow, we can go into the cemetery and redeem these plots at market value. That's a huge burden on many of the faith-based and non-profit cemeteries in this province. Many of these cemeteries, like the St Thomas Cemetery, struggle on an annual basis to make ends meet. I have some real concern that this is going to be an additional financial burden to cemeteries.

There are many references through this legislation to fees. Again, fees may not be an issue for some of the larger cemeteries, but for small rural cemeteries, fees are already an issue. I had the Fingal cemetery contact my office expressing their concern over the fees that they are already being charged, but this government again is going to download fees to the local cemeteries.

I want to go to another aspect of this legislation that, again, had we gone to committee, I think we could have helped improve. One of my biggest beefs, and it has always troubled me, is the vandalism of cemeteries. That could be vandalism from the standpoint of knocking over monuments; it could be vandalism from the standpoint of defacing monuments with spray paint. It happens over and over again; it's an annual occurrence across this province.

Many of these monuments, once they're vandalized—if you look at an old white marble monument, when a white marble monument is split in half, you're not going to replace it—are next to impossible to put back the way they were. If a large granite monument is knocked over in a cemetery, the cemetery assumes the responsibility. If they don't catch the perpetrators, the cemetery assumes the responsibility for having to put a monument back in place.

I know we undertook an effort to start to restore monuments at the St Thomas cemetery, and I can tell you that you're looking at $500 to $1,000 apiece to restore monuments, again additional costs to the cemetery.

If we had gone to committee with this bill, we could have looked at sections 102 and 103, which talk about the prohibition of interfering with a cemetery. We could have put the boots to the goofs who are out there vandalizing cemeteries. We could have put some teeth in this legislation that would have helped a judge, when we catch these idiots, to really do something. We could have included in this legislation some hefty fines so that we would be working to discourage these individuals from undertaking vandalism or defacing monuments. But we're not going to have that opportunity, because the government again shuts down debate. Debate is shut down. Again and again we see this, that debate has been shut down in this province, and it's really, really sad.

There are other aspects of this bill that I think we need to be concerned with. Maybe this is not an issue all across the province, but it's an issue that is out there. I have to chuckle at the minister and the ministry, who talked about the rise of unregulated visitation centres across this province. Why weren't you out there enforcing it? Why weren't you out there saying that we're not going to allow visitation centres? Why weren't you going to be out there enforcing to make sure those things didn't happen? Is it because you drastically cut back the number of staff in the cemeteries branch, that there's really nobody within the cemeteries branch other than the registrar and some clerical staff?

We don't have the people on the ground enforcing the Cemeteries Act like we used to have. I can recall my days on the cemetery board, where we had an individual in London that we could call if we had an issue dealing with the cemetery. That doesn't exist any more. So how are you going to put legislation in place, in many ways toothless legislation, but not have the enforcement mechanism in place? We haven't heard that addressed by the minister to date.

I'm very concerned about this legislation and this move toward one-stop shopping, where a cemetery is going to be in the business of providing all the burial services, selling the cemetery plot, selling the casket, selling the memorial, probably selling the flowers too. You are seriously jeopardizing those individuals who've invested substantial money in providing funeral services in this province. You're jeopardizing that, and you're heading down the road to creating monopolies. This legislation could have been better, and it would have been best had we gone to public hearings and not shut down the debate.

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I'm not going to say it's a pleasure for me to participate in the debate.

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): It's always a pleasure to hear you, Shelley.

Ms Martel: It's becoming routine to participate in a time allocation debate on a Wednesday afternoon. My colleague Mr Martin is quite right—I say this to Mr Beaubien, who is here—that there are three things you can count on now: death, taxes and a Wednesday afternoon time allocation motion. We are going to speak about two today.

Mr Beaubien: In which order?

Ms Martel: Let me deal with the time allocation first. The sad fact of the matter is that, with a little bit of committee, we could probably clear up all of the outstanding issues. I say to the government, you have some concerns from stakeholders. I'm going to read them into the record during the course of the time that I have. But I think the government and those stakeholders who have concerns right now aren't very far apart. I bet you in an afternoon we could have those folks in, we could have some public hearings and the government could move the amendments so that those folks would be onside. I think it would be that easy. So I don't understand why the government isn't just prepared to go that extra step and get it done and be able to stand before the House recesses sometime next week—because I think we are due to recess sometime next week—and be able to say we responded successfully, positively to the outstanding concerns that were still out there in those communities that have a very direct interest in this.

I think the government would want to do that. I mean, why wouldn't you? If the government proceeds in the way that it intends, in the way that's outlined in the time allocation motion, what is clear is that there aren't going to be any public hearings, there isn't going to be any time for that kind of interaction with the stakeholder groups, there isn't going to be any time for amendments and there isn't going to be any time to fix some of what I think are very small and minor problems that the government could easily address.

I know that often there are bills that come through here and we are diametrically opposed to them—most of the bills that come from this side, this Conservative government, we as New Democrats are very much opposed to. What's interesting is that I think you have a bill where, in truth, there has been a fair bit of work done, there have been stakeholder groups that have been part of a consultation process, and we have a bill that we could probably clearly agree with and so could the public if the government would just do that one additional thing. I don't think it would cost the government much. I think there would be agreement to have some very short hearings, bringing in the groups that have contacted not only us but the government with their concerns and with their proposed changes. The government could move the amendments to clear up the situation. They could have a bill that at the end of the day would have wide stakeholder support. I think what they are going to end up with is a bill where there will be lingering, ongoing concerns that are legitimate concerns that have been raised with the government. The government will then be accused of having ignored the concerns that came in from the stakeholders, which I'm going to read.

Hon Mr Hudak: Which concerns?

Ms Martel: I'm glad the member asked, "Which concerns?" I have three letters here. I'm going to read the concerns into the record. I'm assuming the minister has heard about these concerns, because a number of the folks actually say they met with the minister and reiterated these concerns with him, but just in case he hasn't, and for the public record, I'm going to read those into the record. Then hopefully someone from the government side is going to be able to tell me why it is that we're moving a time allocation motion today so that we can't deal with the legitimate concerns that have been raised.

The first concern is coming from the Ontario Provincial Synod, the Anglican Church of Canada. The representative who contacted us is Rev Harry Huskins, whom I know quite well, whom my colleague from Sault Ste Marie knows quite well, whom the minister would know, because, as he says in his letter, there were a number of members of faith communities who "met with the minister and his senior policy advisors" on November 20, a Wednesday morning, "before he introduced the bill later that day....

"We told the minister that we supported the intention in the bill of furthering consumer protection, but have concerns about the board of a new authority making decisions that would have inadvertent consequences for religious communities."

Here are the consequences: "the imposition of new charges, fees or levies for our small congregations, mosques, synagogues and parishes; the imposition of new administrative burdens or personnel qualification requirements on the volunteers who are now doing the paperwork in these small places; and any provision which would lead to new property taxation."

The letter goes on:

"On the question of costs, whether they be new taxation or as a result of the need for a self-financing authority to raise revenue, we fear"—that's the faith communities—"that the result will be that many of our small operations which barely make their budget from year to year will feel themselves forced to use the abandonment provision and transfer their cemeteries to the local municipality."

Hon Mr Hudak: No.

Ms Martel: I hear the minister saying no. I think I heard him say no. I don't know why he's saying no and it won't happen. Harry Huskins, I've got to tell you, is not a partisan individual by any stretch of the imagination. He's not. This wasn't just his point of view being put forward. The letter makes it clear that this was the perspective put forward to the minister in a meeting involving a number of faith communities. So it's not just him.

Let me go on:

"Over the years local volunteers have and continue to put hundreds of thousands of volunteer hours and dollars into these small cemeteries. Abandonment would mean that this work would now have to be done by paid municipal employees along with the administrative work required. We do not believe that any marginal increase in tax revenues could offset these costs nor that the good of the local community would be furthered by this."

I think he's right.

"The minister"—he can tell us if this is true or not—"seemed receptive to the idea that the use of an exemption threshold would prevent these problems. It is a mechanism that works successfully in similar contexts. We are suggesting that any cemetery having less than 100 burials a year be exempted from any new charges or administrative burdens such as the licensing and examination of the volunteers who are now doing this work well."

The letter says the minister seemed to be receptive.

"It is my impression, from the meeting, that the exemption threshold has been accepted as a sensible solution to the problem, but that there will be pressure from other sectors to set this substantially lower. We feel that a lower threshold would defeat the whole purpose of using this mechanism."

The second point:

"On the question of governance, it is my impression that the minister understood the need for some ongoing form of consultation with the faith communities on matters the authority would be dealing with. We would prefer that the sectorization of the board we have suggested be put into place. I think the minister would prefer to use a faith communities advisory committee with at least the chair of the committee sitting on the board."

I thought those were two reasonable suggestions. They gather that you were amenable to that too, but I don't think the changes have come forward. The problem is, with your time allocation motion, there's no opportunity for these sensible solutions to come forward. There isn't, right? So why don't you do the easy, quick and sensible thing? Have some committee, have some amendments, put the amendments and resolve these concerns. I don't think these are outrageous requests. They are far from being outrageous requests, and they represent the requests not just of one particular faith but of the many faith communities that met with the minister on November 20.

I say to the minister, do yourself a favour; make these people happy. It's going to be easy to make them happy—reasonable requests. Have some committee time, bring in some amendments, get it done.

Let me deal with the next group. This is a group of people, the next one—Mr Martin, you'll agree with this—that are big supporters of the government. You would think they would want to do something to respond to their concerns. This is a letter we have from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Minister, they're more likely to be your friends than mine. They wrote you a letter September 20:

"Dear Minister Hudak:"

They say in the first paragraph that they "appreciated the opportunity to participate over the last 19 months in the Bereavement Sector Advisory Committee...."

"As you will know, CFIB has advocated consistently in support of a framework that will enhance fair competition in the industry, including the choice of independent service providers and open, honest communications from all players. This is the best method of ensuring protection for consumers when they are coping with the loss of a loved one and are at their most vulnerable."

This is the key: "We have reviewed the draft legislation, with the benefit of attending MCBS's final technical briefing on August 30, 2002. Our reading of the legislation is that there are areas where it does not respect the agreement of principles put forth by the" committee "to your predecessor on November 23, 2001. As a consequence, we are worried that the future viability of independent operations in the bereavement sector will be threatened, ultimately putting consumers at risk." This is their letter to you.

Hon Mr Hudak: How come you're reading that one? The other one was better.

Ms Martel: I'm not done yet.

"CFIB is concerned about the following deficiencies in the final product." Five points; stay with me.

"1. Lack of 'level playing field' on taxes—while private sector funeral homes, monument builders, transfer operators, and retailers are subject to the full range of taxes levied by governments, municipal cemeterians engaging in these businesses are not."

Minister, don't leave. You want to hear what your friends at CFIB are telling you. Come on.

"The proposed 'payment in lieu' of property taxes ... is to be returned dollar for dollar to the municipal cemeteries, ostensibly for 'care and maintenance'—this without any accounting for the disposition of the money.

"2. Restrictive practices—cemeteries may continue to use bylaws and other practices akin to tied selling to shut out competition (eg, cemetery bylaw conferring exclusive right to install foundations, restriction of information available to monument builders concerning recent burials etc) and other techniques (eg, so-called 'free' courtesy markers tied to the subsequent purchase of a monument) in order to grab business.

"3. Municipalities using their local government power to serve their own commercial interests—municipal 'land-use planning' powers permit cemetery expansion (including expropriation), approval of crematoria, approval of funeral homes etc. This a clear conflict when the local government can arrange things to serve their commercial interests in competitive businesses.

"4. Operators of existing 'visitation centres' on cemetery property and existing crematoria are being rewarded through a 'grandfathering' arrangement...."

This is what they say. This is their letter of September 20, 2002—look here—from Melanie Currie, policy analyst, Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

Hon Mr Hudak: Melanie is wrong.

Ms Martel: Melanie has it wrong. Melanie, I hope you're watching. The minister says you have it wrong. I hope this will generate another letter to you, Minister.

"4. ....So-called visitation centres operating as unregulated funeral sites confer an ongoing benefit to those who chose to break the rules. Crematoria will also be granted a continued five-year reprieve from taxes, a clear advantage over any new business proposed."

"5. Consumer protection through information. It is imperative that consumers be made aware of their rights and interment options regardless of the point of entry.

"We hope and trust that these matters are addressed in the legislation, regulations, and policy."

Those are their concerns. Minister, look. Get it to committee. Your friends—because really, they're more your friends than mine. It's true. Your friends are going to come in and you can address their concerns. Why don't you want to do that? It would be so easy; it would be so simple. It would be done. Right? You could say to them, "We listened to your concerns; we agree the principles have been agreed to."

Mr Beaubien: How many more have you got?

Ms Martel: One more. I've got one more. Do it for your friends, if no one else.

Now, Minister, here's the last one. This was an Alert that was sent out November 21, 2002, from the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. Here we go. This was an advisory to all their members:

"On November 23, 2001, Bereavement Sector Advisory committee ... submitted its report to the Minister of Consumer and Business Services. The report offered a number of recommendations aimed at meeting the minister's objectives, claiming it had broad consensus from committee members. However"—this is the key point, Minister—"municipal representatives on the committee have indicated that a broad consensus does not exist and a number of recommendations have the potential to negatively impact municipalities."

This is not what I'm saying. This is a copy of Alert, dated November 21, 2002, sent from the Association of Municipalities of Ontario to all its members.

It says, again, that "municipal representatives on the committee have indicated that a broad consensus does not exist and a number of recommendations have the potential to negatively impact municipalities."

What are they? Let me read them into the record: "For instance, the recommendations to establish municipalities as the social safety net for cemeteries; failure to guarantee municipalities the necessary financial tools to meet the financial liabilities of abandoned cemeteries; creates an uneven playing field in favour of the other industry participants; forces municipalities to tax themselves and redirect the funds to a bereavement fund instead of municipal revenues; create tax incentives for the creation of additional cemeteries, which will increase the potential number of abandoned cemeteries; and create market conditions that are unfavourable to consumers."

"AMO met with the ministry in late October and expressed municipal concerns with some of the proposed directions. Ministry staff"—

Hon Mr Hudak: They met me too.

Ms Martel: They don't say that yet. Oh, here it is: "After meeting with the minister...." I'm getting there.

"Ministry staff indicated that it would be unlikely that all municipal concerns would be addressed and that municipalities should remain part of the process to protect the proposed changes or risk keeping the 'status quo' in place." That's a bit of a gun to your head, that little sentiment there, I thought. "Discussions with municipal cemetery operators revealed that keeping 'status quo' was more favourable to municipalities than implementing the proposed changes in the BSAC report." I repeat, "Discussions with municipal cemetery operators revealed that keeping 'status quo' was more favourable."

"After meeting with the minister and by letter of November 12, 2002, to the Minister of Consumer and Business Services, AMO reiterated municipal opposition on the matter of allowing a single regulatory body among other matters. AMO also requested to continue working with the province to address issues of taxation of crematoriums, visitation centres, funeral homes and the establishment of mandatory care and maintenance funds for cemeteries, scattering grounds and columbariums."

At the bottom, under the title "Action," "Second reading is expected next week." Bear in mind this was sent out November 21. "AMO will be requesting changes to Bill 209 based on the issues that have been advanced to the ministry on previous occasions." I repeat, "AMO will be requesting changes to Bill 209 based on the issues that have" already been announced.

AMO, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the faith communities aren't going to see any changes, because the government today brings a time allocation motion that effectively shuts down debate, shuts down committee hearings and shuts down the potential for amendments that would resolve many of those concerns.

I don't understand why the government is doing that. Clearly, there's been a lot of work done. Clearly, with a little bit more work, I think that the government can resolve these problems, that there can be some agreement and that the government could come forward and say, "We have unanimity. We have a consensus. We have our stakeholders who are pleased to be supportive of this bill."

As I conclude, I say to the minister, there you go. There are some of the concerns. They're now on the public record. As this bill goes through without any changes, those are things you'll have to deal with.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): Although I'm glad to be speaking, I'm also saddened to stand up again and speak to another motion by this government to shut down debate. It's another closure motion, which basically means that the people of Ontario, who have had little opportunity, with no public hearings, no changes to this bill—they're closing down debate. This government has closed off more debate by closure motions and by what they call time allocation than any government in the history of this province. With almost every bill, there is no allowance for public hearings or any kind of input. They just ram this through like they've rammed everything else through.

We know now why they like these closure motions. Because they don't want the public to know what they're doing. They don't want to hear from ordinary people who may be concerned about the high cost of dying in this province. In the city of Toronto, never mind owning a home or renting a home—the cost of finding a place for your loved one is exorbitant. You basically are captive to these big funeral operators—not so much the funeral operators; I should say the owners of these cemeteries that are charging anywhere from $7,000 to $25,000 for a plot. I don't know how many seniors can really make a choice or how many families can make a choice at that time, when you need all the support you can get and you have to come up with this money, not only for the plot but also for the funeral service.

So it is a very expensive thing that you have to face. You have no choice. It's a captive audience. I really wonder, if they happen to live in the city of Toronto where there is limited real estate for cemetery use, where poor people can go, where they can be buried. I see no protection in this legislation for those who don't have the money to be buried in Mount Pleasant, who can't afford that kind of money. Where do they go? What protections are there to get some kind of decent burial at an affordable price? That's not in the bill. I don't see it.

I would think that for a consumer minister there would be something in here that would allow for a reasonably priced burial that wasn't escalating like the price of real estate is in Toronto. I'm not sure if it's the same in other parts, I guess in rural Ontario there may be more affordable spaces, but if your family is in a city like Toronto you want to be, hopefully, buried there so that they could visit and pay their respects. That is almost becoming a pipe dream in cities like Toronto. You can't even be buried in the town you worked in, the place where you raised your family. You can't even afford, as I said, to have this last bit of respect for your loved one.

It is really getting totally out of control. That's why I thought in this bill there is an opportunity as we're updating the funeral act. I can see there was something the minister had to do, but the big gap I see in it is the fact that there is very little protection. I really don't know what to tell people. Where do they go? If you live in Toronto, you can't afford to get a decent place to be buried. It's strange enough that you have to have a mortgage on your house for your whole life; then you have to get a mortgage on your children when you die. That's what people are being subjected to. This seems to be something the government doesn't want to provide for or look after. I don't really know that there is something in this bill that would at least say to people, "We're going to look into that and see if we can get some affordable places to be buried." I know it's something we don't like to talk about, but that's certainly one of the striking things that I saw in terms of this Bill 209.

I would hope that one of these days we'll come to grips with that. Seniors all over this province are very worried about what is happening. They're getting caught back on their pensions, their nursing home fees have gone up 15%, they're having a hard time paying hydro bills, and then they have this looming black cloud, wondering whether they can afford to be buried in the community where they lived. So there are many, many pressures on seniors.

I noticed in the Provincial Auditor's report, which was a damning condemnation of this government, nursing homes. There was a lady on CBC Radio this morning, a former nurse, who said that her mother was given only one bath a week and that there was no nursing care; it was a nursing attendant. The Provincial Auditor said that the place they inspected had no licences. Can you imagine? If you have a restaurant, or an ordinary store and you're selling shoes, you have to have a licence. You've got nursing homes all over this province without licences. So seniors at every turn are the forgotten ones in Ontario. This is an independent person who at least came to bat for seniors and nursing homes, Erik Peters, the Provincial Auditor, who this government is trying to slam and condemn because he had the guts and the integrity to tell the truth about this government that spent $676 million. Imagine how many seniors you could help to live out their last years with respect with the $676 million they gave to high-priced consultants who got blank-cheque contracts. For those people there's money. To help seniors who are looking for an affordable place to die or an affordable place to live in a nursing home or seniors' housing, there's never any money. For consultants, $2,600 a day—how much is that a year? Millions.

You're paying these consultants a million dollars. To do what? Who on God's earth should get $2,600 a day? And they even get it without tendered contracts. It's just given; it's a gift. That's the type of thing that makes seniors very upset when they're crying for a little bit of care in a nursing home, asking for an extra bath a week and saying, "Why do you have to increase my nursing home costs by 15%? You tell me you have no money for nursing homes, yet you've got money for consultants"—$676 million given out by this government. That is incredible. It is an abuse like we've never seen.

In the history of this province there has never been a government that spent 676 million taxpayers' dollars on blank-cheque contracts for their consultant friends. I cannot understand why a government that claims to be looking after people is really looking after their high-priced friends when it comes down to it, according to the Provincial Auditor. That's who they're looking after. No wonder people are angry and frustrated and cynical about government. If they pick up the auditor's report and then look at this bill before us that's about to be closed down for debate, they'll know why you want to close down debate all the time. They don't want you to know out there in Ontario that they are spending 676 million of your dollars for these high-priced consultants, who are doing what with that money?

The government will not give us their names. They won't release the untendered contracts. They're trying to hide that from you, because they don't want you to know how they spent your $676 million on their friends' contracts so they can spin or advise—who knows what they do for all that money? What does a person do to deserve $2,600 a day? That is the question the ministers and Premier Eves can't answer. They try to defend this as something about doing business—"Oh yeah, we fired people." Well, they fire them, and then they bring them back as consultants and pay them twice as much.

No wonder there's no money to help seniors live in dignity in the last years of their lives so they don't have to go begging and don't have to go into debt. Instead, what they get from this government is, "Seniors have to tighten their belts. Seniors have to walk three miles to get oil on sale, or something." But their consultant friends get limos and expense accounts plus $2,600 a day. Could you imagine what a senior could do on $2,600 a month? But this government doesn't care about hard-working seniors who have paid taxes, sacrificed, saved, built this province with their sweat, bare hands and toil. They get no consideration.

That's why, when you see this bill before us that talks about respecting funerals, burials and cremations, as I said, there's no consideration of the fact that a lot of seniors get to the point at the end of their life where they're worried about who's going to pay for a place to be decently buried, who's going to pay for a proper funeral. All these things worry them sick. That's the kind of real gut things that go on in this province. But the only gut this government is worried about is feeding their fat friends who are getting $676 million in untendered contracts for consulting. If that isn't a disgraceful thing for this government to do, or any government to do—we've never, ever seen a justification for that. Every day in this House they are going to try to justify these fat contracts for their fat friends. They are going to say they deserve $2,600 a day. What kind of advice is worth $2,600 a day, especially in light of the fact that they've got a civil servant they just fired who was doing the same work for an amount of maybe $20 an hour or $10 an hour? No; they've got to bring in a consultant who gets paid $2,600 a day.

This is not the opposition saying it; this is the Provincial Auditor. It's probably the most damning Provincial Auditor's report in recent history. It slammed this government, department after department, where there's systemic abuse of taxpayers' dollars: systemic abuse, not just one ministry. Ministry after ministry is basically giving out contracts. It's like writing a cheque to anyone who asks for it to do this consulting work. It is an incredible abuse, especially when, as I said, we've got seniors who are wondering if they are going to have enough money at the end of the month to be able to pay for their food, to pay the hydro bill, never mind—they don't even buy clothes any more.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): On a point of order, Mr Speaker, I seek unanimous consent for the following:

That consideration of government notice of motion number 80 be suspended; and

That the House will resolve into committee of the whole House for the purpose of clause-by-clause consideration of Bill 198, notwithstanding the order of the House dated November 21, 2002; and

That the Chair of the committee of the whole House shall immediately put every question necessary to dispose of the clause-by-clause stage of the bill without debate or amendment, except that each party may speak for five minutes on part XXV. All questions shall be decided by voice vote, with no recorded divisions pursuant to standing order 29; and

That, when the committee of the whole House reports Bill 198 back to the House, the Speaker shall put the question for adoption of the report of the committee of the whole House without debate or amendment, and at such time all of the terms and conditions of the order of the House dated November 21, 2002, shall apply and the order for second reading of Bill 198 may be called today; and

That, at the conclusion of this process, the House shall resume consideration of government notice of motion number 80, and the time then remaining to 5:50 pm shall be used proportionately.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Stockwell has asked for unanimous consent. Agreed? Agreed.

House in committee of the whole.

KEEPING THE PROMISE FOR A STRONG ECONOMY ACT (BUDGET MEASURES), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE RESPECT DE L'ENGAGEMENT D'ASSURER UNE ÉCONOMIE SAINE (MESURES BUDGÉTAIRES)

Consideration of Bill 198, An Act to implement Budget measures and other initiatives of the Government / Projet de loi 198, Loi mettant en oeuvre certaines mesures budgétaires et d'autres initiatives du gouvernement.

The First Deputy Chair (Mr Michael A. Brown): I am now required to put all the questions related to this bill.

Shall parts I through XXIV carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Parts I through XXIV are carried.

On part XXV, we've agreed to five minutes of debate from each of the three parties.

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): What we are doing is amending a government budget bill, and what we're doing is what Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party have been calling for for the last month: repealing the pension sections of this budget bill to treat working people in this province fairly.
